Mr. VAN ZANDT. That may be true, but since all these protections affect the pay of the selectees in the form of a deduction, I can visualize the selectee being financially embarrassed on the 1st of each month. In other words, the folks back home will have to return a portion of the allotment if the selectee is to have any spending money.

Mr. MAY. There is no compulsion about deductions, as I have stated.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. What are you going to do if these boys are in Dakar or Singapore?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Get them back to the United States, where they belong.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' CIVIL RELIEF ACT OF 1940

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 4270) to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard, strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and substitute the provisions of House bill 10338, to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the Senate bill was dispensed with.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the provisions of H. R. 10338.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent, a similar House bill (H. R. 10338) was laid on the table.

MAINLAND CANE-SUGAR BENEFITS

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 225, relating to the conditions for payment with respect to sugarcane harvested from certain plantings in the mainland cane-sugar area.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is my understanding that under this bill, if the production from 1940 crop acreage will not exceed the estimated production of the 1940 proportionate share acreage of 505,000 tons, that mainland cane producers may harvest the excess acreage without loss of benefit payments on the complete proportionate share acreage.

In other words, it will allow them, including Florida growers, based on that figure, to market the sugar from the cane which was planted prior to January 1, 1940.

Mr. FULMER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska to answer.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I may say to the gentleman from Florida that his statement is correct. That is one of the purposes of the bill.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. In view of that announcement and the information which has been given to me by the Department after a series of conferences, while I do not believe this is a solution of the sugar problem, I will not object.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, in view of that announcement to the effect that Florida will be allowed to market sugar from the cane that was planted prior to January 1, 1940, which information has been given to me by the able members of the Committee on Agriculture of the House that have handled this matter, as well as by the Chief of the Sugar Division of the Department of Agriculture, I will not object, however, I feel that this is not a solution of the sugar problem. I shall continue to oppose the extension of the present quota system and continue to fight for an unlimited domestic quota. The allowing of growers who have cane already planted so as not to destroy the existing crop is desirable; yet, it is likewise of great importance to my State and to the national economy general, and particularly in a critical time like this, to the consumer of the Nation, that the many hundreds of persons who have lands capable of raising sugar in continental United States be allowed to furnish this food for our people; and, the world situation is such that we may be faced with food shortage, and ships used to transport sugar may be used to transport other things. We have not entirely forgotten the sugar condition in the World War period.

The curtailment of the right to produce an essential food product where there is not a surplus in this country is basically wrong. The consumers are paying above the world market, our growers are pleading for an opportunity to produce and employ American labor. I have yielded because I dislike to object to anything my good colleagues are vitally interested in. It might help them and does not particularly hurt my people and, in this instance, will help a few of my people. I know of the intense interest of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, Senator ELLENDER, and my colleagues in the House, and the Senator has been very helpful to Florida on some of her problems and I have not objected because I do not want to imperil his bill, but I do not want my failure to object to be construed as giving approval to a continuation of the present quota system, and if that bill comes back before the House, I intend to fight against it, and I give warning that I intend to fight for our producer, our laborer, and our consumer. This bill covers a different situation which helps Louisiana and helps some of the present growers in Florida.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. HOLMES. I shall be pleased to withhold my objection to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Would the gentleman indicate what provision in the bill he objects to? I would remind the gentleman that this bill passed the Senate unanimously and that there was no objection on the part of any member of the House Committee on Agriculture. It pertains particularly to the situation in Louisiana.

Mr. HOLMES. And Florida.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. And Florida; but Florida has withdrawn her objection.

Mr. HOLMES. I may say to the gentleman from Nebraska that I have been very much interested in sugar legislation for 10 years. Throughout those years we have been trying to get acreage developed in both Florida and Louisiana so they could raise more sugar in continental United States, but here in the United States we are paying them not to raise sugar. You are importing millions and millions of tons of sugar, keeping people in these States from developing their own natural resources, depriving them of the right of developing their own land. I must object.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield further, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. HOLMES. Certainly.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Let me point out that this bill is designed primarily for the benefit of the Louisiana growers. It was introduced by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER]. It has passed the Senate. The bill makes it possible for the Louisiana and Florida growers to market their 1940 crop of sugarcane planted prior to January 1, 1940, and receive benefit payments.

Mr. HOLMES. The Sugar Act of 1937 set definite quotas for Florida and Louisiana and provided penalties for producing over these quotas.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. There is nothing pertaining to quota in this bill.

Mr. HOLMES. But it does that in substance.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. This bill simply makes it in order that these payments may be made to those growers.

Mr. HOLMES. Of course, the purpose of the bill is to keep them out of production, and I object.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. If they have planted in excess of their acres.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMENDMENTS TO SECTIONS 3477 AND 3737 OF THE REVISED STATUTES

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I renew my unanimous-consent request to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 10464, to assist in the national-defense program by amending sections 3477 and 3737 of the Revised Statutes, to permit the assignment of claims under public contract, with Senate amendments thereto, and to concur in the Senate amendments with the exception of Senate amendment No. 5.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

Page 1, line 10, strike out "$3,000" and insert "$1,000."

Page 2, line 4, strike out "this act" and insert "the Assignment of Claims Act of 1940."

"Any contract entered into by the War Department or the Navy Department may provide that payments to an assignee of such contract shall not be subject to reduction or set-off, and if so provided such payments shall not be subject to reduction or set-off, for any indebtedness of the assignor to the United States arising independently of the contract designated in the assignment."

"SEC. 2. This act may be cited as the 'Assignment of Claims Act of 1940.'"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have given this bill some study since we discussed it a few minutes ago and much to my surprise I find it does not accomplish what we thought was the purpose of the bill when it was passed last week; but at least this bill is a step in the right direction, although I am disappointed that we misunderstood the purpose of the bill in the original instance. However, I am not going to object to this action today, but I hope the Committee on the Judiciary before this session closes will bring out a bill which will authorize the pledging of Government contracts for the purpose of establishing credit to our small industries so that they can afford to take these defense contracts.

I think I understand the distinctions which have been drawn between this bill and what I understood to be the purpose of the original bill, and I do not see any harm in the bill, because it is innocuous. It will do absolutely no good whatsoever and will not accomplish the purpose we sought to accomplish when the original bill was passed.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman cannot see any harm in the bill and if he cannot see any good in the bill, why go to the expense of passing the bill and incurring the additional printing expense?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Because there is a provision in the bill that an industry may take a claim against the Government to a bank. Now banks are not lending on that kind of security. But if any bank will accept this claim there might be some help to local industries in the bill. That is why I say it is harmless. I cannot conceive of any bank giving the relief which they claim under this bill. That is why I say it is innocuous. It is harmless and I have no objection to it, but I am disappointed and I think the people of the Nation should know, regardless of newspaper and editorial comment to the contrary notwithstanding, that this bill does not authorize the pledging of Government defense contracts for loans to private enterprise for the purpose of helping finance the defense program.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Then there may be a little good in the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. There may be a little good in the bill; yes.

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] a question. What is the gentleman's opinion as to the possibility of these claims being assigned before complete performance of the contract?

Mr. HOBBS. That is the very purpose of the bill. We had before our subcommittee at the time of the hearings all of the representatives of banks who cared to come; the small banks, the little businessmen, the big businessmen, and all those who were interested in this financing. We know that this is the only chance, because both the War Department and the Navy Department protested most vehemently against permitting assignment of these contracts. They said that these contracts are for the production of munitions of war and should not be hawked around in the marts of finance so that the secrets of the Army or Navy might become public property.

They said, "We will cooperate with the banks, trust companies, and other financial institutions as well as with American business; we welcome a law that will permit the financing of all our contractors; but there are some things we cannot allow to become public." Please let me say to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan that we are all in accord. We are seeking to do exactly what he wants done, and we believe we have done it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. We might all be in accord with what we want to do, but surely we can agree that we are not doing it under this bill.

Mr. HOBBS. I disagree with the gentleman. I think we have.

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. The gentleman understands that a claim means the right as the result of performance?

Mr. HOBBS. No; not necessarily. It means a right accruing to any contractor under and by virtue of a contract which he has been awarded by the Government of the United States, whether it has been performed even partially or not.

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. Then, the gentleman's contention is that even though there has been no performance under the contract the claim may be assigned as collateral for a loan?

Mr. HOBBS. Certainly.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield with pleasure to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It is not possible for me to understand the contention of the distinguished gentleman from Michigan that this bill will do no good. It is obivous that the bill will accomplish the purposes it is intended to accomplish. If I correctly understand the gentleman from Michigan, the only possible objection to the bill from the standpoint of its feasibility is that discretion is vested in the War and Navy Departments to obstruct the assignment of these claims because the War and Navy Departments feel under certain circumstances, as the distinguished gentleman from Alabama has pointed out, that it would be inimical to the interests of the Government for the contract to be assigned.

In those instances it is a case of preserving the secrecy of the munition or whatever it is being manufactured, and that discretion is vested with the Department, but it does not prevent the Department from permitting the assignment of claims on contracts in instances where no secret process is involved. In such instances the right of assignment is clear and unrestricted.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman that I do not know of any bank in the United States which is taking chances with its depositors' money on choses in action.

Mr. HOBBS. Nor will any bank in the United States take any risk on making a loan under the terms of this bill. The assignments permitted by the bill we are talking about will be good security; they can be safely accepted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, all Senate amendments except Senate amendment No. 5 will be concurred in.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in Senate amendment No. 5 with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOBBS moves to concur in Senate amendment No. 5 with an amendment to read as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in Senate amendment No. 5 insert the following:

"Any contract entered into by the War Department or the Navy Department may provide that payments to an assignee of the claim arising under such contract shall not be subject to reduction or set-off, and if it is so provided in such contract, such payment shall not be subject to reduction or set-off for any indebtedness of the assignor to the United States arising independently of such contract."

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ACCOUNTS OF THE TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 844) to simplify the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States, and for other purposes, for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not sense any objection to the bill, but I wish the gentleman for the purpose of the RECORD would explain briefly what the bill is about.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. There is no money at all involved in this bill. It is simply a matter of bookkeeping in the Treasury Department. Under the old law, authorizing the issue of national bank notes and Federal Reserve bank notes the banks were required to pay into the Treasury a reserve fund equal to 5 percent of the amount of the notes issued to redeem those notes. Out of this 5-percent reserve there was a fund set up to pay the incidental expenses of redeeming them. All of those notes have been called. The funds are in the Treasury with which to redeem them. There are still some of them outstanding. Some of them will never be presented. No doubt many of them are lost or have been misplaced or destroyed. There has been created, as I say, in the Treasury a fund of $216,000, with which to pay the incidental expenses of redeeming them. This amount has been charged against the 5-percent redemption fund and has been paid by the banks into the Treasury. That is in a separate fund. The purpose of this bill is to turn that money into the general fund of the Treasury and hereafter pay the expenses of redeeming the bonds out of general appropriations to the Treasury, simply doing away with that incidental fund and the bookkeeping in connection therewith.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That after the reimbursement to the Treasury from funds derived from assessments made pursuant to section 8 of the act of July 12, 1882, 22 Stat. 164, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 177), of all costs lawfully charged thereto for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the balance of such funds shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts; and thereafter the cost of transporting and redeeming such outstanding national bank notes and Federal Reserve bank notes as may be presented to the Treasurer of the United States for redemption shall be paid from the regular annual appropriations for the Treasury Department.

With the following committee amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT AND OTHER RETIREMENT ACTS

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8621) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act and other retirement acts, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

"SEC. 97. Computation of accredited Service: Subject to the provisions of section 98 of this title, the."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain this bill?

Mr. RAMSPECK. This bill passed the House on the Consent Calendar. When it passed I offered an amendment which had in it a typographical error. The Senate has corrected the typographical error and passed the bill by unanimous consent.

Mr. MICHENER. That is all there is to it?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It is simply a technical amendment to correct the text.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MAINLAND CANE-SUGAR BENEFITS

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts having agreed to withdraw his objection, I now renew my request for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 225) relating to the conditions for payment with respect to sugarcane harvested from certain plantings in the mainland cane-sugar area.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. NORRELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is there anything in this bill respecting the reciprocal-trade agreements, especially the one with Cuba on sugar?

Mr. FULMER. I may say to the gentleman there is nothing whatever in this joint resolution that would affect it.

Mr. ANGELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD on the bill under consideration, and to include therein a short resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, it is conceded that the most critical problem confronting us as a nation today, outside of our preparedness program, is to provide employment for the 9,600,000 men and women who have been unable to find work. This condition has existed for 10 years, until it is becoming chronic. While it may be difficult to find a full solution to this problem, it must be conceded that an approach to it is fostering all of our enterprises which will give jobs to the unemployed in private industry at American wage scales.

There is one very thriving industry in the Northwest which will help to bring money out of hiding and put men to work. I refer to the sugar-beet industry. Many of our people in the Northwest have large investments in the sugar-beet industry. It has come to be one of major importance in our communities, and particularly is this true in my own State of Oregon. Our refinery at Nyssa has a 112-day record of producing 750,000 bags of sugar, and the refinery company has fed 8,000 head of cattle from beet pulp as a pulp-feeding demonstration. Growers in the Owyhee reclamation project produced 16.2 tons per acre on 17,000 acres last year, the highest production in the United States, save one area in northern California. The fly in the ointment, however, is that under the A. A. A. crop-control program, Oregon growers, as well as those in other districts of our sugar-beet-producing States, are not permitted to place this fertile land in production. The regulations even threaten to reduce our own acreage. This plan has added $1,000,000 to the assessed value of Oregon, and is a most striking instance of the manner in which we may, by proper Government legislation, bring capital out of hiding to seek investment in free enterprise, giving the unemployed jobs and merchants markets for their products.

The National Reclamation Association, at its ninth annual meeting recently held at Great Falls, Mont., at which 918 delegates from 23 Western States were in attendance, unanimously adopted a resolution urging the Congress to take action to permit the sugar-beet States to produce a larger percentage of nonsurplus sugar-beet crop. We should put into production these large areas of fertile lands in the West, so admirably adapted to the growing of sugar beets, so that we may give some relief to the unemployment situation in those States.

Mr. Speaker, I include as a part of my remarks, under the privilege granted by the House, a resolution adopted at the Great Falls meeting of the National Reclamation Association. It follows:

SUGAR-BEET EXPANSION

Whereas large areas of the West are dependent to a great extent on the maintenance and growth of the sugar-beet industry; and

Whereas the sugar-beet industry provides more field labor per acre unit than any other major crop produced and also provides more income for industrial labor in associated industries, such as railroads, coal mines, limerock quarries, and many manufacturing enterprises and is therefore far reaching in its possibilities; and

Whereas an orderly and sound expansion of beet plantings and processing as suitable land is developed is a reasonable and necessary condition precedent to the building up of this country and should be encouraged; and

Whereas American sugar-beet producers provide less than one-third of the requirements of our home market at the present time, but could and should be supplying a major portion of its requirements to the economic advantage of the Nation; and

Whereas our Government should adhere to the principles of American markets for American producers; and

Whereas the present all-time low net price of sugar is insufficient to maintain the industry on a profitable basis: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by this association that the Congress of the United States is urged to provide through proper legislation for the progressive, orderly expansion of the production of beet sugar within the United States and to maintain the beet-sugar industry on a reasonable income basis by quota regulations and adequate tariffs on foreign sugar; and be it

Further resolved, That the secretary be directed to send a copy of this resolution to the Secretaries of Agriculture, Interior, and State, and to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives of Western States in Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That no payment under the Sugar Act of 1937 with respect to the 1940 crop shall be withheld from any producer in the mainland cane-sugar area, because of the marketing (or processing) of sugarcane in excess of the proportionate share for the farm, if the acreage of sugarcane grown on the farm and marketed (or processed) for sugar in the crop year 1940 is not in excess of the acreage of sugarcane for sugar planted prior to January 1, 1940, but payments shall be made only with respect to the proportionate share acreage established for the farm under the provisions of such act, and the following deductions shall be made from such payments, on account of any acreage of sugarcane grown on the farm and marketed (or processed) for sugar in the crop year 1940 which is in excess of (1) 110 percent of the proportionate share for the farm, or (2) the proportionate share for the farm plus 25 acres, whichever is the greater; for so much of such excess as does not exceed 500 acres, a deduction of $10 per acre; for so much of such excess as exceeds 500 acres, a deduction of $20 per acre: Provided, That the foregoing provision shall be effective only if the Secretary determines that the actual production from the 1940 crop acreage shall not exceed the estimated production of the 1940 proportionate share acreage of 505,000 tons.

SEC. 2. The last clause of section 201 of the act approved September 1, 1937, is amended to read as follows: "and in order that the regulation of commerce provided by this act shall not result in excessive prices to consumers, the Secretary shall make such additional allowances as he may deem necessary in the amount of sugar determined to be needed to meet the requirements of consumers, so that the supply of sugar made available to consumers shall not result in average prices to consumers in excess of those necessary to maintain the domestic sugar industry as a whole. The amount of such additional allowances shall not be less than the amount required, after allowance for normal carry-over, to give consumers in the continental United States a per capita consumption equal to the average of the 2-year period 1937–38."

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the remarks I just made on the floor of the House a few brief letters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

THE LATE EDMUND PLATT

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, in the closing days of the Congress I want to pay a tribute to a predecessor of mine in the House of Representatives, who died during the last session of the Congress, the Honorable Edmund Platt. He served in the House from 1912 to 1920 and was a distinguished and able Member. Including our distinguished Speaker [Mr. RAYBURN], there are still some 20 Members of the House who knew him well and still appreciate his fine qualities and service in this body. He was chairman of the important Committee on Banking and Currency. He resigned from Congress to become vice governor of the Federal Reserve Board, where he served for 10 years. Since 1930 he was a vice president of the Marine Midland Bank in the city of New York.

Mr. Platt was born in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and came from a well-known Dutchess County family. He was an authority on Hudson River history, birds, and banking and monetary problems, and was for 40 years associated with the Poughkeepsie Eagle. For 13 years he was its editor. I got to know him and his charming wife and daughter well at Washington, as we lived on the same street. I had the highest regard for him personally and officially. He was a man of the finest character, lovable and able. My district has lost a true and loyal friend. He was a credit to it, a credit to the State of New York, and to the Federal Government.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last I submitted a unanimous-consent request to extend my remarks and include therein certain matter. This material exceeded the 2-page limit. I have an estimate from the Public Printer, and I now renew my request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. RABAUT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter I have received from Dr. Bernhardt.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROCKEFELLER], may extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short article from the Chatham Courier.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, during roll call No. 222, I was absent on important business. If I had been present I would have voted "yea" on that roll call; and during roll call No. 223, I was also absent on the same business and would have voted "nay" if I had been present for that roll call.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, this completes the business of the day, but there are some bills that may come over from the Senate which it would be desirable to send to conference and for that reason I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair, the bells to be rung 15 minutes before the House reconvenes.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us what the program for tomorrow is?

Mr. McCORMACK. The program for tomorrow will be pretty much the same as the program today. There is no definite program, but various bills may come up like the bills we have had up today and if there are any conference reports, they will be received.

Mr. MICHENER. If any conference reports are received today, will they not be printed today and disposed of tomorrow?

Mr. McCORMACK. As we are going to be in session on Monday, any conference reports would probably be disposed of at that time if they were controversial reports.

Mr. MICHENER. There was a rumor floating around in the thin air that we were going to dispose of the conference reports on the appropriation bills tomorrow. If that is so, some of us are very much interested in knowing about it. If they are not coming up tomorrow, of course, that might make a lot of difference.

Mr. McCORMACK. Those bills have not yet passed the Senate and the purpose of the recess is to appoint conferees on such bills. But even if the conferees agreed, they would not probably report until tomorrow and under the rules the reports would have to go over 24 hours.

The SPEAKER. Unless there was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman give us any information as to what the Congress may do in the next week or 10 days with respect to recessing or adjourning?

Mr. McCORMACK. A week or 10 days is a long time to speculate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understood we were going to dispose of most of the business this week and start taking 3-day recesses Monday.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, the gentleman knows more than I do in that respect.

Mr. WOLCOTT. As the gentleman from Michigan said, it is just a rumor and everything seems to be a rumor.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman does not act on rumors.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is a matter of personal interest to me because I told my wife I might be home over the week end. [Laughter.] I find now that the Consent Calendar will be called Monday regardless of whether we take 3-day recesses or not, and that is why I have asked the gentleman, in all seriousness, if he can give us some information about what the program may be for next week, and whether we were definitely going to take 3-day recesses or whether there would be a program that would keep us busy during the week.

Mr. McCORMACK. On Monday, of course, there is the Consent Calendar and whatever conference reports or other incidental matters that may come up. Outside of that I cannot give the gentleman any information. I wish I were in a position where I could do so, and the gentleman himself may be of invaluable assistance in connection with the main matter that the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I want to be of every possible assistance to the majority leader, and we on this side of the aisle also, in working out this program for the balance of the year. If the gentleman will suggest to us how we can be of any help to him in making up the majority's mind as to what they are going to do, I am sure we will cooperate.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is anxious to obtain information either about adjournment or recess, is he not?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not anticipate that the Congress is going to adjourn or take any lengthy recess. I merely wanted to know whether we would start our 3-day recesses Monday. I do not anticipate we are going to adjourn or take any extended recess.

Mr. McCORMACK. I would like to be able to give the gentleman the information he desires, but I cannot at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Thereupon, at 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m. the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Speaker.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired the House was called to order by the Speaker at 5 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. St. Claire, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 10572. An act making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill and requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

THIRD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I understand it is probable that the Senate will pass the bill (H. R. 10539) making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, and return it to the House with amendments before adjournment tonight.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding any adjournment of the House, the Clerk of the House be authorized to receive any message on that bill; and that the House disagree to any amendments of the Senate to the bill and agree to a conference thereon, and that the Speaker appoint managers on the part of the House to attend such conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following conferees on the bill H. R. 10539, for which unanimous consent has just been granted: Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. LUDLOW, Mr. SNYDER, Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia, Mr. TABER, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, Mr. LAMBERTSON, and Mr. DITTER.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in view of the action just taken by the House on the bill H. R. 10539, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order tomorrow to consider the conference report on that bill, the rule requiring the printing of conference reports in the RECORD to the contrary notwithstanding.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10572) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and for the present consideration of the same.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 9, strike out "$90,000,000" and insert "$88,000,000";

Page 11, line 9, strike out all after "$90,000,000," down to and including the figures "1939" in line 19;

Not to exceed $5,000 of the appropriation "Miscellaneous expenses, 1941", shall be available in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, for the payment of the services of experts now engaged on a survey and study of the methods of transacting the business of the Navy Department.

BUREAU OF SHIPS

Maintenance, Bureau of Ships: For the same objects specified under the appropriations or portions of appropriations transferred to and consolidated under this head in accordance with section 1 (h) of the act approved June 20, 1940 (Public, Numbered 644, Seventy-sixth Congress), $11,000,000.

Page 16, beginning in line 4, insert:

Reserve material, Navy: For an additional amount for reserve material, Navy, including the same objects specified under this head in the Naval Appropriations Act for the fiscal year 1940 and in title III of the Naval Appropriations Act for the fiscal year 1941, $700,000, to remain available until expended.

Page 16, line 15, strike out "$6,500,000" and insert "$9,500,000";

Naval Air Station, Corpus Christi, Tex.: Additional facilities, including the acquisition of land, $3,000,000.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this bill carries supplemental appropriations for the Army and Navy.

As it passed the House, the bill carried for the Army $1,250,792,636, excluding $150,000,000 of contractual authority.

For the Navy, it carried $60,701,000, excluding $8,500,000 of contractual authority.

As will be noted, the amendments of the Senate are, in general, minor amendments and relate to conditions which have developed since the bill was reported to the House.

The first amendment, $11,000,000, is to provide for certain accessories for ships, aircraft, and various shore installations which the Navy considers of such importance as to be indispensable.

The item for $3,000,000 is for the development and enlargement of the advanced training station for carrier group pilots at the new Corpus Christi Naval Air Station, is understood to be necessary to segregate and disperse pilots in various stages of training. The item is of particular importance just at this time.

Another amendment provides $700,000 for the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts to be expended for the provision and storage of reserve material of various kinds needed by the fleet operating from bases on both coasts. A fourth minor item touching the Navy, which does not involve additional money, provides for final disposition of expenses incurred by a business efficiency expert in the Navy Department.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York, the ranking minority member of the committee.

Mr. TABER. There is one item that saves a couple of million dollars that I do not think the gentleman referred to.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman refers to the item providing a pilot plant for the beneficiation of manganese ores. An allocation of $2,000,000 has been made from the appropriation, for expediting production carried in the Second Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act and the Senate amendment strikes the item from this bill. It is a saving, however, as it reduces the total amount appropriated by $2,000,000.

Mr. TABER. And I think it should be saved. Of all the other items I think the first one, $11,000,000 for the maintenance of ships, unquestionably should go through. The item for Corpus Christi of $3,000,000 will undoubtedly have to go through sometime in the near future, and it does not make any difference whether it goes through now or at some other time. The other items are quite small and minor. For this reason I am inclined to believe the gentleman is right in not asking for a conference and in moving to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. MAHON. I notice the Senate committee struck out the $30,000,000 item for the civil-aeronautics program.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That is provided for in the deficiency bill and will come up tomorrow.

Mr. MAHON. The civil-functions bill?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes. Arrangements have been made to send the bill to conference as soon as it is messaged to the House and the conference report has been made the order of business when the House meets tomorrow.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. HOLMES. Is this item of $3,000,000 for the Corpus Christi Air Station in addition to the $25,000,000 already appropriated and now available for this airport?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes; that is in addition to the amount already provided and makes ample provision for all present needs at that station.

Mr. HOLMES. In other words, there is now appropriated actually $28,000,000 allocated to that one training station?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes; a total of $28,000,000, all to be expended in the improvement and extension of the Corpus Christi station.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I wish to call attention to the efficient and expeditious manner in which the House and the Senate have disposed of this bill, the capstone in the legislative preparedness program completed in this session—a program providing on land and on sea an impregnable line of defense for the Nation and the hemisphere. And in this connection may I express appreciation of the cooperation had throughout the session from the gentleman from New York and his colleagues on the committee and from the Members on both sides of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE SILVER PURCHASING POLICY

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, the New York Times recently announced their editorial support of Mr. Willkie for the Presidency. Their criticism of Mr. Roosevelt was based largely on his fiscal policies, and primarily directed against the Government purchases of silver. Presumably they had some assurances from Mr. Willkie that he would stop all silver purchases. The New York Times editorial on the subject is as follows:

(1) The fantastic silver policy of the Roosevelt administration, scarcely begun in 1936, has now grown to almost incredible proportions. More than 2,000,000,000 ounces of a metal for which our Government has no earthly use—approximately a hundred times as much silver as all the silver mines in the United States produced in the year before this policy began—have been bought by the Treasury at overvalued prices in an artificial market. This policy makes no sense, except as a political maneuver to win the support of the so-called silver bloc. Otherwise its only visible results have been to drive off the silver standard the one important country which had previously been on it and to take from other nations useless silver in exchange for our own good wheat and oil and motor cars and other exports. There is only one way to describe such a policy as this. It leads over the hills to the poorhouse.

This statement squarely represents the point of view of the average Wall Street banker and stock manipulator. The removal of the control of money from their hands is the basis of their objections. Actually the maintenance of the silver price has kept thousands of men in employment.

The silver purchases represent no actual cost to the Government, but a real profit in seignorage. The purchases of silver are paid for with silver certificates, payable in silver dollars coined from the purchased silver.

The gentleman from Idaho, Congressman WHITE, and I have individually wired Mr. Willkie asking him if he agreed with the statements of the New York Times in their reasons for supporting him. To date no reply has been received.

SENATE

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who art the God of nations and Judge among the nations: Make us as a people deeply conscious of our corporate life, and as we pass through troublous times, days of a common anxiety, unite us, we beseech Thee, in a mighty purpose to fulfill our destiny among the nations of the world. Call us by the providence of events to take a lowlier estimate, not of our tasks but of ourselves, that we may be the better fitted for the high service to our country. And, as we pause here in the silence of the moment, may we feel the pulsings of Thy mighty heart, and know that the eternal God is our refuge and that underneath are His everlasting arms.

Teach us that when sorrow comes, the soul should be but kindled to a finer energy, rousing itself to achieve, to attain, and to obey the sterner stress; for loss, instead of gain, doth sometimes measure life, and often in love's sacrifice the one who suffers most hath most to give. Help us, O God, to learn this lesson day by day. We ask it in our Saviour's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Thursday, October 3, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are necessarily absent.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] are necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

REPORT ON AWARD OF CERTAIN WAR DEPARTMENT CONTRACTS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, reporting, pursuant to the act of March 5, 1940, relative to divisions of awards of various contracts for aircraft, aircraft parts and accessories therefor, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LAWS, ORDINANCES, ETC., OF MUNICIPAL COUNCILS AND LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY, VIRGIN ISLANDS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate two letters from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of laws, ordinances, and so forth, passed by the Municipal Councils of St. Croix, St. Thomas, and St. John and the legislative assembly of the Virgin Islands for the year 1940, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

REPORT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION—PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939, of the activities carried on by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, with tables showing payments to farmers by counties under the 1938 programs, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution of the twenty-first annual convention of the California-Nevada Association of Lions Clubs at San Jose, Calif., favoring the prompt enactment of legislation to control the menace of subversive activities of agents of foreign powers in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the annual session of the National Council, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, at Atlantic City, N. J., commending and endorsing the activities of the so-called Dies Committee on Un-American Activities, of the House of Representatives in its endeavor to uncover subversive influences in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the twentieth annual convention of the Western Association of State Game and Fish Commissioners at Seattle, Wash., protesting against the regulation known as Regulation G20A of the United States Forest Service, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the twentieth annual convention of the Western Association of State Game and Fish Commissioners at Seattle, Wash., favoring the appointment of an interim committee to study, with a view to amendment, the Pittman-Robertson Act and the so-called Buck bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the twentieth annual conference of the Western Association of State Game and Fish Commissioners at Seattle, Wash., favoring the appointment of an interim committee to study the proposal to organize one Federal conservation body to handle all wildlife questions, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the twentieth annual convention of the Western Association of State Game and Fish Commissioners at Seattle, Wash., favoring an appropriation to provide for the development of the Deweyville Dam to supplement the Bear River bird refuge water supply, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the twentieth annual convention of the Western Association of State Game and Fish Commissioners at Seattle, Wash., protesting against the taking of fur bearers on Federal wildlife refuges except in accordance with State laws or in cooperation with the various States, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the twentieth annual conference of the Western Association of State Game and Fish Commissioners, at Seattle, Wash., requesting the Government not to set aside Federally administered lands for parks, recreational and wilderness areas, monuments, etc., until the various political subdivisions of the States have had opportunity to give the problems presented adequate consideration, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the twentieth annual convention of the Western Association of State Game and Fish Commissioners at Seattle, Wash., requesting the Director of the Fish and Wildlife Service to cooperate with the New Mexico Department of Game and Fish and New Mexico sportsmen in providing promptly necessary permits for the control of mergansers on their wintering areas in that State to prevent further depletion of the game fish resources, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the twentieth annual convention of the Western Association of State Game and Fish Commissioners at Seattle, Wash., pledging support to the States of Oregon, Idaho, and Washington in their joint effort to perpetuate an adequate run of fish in the Columbia River, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the twentieth annual conference of the Western Association of State Game and Fish Commissioners at Seattle, Wash., requesting that the regulations of the Department of the Interior governing the leasing of lands under section 15 of the Taylor Grazing Act be amended so as to assure the right of the public to hunt and fish on such lands, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the twentieth annual conference of the Western Association of State Game and Fish Commissioners at Seattle, Wash., favoring the enactment of the bill (S. 3739) to amend the act providing for Federal aid to the States in the establishment of wildlife-restoration projects to be owned by the respective States and maintained by them in accordance with the provisions of their laws, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. AUSTIN (for Mr. BARBOUR) presented petitions of Father Divine and sundry other citizens of the United States, numerously signed, praying that the Americas be united for peace, and also for the enactment of pending legislation to prevent and punish the crime of lynching, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. RADCLIFFE presented a letter signed by several members of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, Maryland Branch, Baltimore, Md., submitting additional signatures to their petition praying that the United States extend necessary aid to England in the pending crisis, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a letter from Arthur O. Lovejoy, chairman of the Maryland branch, Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, Baltimore, Md., relative to certain alleged misrepresentations in the remarks and speeches of several Senators pertaining to the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

RESOLUTION OF THE BROTHERHOOD OF SLEEPING-CAR PORTERS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and appropriately referred, a resolution adopted by the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters at its biennial convention in New York City, September 15 to 20, 1940, in opposition to Senate bill 3798, the so-called Pullman conductors' bill.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONDUCTORS' BILL

Whereas the Pullman conductors bill was presented to Congress for enactment and would deny porters the right to run in charge on certain lines and take from them who now run in charge $13.50, which is paid as a differential in wages, in addition to the established rate of pay; and

Whereas the propaganda that the conductors have spread among passengers and before State legislatures to get legislation adopted against porters' running in charge has tended to reflect upon the good name and character of the porters, calculated as it were to impress the public with the idea that women, children, and men passengers were not safe in cars where there were no conductors but where only a porter in charge was at work: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, in its biennial convention in New York City, September 15 to 20, 1940, goes on record as opposing and condemning the conductors' bill, and herewith calls upon the international president and the international executive board to take appropriate action to prevent this bill, or any one similar to it, from becoming a law, either in the Congress or in the States.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SMATHERS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3240) for the relief of the St. Nicholas Park Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2201) thereon.

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7784) for the relief of Howard R. M. Browne, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2202) thereon.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 6658. A bill to authorize the lease or sale of certain public lands in Alaska, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 2203);

H. R. 7252. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease for park or recreational purposes, and to sell for cemetery purposes, certain public lands in Alaska (Rept. No. 2204);

H. R. 8646. A bill to authorize the exchange of certain patented lands in the Death Valley National Monument for Government lands in the monument (Rept. No. 2205); and

H. R. 9173. A bill for the protection of the water supply of the town of Petersburg, Alaska (Rept. No. 2206).

Mr. ADAMS also, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8512) to provide for the acquisition of additional lands for the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 2207) thereon.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4215) for the relief of Caffey Robertson-Smith, Inc., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 2208) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WHEELER:

S. 4399. A bill for the relief of Gros Ventre Nation or Tribe of Indians of Montana; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. AUSTIN (for Mr. BARBOUR):

S. 4400. A bill for the relief of the First National Steamship Co., the Second National Steamship Co., and the Third National Steamship Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 844. An act to simplify the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States, and for other purposes; and

S. 4270. An act to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10572) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10539) making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. LUDLOW, Mr. SNYDER, Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia, Mr. TABER, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, Mr. LAMBERTSON, and Mr. DITTER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ADDRESS BY WENDELL L. WILLKIE AT PITTSBURGH, AND INTRODUCTION BY SENATOR M'NARY

[Mr. AUSTIN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by Wendell L. Willkie, Republican nominee for President of the United States, at Pittsburgh, Pa., on October 3, 1940, and the introductory remarks of Senator MCNARY, which appear in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY SENATOR WAGNER BEFORE THE NEW YORK STATE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION

Matthews, which appear in the Appendix.]

IMPROVEMENT OF RIVERS AND HARBORS IN THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9972) authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday, what is known as the river and harbor bill was the pending business. The Chair understands that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is in charge of the bill. Does the Senator from North Carolina desire to have unanimous consent given to consider committee amendments first?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, Mr. President; I make that request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mrs. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas has requested the Chair to recognize her for the purpose of addressing the Senate. The Senator from Arkansas.

THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN AND THE THIRD-TERM ISSUE

Mrs. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish to join others in expressing my sympathy for the real Republicans in the current Presidential race. With a wealth of Presidential timber in its own ranks, that party permitted its convention in Philadelphia to be "blitzkrieged," and an unknown to capture the place as standard bearer of the Republican Party in the present campaign.

Many stories have come out of Philadelphia as to how this was accomplished. That it was put over by Wall Street, the backer of Mr. Willkie, in the same manner that would have been used in a stock-promotion scheme, is well known.

We now perceive the sad spectacle of the once great Republican Party making gestures of following a leader in whose behalf its members are not genuinely sympathetic.

This Republican candidate is now engaged in running up and down the country preaching a doctrine of liberalism, or, in fact, anything which he thinks will secure votes. With most of his statements a majority of his own party do not agree, and they are in direct opposition to most of the Republican legislative record. Under the pressure of politics, Republican legislators must render their candidate "lip service." This is a bitter pill for most of them to swallow. There are so many instances in which they do not agree with their titular leader that it has been a difficult task for them to speak in his behalf. In these efforts there has been an avoidance of reference to these policies. This has left them with apparently but one theme to discuss. That is the third-term issue.

In recent days the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD has been filled with speeches by Republican legislators regarding this feature. The thought is that there is a sacred "tradition" against a third term for the President of the Nation. That this has no foundation in fact is easily determined by the history of our country.

An effort has been made to prove that the so-called two-term tradition was founded by the Father of his Country. Not only did Washington not inveigh against more than two terms, but he clearly stated in his Farewell Address that he was declining to be considered for a third term only on purely personal grounds, and not as a matter of principle. Even before his election, Washington had taken positive stands against limiting the Presidential term.

Washington retired because he was weary. He had wished to quit after one term, but had been persuaded to remain, as he wrote in his Farewell Address, by the "perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations." His reason for agreeing to serve a second term was essentially the same as Franklin D. Roosevelt's reason for accepting nomination to a third term. When Washington retired, he knew the infant Republic was on its feet, and that he was being succeeded by John Adams, a man in whom he had full confidence.

It has likewise been argued that Thomas Jefferson was against a third term. While statements were made by Mr. Jefferson which could be construed as in opposition to a third term, yet he did say that if an emergency arose he would consent to serve again.

The failure of one or more of the early Presidents to consent to being a candidate for a third term is attributed by historians to age and failing health rather than anything else. Washington was 65 years of age when he retired. The same thing was true of Madison. Monroe was 66 when he quitted the Executive Mansion. Andrew Jackson was 69. Every one of the five pre-Civil-War Presidents who served two terms was 65 or older when he left the office. Three of them, at least, were anxious about their health. Every one of them knew, when he retired, that he was turning the office over to another man of his own party and political philosophy. In at least three cases the successor was hand-picked by the retiring President.

The next President upon whom I shall comment was a Republican, Gen. U. S. Grant. He was the sixth President up to that time to serve two terms. He saw nothing binding in the two-term precedent. Grant was only 55 at the end of his second term. It was said that he was deeply hurt because he was not proffered a third nomination in 1876. However, after an interim this Republican President came back and sought a third nomination in 1880. Notwithstanding happenings which turned many members of his own party against him, the Republican Party at that time thought enough of him to deadlock the national convention for more than 30 ballots. The Republicans who supported Grant on that occasion saw nothing wrong in the third-term idea. In fact, it was not the third-term idea at all which beat Grant, but other factors which I do not care to mention at the present time.

Republican consciences, which appear to be so badly hurt at the present time over the third-term issue, did not bother their owners very greatly upon another occasion. I refer to the candidacy of Theodore Roosevelt. Teddy Roosevelt saw nothing wrong with being a candidate for a third term. In fact, he believed so strongly in such a term of office that he split asunder his own party, and, failing to receive the nomination, ran as an independent. In that race he made a splendid showing. Wilson defeated him with fewer popular votes than Bryan had received in any of his three races for the Presidency. There is no evidence that the two-term tradition was an important factor in the failure of Theodore Roosevelt to win in 1912. He was supported by thousands of Republicans, many of whom are still living. That being true, it is difficult to understand how it is possible for those Republicans who voted for Theodore Roosevelt for a third term, and their descendants, to insist that it is now wrong for Franklin D. Roosevelt to be elected to a third term.

Mr. President, the fact is that even later than that there were great numbers of Republicans who insisted that Calvin Coolidge should again be a candidate. It was agreed that he could easily have secured the Republican nomination for another term of office if he had desired it. Mr. Coolidge declined, largely, I believe, upon the ground of his health. There has been talk to the effect that he afterward regretted his decision, but that it was then too late to change his mind.

At the end of his second term Franklin D. Roosevelt will have served a shorter period than any other two-term President in our history. This will have been occasioned by the twentieth amendment to the Constitution, which changed the beginning of a Presidential term from March 4 to January 20. On next January 20 he will have been President only about 5 months longer than was Theodore Roosevelt. If he serves a third term, which he will do, he will have occupied the White House for 11 years, 10½ months. If Theodore Roosevelt had been elected in 1912, as hundreds of thousands of Republican supporters of his desired, and had served the full term, he would have been in the White House for 11 years and 6 months. It is difficult to see, with the record as it is, and the wholehearted support which Republicans gave to Grant and to Theodore Roosevelt, how it can be argued how it would have been all right for those two men to have been elected to a third term, and yet it would be subversive to our system if Franklin D. Roosevelt were to serve such a term.

Mr. President, Franklin D. Roosevelt is still a comparatively young man. In serving a third term he will leave the White House at 63, 2 years or more younger than 5 earlier Presidents when they retired at the end of two terms. The so-called tradition against a third term, as argued by the Republicans at the present time, was not in evidence in other periods of our national history. They know that, and yet they seek to use it at the present time for their own political advantage.

Our Nation faces one of the most critical periods in its history. Scarcely a day passes but brings this knowledge home to every American citizen. I doubt if there has been a period in the history of the world when the situation was similar to that of the present day. We need, as never before, a man in the White House of demonstrated knowledge and ability who, by experience and training, is fitted to lead us in this critical hour. To replace him with an untried, untrained man whose only public record is that of running a great utility corporation would be the most tragic mistake America has ever made.

Franklin D. Roosevelt has the complete loyalty and respect of millions of Americans. He assumed the Presidency when the economic and social condition of our Nation, due to the fault of the preceding Republican administrations, was at its lowest ebb. It is idle to compare that situation with the present situation. The present Democratic administration has a glorious record of achievement. Never before in our history have the rights of the common man been so recognized as they have been under the administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

It was because of this remarkable record that the overwhelming victory of 1936 was had. Despite all of this quibbling over the third term and the various objections which the Republicans have raised, Franklin D. Roosevelt will again be elected President of the United States by a majority comparable to those he received in 1932 and in 1936.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, we have listened to a very interesting discussion as to the attitude of George Washington toward a third term, and in order that the RECORD may be somewhat more complete I shall in a moment ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial printed in the New York Times today, a reprint from an editorial in the Standard-Times-Mercury, of New Bedford, Mass., entitled "George Washington and the Third Term." This editorial shows more completely and truly, as I see it, what Washington's attitude toward unlimited tenure of office of our Presidents might be.

But before presenting the unanimous-consent request, I should like to say also that in 1929 there was an occasion on the floor of the Senate, as we all know, when there was before this body the La Follette resolution, reading:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents of the United States in retiring from the Presidential office after their second term has become, by universal concurrence, a part of our republican system of government, and that any departure from this time-honored custom would be unwise, unpatriotic, and fraught with peril to our free institutions.

Among the Senators who listened to the several days' debate on that question, when the attitude of George Washington toward a third term was very fully discussed, and among those who expressed their opinions in the final vote, I note that the then distinguished Senator from Arkansas, Senator Caraway, was paired in favor of the adoption of the resolution, which declared it to be the sense of the Senate that the precedent established by Washington should be maintained.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to have inserted as a part of my remarks the editorial to which I have referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Advertisement from the New York Times of October 4, 1940]

GEORGE WASHINGTON AND THE THIRD TERM

(An editorial from the Standard-Times-Mercury, New Bedford, Mass.)

A widespread effort is being made to prove that Washington favored, or countenanced, a third term for President.

It is based on a letter which Washington wrote Lafayette, now being widely circulated.

It is an abuse and misuse of the Lafayette letter.

It is time to debunk and remove this last historical leg from the third-term propaganda.

Here is the quote from the Lafayette letter on which the third termers are relying:

"Guarded so effectually as the proposed Constitution is in respect to the prevention of bribery and undue influence in the choice of President, I confess I differ widely myself from Mr. Jefferson and you as to the expediency or necessity of rotation in that appointment. * * * I can see no propriety in precluding ourselves from the services of any man who in some great emergency shall be deemed universally most capable of serving the public."

On its face this would seem a "natural" for the advocates of the third term.

But a study of the facts reveals the contrary.

By a strange "blind spot" modern writers, as well as the third termers, have omitted consideration of so obvious matters as—

The date of this letter of Washington to Lafayette, April 28, 1788, and the surrounding circumstances.

When this letter was written it was yet a year before Washington's first term as President.

The Constitutional Convention, which established the new Republic, had adjourned but 7 months before.

Lafayette was seeking counsel in the problems of France, already seething with revolution.

Washington was trying to justify the action of the Constitutional Convention which had, at the last minute, removed the requirement of rotation (change after each term) in the office of President.

The Convention had voted many times on the term of President.

Every vote, prior to the last, had been for a term of 6 or 7 years.

Every vote, save one, prior to the last, had demanded rotation in that office.

Only in the final vote, when the term of President was changed to 4 years was the rotation requirement removed.

In other words, the conviction of the Constitutional Convention plainly was, if the Presidential term was to be 6 or 7 years, the President should be limited to one term.

If the term was to be 4 years the restriction of one term, rotation, should be removed.

This was the conviction of Washington, for in the letter to Lafayette he said "the matter was freely discussed in the Convention and to my full conviction."

But Washington, in the same letter to Lafayette and in justifying the removal of the rotation requirement, narrows the purpose to two conditions:

One—in time of "some great emergency."

And two—when there existed a man "deemed universally most capable of serving the public."

These facts are implicit in the letter and the record, and obvious to even casual study.

Nor by one official act during his career does Washington violate or act out of harmony with this, which might well be called the Washington plan as to Presidential succession.

It was, we repeat, a single term of 4 years—except in great emergency—and then only to a man "deemed universally most capable."

As the end of his first term approached, as is well known, Washington prepared a Farewell Address.

On May 20, 1792, he sent a draft to Madison containing the following, in the obscure wording sometimes characteristic of the first President:

"* * * and as the spirit of the Government may render a rotation in the elective offices of it more congenial with the ideas the people have of liberty and safety, that I take my leave of them as a public man * * *."

On June 21, 1792, Madison returned the draft to Washington with the following clear-cut refinement of Washington's rotation clauses:

"* * * May I be allowed further to add, as a consideration far more important, that an early example of rotation in an office of so high and delicate a nature, may equally accord with the republican spirit of our Constitution and the ideas of liberty and safety entertained by the people."

This expression of Washington's views of rotation remained in the final draft of the first Farewell Address.

A copy adorns the rare-book department of the Boston Public Library, in Washington's own handwriting.

Though the persuasion of Madison, Jefferson, and others caused Washington to accept a second term, he clung tenaciously to the rotation principle.

In 1796, at the end of his second term, when deserted by Madison and Jefferson, he turned to Hamilton for help in his Farewell Address. The draft sent Hamilton May 15, 1796, contained the same Madison clause on rotation.

"It will be perceived from hence that I am much attached to the quotation," wrote Washington to Hamilton.

The quotation did not appear in the final draft of Washington's Farewell Address.

It had disappeared in the hands of Hamilton, the arch-Federalist, who had proposed a life term for President in the Constitutional Convention.

But Washington's convictions had not and did not change.

Steadfastly he refused to consider the Presidency again, in the name of emergency or otherwise.

On June 26, 1796, he wrote to his nephew, Robert Lewis:

"* * * I shall make my last journey to close my public life on the 4th of March, after which no consideration under heaven that I can foresee shall again withdraw me from the walks of private life."

Not a scrap of evidence in word or deed exists to indicate that Washington ever considered or favored a third term for President.

We have said it was time to debunk the Washington third-term propaganda.

It also is time to bring the third-term issue down to date.

For 150 years the Washington formula has worked substantially as planned and expected.

It now faces its first real challenge.

The longest tenure of office for President ever considered by the Constitutional Convention, 7 years, now is sought to be made 12.

The fears of Madison, Jefferson, Lafayette, and others are being justified.

The loophole left in the Constitution for the emergency second term is being taken advantage of to bring about a third term—and perhaps more.

By no wide stretch of the imagination can President Roosevelt qualify under the Washington formula, a man "deemed universally most capable of serving the public."

He is running because he was "deemed universally most capable" of being elected—by the Democratic Party.

Corrupt city gangs with mass political machinery contributed toward this third-term nomination—with the President's own knowledge and consent.

These corrupt gangs now promise to herd voters en masse to bring about election.

President Roosevelt alone of all Presidents has seen fit to make the class appeal, to divide the country in time of peril.

He baldly reminds labor of what he has done for labor and asks pay in votes, an affront to labor—and a disservice to democracy.

Federal employes now total more than 1,000,000.

More than 5,000,000 are on Federal relief.

These represent a population more than five times that of the United States at the time of Washington's election.

A subtle process of coercion is being exercised throughout the country on Government employees—especially on the unfortunate recipients of Federal relief.

The theme of this is "vote for the third-term candidate or jeopardize your job."

Are we facing now the situation to which Washington referred in the now famous letter to Lafayette where he said:

"* * * when a people have become incapable of governing themselves and fit for a master, it is of little consequence from what quarter he comes."

We do not know.

Today's crisis may well be, however, that "conflict of popular factions" to which Washington referred as "the chief, if not the only, inlets of usurpation and tyranny."

We do not believe the American people are ready for a "master."

We do believe they are nearer the "master" than they realize.

We do not charge President Roosevelt with attempting, consciously, to become a "master."

We do believe he is nearer than even he may realize.

Powers which President Roosevelt holds, which, he said, in the hands of others would "provide shackles for the liberties of the people" now are sought for another 4 years.

It is of no avail that President Roosevelt does not intend to be a dictator—

If by his bitter class partisanship and ignorance of the democratic economy he destroys the mainspring of democracy.
It is unimportant that President Roosevelt does not want to be a dictator.
For, unless democracy can be made to function, a dictatorship, of Roosevelt or some other, is inevitable.
Its specter stares now through the loophole in the Constitution left by Washington and others—
Left there to meet an "emergency," which it now creates.
There is a drift toward a "master."
Only the American people can stop this drift—
By voting against the third term.
If we do not, we have only ourselves to blame.
Washington's plan and precept preserved liberty for 150 years.
His warning stares us plainly in the face today.
If we do not heed this warning let us admit that we have failed to catch the torch of liberty which he has thrown us.

BASIL BREWER, Publisher.

Mrs. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that the Senator Caraway to whom the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] has referred was my husband. I am sure that if he were alive and here today he would take the same position I have taken.

MR. WILLKIE AND THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, in a radio speech delivered from Pittsburgh last evening the Republican Presidential candidate made this statement:

I was for the National Labor Relations Act before it was passed—I was for it after it was passed—and I am for it now.

On an issue of such far-reaching importance, labor and the country at large will want to square these kind words uttered a few weeks before election with the record made before Mr. Willkie became a Presidential candidate. The record shows that three of the operating companies in the Commonwealth and Southern utility system have openly defied the rights of their workers to organize in unions of their choice, and established and maintained company-dominated labor organizations whereby the companies could sit on both sides of the conference table. In one of these companies where opposition to an American Federation of Labor union extends back to 1934, before the National Labor Relations Act was passed, labor has denounced the situation as "one of the blackest spots on the utility map."

I ask unanimous consent to have printed as part of my remarks:

First. Findings of fact and order of the National Labor Relations Board in the Consumers Power Co. case.

Second. The decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit upholding the Labor Board's order in full.

Third. The findings of fact and order of the National Labor Relations Board in the case of the Alabama Power Co.

Fourth. The comment on the Alabama Power Co. situation appearing in the Radio and Electrical Union News, issue of July (second half) 1940, official organ of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, affiliated with American Federation of Labor.

Fifth. The consent decree entered by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in the case of National Labor Relations Board against Southern Indiana Gas and Electric Co.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[United States of America. Before the National Labor Relations Board. In the matter of Consumers' Power Co., a corporation, and Local No. 740, United Electrical, Radio[1] & Machine Workers of America. Case No. C–790.—Decided November 8, 1938]

Electric and gas utility industry—interference, restraint, and coercion: surveillance of meeting; transfer of union members to less desirable work; warnings not to join union—company-dominated union: domination of and interference with formation and administration; support; urging employees to form inside labor organization; encouragement of inside organization by discouragement of other labor organization; participation by supervisory employees; respondent ordered not to recognize as agency for collective bargaining.

DECISION AND ORDER

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On February 2, 1938, Local No. 740, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America,[2] herein called Local 740, filed a charge with the Regional Director for the Seventh Region (Detroit, Mich.) alleging that Consumers' Power Co., a corporation,[3] Jackson, Mich., herein called the respondent, had engaged in and was engaging in unfair labor practices affecting commerce, within the meaning of the National Labor Relations Act, 49 Stat. 449, herein called the act. On May 5, 1938, the National Labor Relations Board, herein called the Board, by the Regional Director, issued its complaint against the respondent, alleging that the respondent had engaged in and was engaging in unfair labor practices affecting commerce, within the meaning of section 8 (1) and (2) and section 2 (6) and (7) of the act. Copies of the complaint, accompanied by notice of hearing, were duly served upon the respondent and Local 740.

In respect of the unfair labor practices, the complaint in substance alleged that the respondent dominated and interfered with the formation and administration of a labor organization known as the Independent Power Employees' Association, herein called the Independent, and contributed support to it; that such domination, interference, and support was manifested by displaying hostility toward United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America, herein called the United; by encouraging membership in the Independent; by discriminating in regard to the tenure and term of employment of its employees for the purpose of encouraging membership in the Independent and of discouraging membership in the United; by permitting activity on behalf of the Independent during working hours and on its premises; by open surveillance of meetings of the United; and by other acts.

The respondent filed an answer dated May 10, 1938, and on May 17, at the hearing of the case, filed an amendment to its answer. The answer, as amended, in substance denied the alleged unfair labor practices, admitted certain allegations of the complaint concerning the respondent's business, denied the other allegations, and alleged affirmatively that the effect upon commerce of labor disputes in the conduct of the respondent's business would be indirect and remote. The answer of the respondent was accompanied by a motion to dismiss the proceedings on various jurisdictional and constitutional grounds.

Pursuant to the notice, a hearing was held in Jackson, Mich., from May 12 to July 28, 1938, before Charles W. Whittemore, the trial examiner duly designated by the Board. At the outset of the hearing a petition for intervention, previously filed by the Independent, and dated May 7, was granted by the trial examiner, participation by the intervenor being limited, however, to such matters as pertained to the alleged unfair labor practices within the meaning of section 8 (2) of the act. The Board, the respondent, Local 740, and the Independent were represented by counsel and participated in the hearing. With the limitation noted above as to the independent, full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to produce evidence bearing upon the issues was afforded all parties.

The respondent's motion to dismiss the proceedings, made prior to the commencement of the hearing, was denied by the trial examiner on May 16. At the conclusion of the presentation of the Board's case on June 16, the respondent moved to dismiss the proceedings on the grounds alleged in its original motion and on the additional grounds that the evidence failed to sustain the allegations of the complaint of unfair labor practices and that all matters in dispute had been settled pursuant to a contract between the respondent and the United. The Independent moved to dismiss that portion of the complaint which alleged unfair labor practices within the meaning of section 8 (2) of the act. These motions were denied. Both were renewed at the close of the hearing, at which time the trial examiner reserved decision.

On May 16, counsel for the Board moved to amend the title of the proceedings to conform to the evidence by substituting for the name of Local 740, the name, "Utility Workers Organizing Committee, Local 101." The motion was granted.[4] On June 18, counsel for the Board moved for leave to file an amended complaint to conform to the proof. The motion was renewed at the close of the hearing, at which time it was granted. Counsel for the Board was allowed 7 days in which to file the amended complaint, and the respondent was allowed 7 days after the filing of the amended complaint in which to file an amended answer. At the close of the hearing, the parties were given 30 days for the filing of briefs, and were informed that they would be given 10 days from the date of the trial examiner's intermediate report to request oral argument before the Board.

[2] The name of Local 740, as it appears in the charge, is Local 740, U. E. R. & M. W. of A.
[3] The name of the respondent as it appears in the charge is Consumers Power Co.
[4] This aspect of the case is discussed below in section II.

On August 2, 1938, pursuant to the motion made and granted at the hearing, counsel for the Board filed an amended complaint, which contained certain additional allegations concerning acts of the respondent constituting unfair labor practices within the meaning of section 8 (1) and (2) of the act; and an allegation that "Utility Workers Organizing Committee," herein called U. W. O. C., "successor to Local 740" of the United, was a labor organization within the meaning of section 2 (5) of the act. The amended complaint also differed from the original complaint in that it alleged that certain unfair labor practices of the respondent affected U. W. O. C. as well as the United.

Thereafter, the respondent filed its amended answer to the amended complaint, in which it changed some of the allegations and denials of its original answer with regard to the nature of its business and the effects thereof upon commerce. It denied the right of the Board to substitute a new union as complaining party; and it alleged that the amended complaint was contrary to the rules of the Board in that, among other things, it enlarged the scope of the original complaint. The amended answer contained a prayer that the complaint be dismissed.

On August 3, 1938, the Board, acting pursuant to article II, section 37 (a) of National Labor Relations Board Rules and Regulations—Series 1, as amended, issued an order directing that the proceedings be transferred to and continued before it.

Thereafter, the Independent filed an objection and exception to the above order, and requested that an intermediate report be filed by the trial examiner. The respondent filed a motion, dated August 11, 1938, to remand the case to the trial examiner. On August 16, 1938, the Board issued an order denying the respondent's motion, overruling the Independent's objection and exception, and denying its request.

The respondent also requested that it be permitted to file a brief with the Board, and the Independent requested permission to file briefs and make oral argument. By an order dated August 29, 1938, the Board directed that proposed findings of fact, proposed conclusions of law, and proposed order be issued and that the parties have the right, within 10 days from the receipt thereof, to file exceptions thereto, to request oral argument before the Board, and to request permission to file a brief with the Board.

The Board has considered and hereby affirms the rulings of the trial examiner with respect to the motions described above. The motions made at the conclusion of the hearing, on which the trial examiner reserved decision, and the motion to dismiss the complaint made in the respondent's amended answer, are hereby denied.

During the course of the hearing, the trial examiner made numerous other rulings on motions and objections with respect to the admission of evidence. The Board has reviewed the rulings of the trial examiner and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed.

Counsel for the respondent and counsel for the Independent objected throughout the hearing to the participation therein of counsel for the union which filed the charge herein. The participation of Mr. Sugar was in accordance with the rules and practice of the Board. The rulings of the trial examiner in this regard are hereby affirmed.

On September 2, 1938, pursuant to the order above described, proposed findings of fact, proposed conclusions of law, and proposed order were issued. On September 15 and 16, respectively, the respondent and the Independent filed exceptions thereto. The respondent and the Independent also filed briefs with the Board, which have been considered. Pursuant to a notice of hearing and a notice of an advancement of the date thereof, a hearing was held before the Board in Washington, D. C., on October 6, 1938, for the purpose of oral argument on the exceptions. The respondent and the Independent were represented by counsel and participated in the argument.

The Independent filed a motion with the Board, dated October 3, 1938, requesting that the record in this proceeding be reopened for the purpose of taking further testimony, and specifically for the purpose of incorporating therein the record in the proceeding in case No. R–1044, and for the purpose of showing activity by crew foremen on behalf of labor organizations other than the Independent. The motion is hereby denied. Most of the evidence in question was available at the time of the hearing in this proceeding. We do not deem the other evidence offered of sufficient significance to warrant reopening the record.

The Board has considered the exceptions filed by the respondent and the Independent. Except insofar as the findings of fact below differ from the proposed findings of fact, we find them to be without merit. They are hereby overruled.

Upon the entire record in the case, the Board makes the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE BUSINESS OF THE RESPONDENT

The respondent was incorporated under the laws of the State of Maine on April 14, 1910, and was admitted to do business in the State of Michigan on July 21, 1915. On November 30, 1937, 68.97 percent of the respondent's voting stock was owned by the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation of Delaware. Ten other subsidiaries of the Delaware corporation operate in the Middle West and South Atlantic States. The various subsidiaries together own the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation of New York, which perform certain services for each of them.

The respondent's executive offices are located in Jackson, Mich. It is engaged in the production, purchase, and distribution of electric energy and gas, as well as of water, steam heat, electrical and gas appliances, and byproducts, in the State of Michigan. It serves an area of 25,000 square miles, the population of which is in excess of 1,900,000. The area includes over 900 cities, towns, and smaller communities. Electricity is sold in 987 communities and townships as well as in rural areas; manufactured gas is sold in 126, and natural gas in 103 communities and townships. Steam heat and water are each sold in 4 communities. On November 30, 1937, the respondent had 392,653 customers of electric energy and 193,515 customers of gas.

Aside from certain municipal power plants, there are no competing sources of electric power in the area served by the respondent. Other gas and electric utility companies operating in Michigan do not operate parallel lines.

In November 1937 the respondent had 6,961 employees. In February 1938 the total number of employees was 6,467, and in May 1938, 6,131.

The respondent has interconnections with other electric utility companies operating in Michigan. Thus it has two interconnections with Michigan Public Service Co. It supplies almost all of the power requirements of a utility company in Adrian, Mich. It purchases the output of four companies, including that of Wolverine Power Co., which has an installed capacity of 13,400 kilowatts. Finally it purchases the entire supply of electric energy, about 29,000 kilowatts, which it distributes in Pontiac, from the Detroit Edison Co., and has other interconnections with that company which are used as a source of emergency supply for either company. Through these latter connections the respondent has an emergency reserve of 25,000 kilowatts. There is a daily interchange of power over these lines.[5]

The 42 hydroelectric plants operated by the respondent include 17 with a total capacity of 137,110 kilowatts, and 25 small plants with a total capacity of 10,605 kilowatts. The total effective capacity of these plants during the low-water season is estimated at 91,890 kilowatts. The respondent's 6 steam electric plants have a total effective capacity of 254,500 kilowatts, of which 23,000 kilowatts are held in reserve. During the 12 months ending on November 30, 1937, the respondent produced 1,546,816,430 and purchased 155,251,089 kilowatt-hours of electric energy.

The respondent's generating plants are connected into a single unitary system known as a power pool, which uses 2,455.52 circuit miles of high tension transmission lines. The distribution system totals 15,094 miles of line.

The respondent has seven active and six inactive plants for the production of coal gas, and seven active and five inactive plants for the manufacture of water gas. The total daily manufacturing capacity of these plants is 40,430,000 cubic feet. The respondent also purchases natural gas produced in Michigan. In the 12 months ending November 30, 1937, the respondent produced 5,452,768,000 and purchased 3,853,754,000 cubic feet of gas.

Purchase and sale of materials in interstate commerce

Coal is used for the operation of the steam electric plants which include over 60 percent of the respondent's total generating capacity. It also constitutes the raw material used in the coal-gas generating plants. All of the coal used by the respondent is purchased outside of Michigan, chiefly in West Virginia and Kentucky. In 1937 it paid $1,835,000, exclusive of transportation costs, for about 1,000,000 tons of coal. About 325,000 tons were used in the gas plants and most of the balance was used in generating electricity. Shipments of coal by rail are received daily at each of the plants, and are also received frequently, during the shipping season on the Great Lakes, at the respondent's docks in the Saginaw River.

In addition to the natural gas purchased by the respondent, oil for the manufacture of water gas is also purchased. All the natural gas and oil so purchased are produced within Michigan.

In connection with its operations, the respondent sells gas and electric household appliances within the area it serves, maintaining 45 retail outlets for this purpose. Although this phase of its operations is maintained merely to increase the sale of gas and electric energy, the appliances sold by the respondent constitute about 30 percent of such articles sold in the territory. During 1937 the respondent paid $2,200,000 for the purchase of appliances, 60 percent of which were shipped to it from points outside Michigan.

Among the other raw materials purchased by the respondent are poles used for transmission lines. During 1937 all of the poles purchased were shipped to it from points outside Michigan, including 80,000 pine poles from Louisiana and 10,000 cedar poles from Washington.

Large supplies of the raw materials described above are kept on hand at all times. Thus, although shipments of coal are received daily by the respondent, there is an established practice to keep at least a 60-day supply on hand. The average for appliances is 1½ to 2 months. Generally, all purchases made by the respondent are added to stock and are not used at once.

The raw materials used by the respondent are sent to it by railway, motortruck, lake vessels, and other means.

The respondent sells certain byproducts of the manufacture of gas, which include coke, all of which is sold to purchasers in Michigan; tar, 65 percent of which, amounting in value to $59,500, was sold during 1937 to purchasers outside Michigan; ammonia and ammonium sulfate, 95 percent of which, amounting in value to [5] Detroit Edison Co. supplies power for a tunnel between Michigan and Canada. The record shows that it is unlikely that power from the respondent could find its way to this tunnel.

$30,300, was sold to purchasers outside Michigan; and drip oil, all of which, amounting in value to $10,600, was sold to purchasers outside Michigan.

Dependence of consumers on electric energy and gas supplied by the respondent

For the 12 months ending on November 30, 1937, about 56 percent of the electric energy sold by the respondent, representing 32 percent of the revenue received from the sale of such energy, was sold for industrial purposes. In the same period, 32 percent of the gas sales, representing 21 percent of the revenue received from such sales, was made for commercial and industrial purposes.

During 1937, 15.85 percent of the respondent's revenue for the sale of electric energy, and 26.40 percent of its revenue from the sale of gas came from the automobile and automobile-equipment industry alone. It should be noted that the percentage of electricity and gas sold to this industry, as distinguished from the percentage of revenue derived therefrom, is even higher, because of the relatively lower rates charged to industrial users. In addition, during 1937, 0.94 percent of the revenue from the sale of electric energy and 0.22 percent of the revenue from the sale of gas came from instrumentalities of transportation and communication, such as railroads, newspapers, telephone and telegraph companies, airports, and docks.

The record shows that the effect upon commerce and the instrumentalities of commerce of a cessation of the power supplied by the respondent to its customers would be disastrous. Among such customers are vast industrial concerns, the operations of which create a constant flow of materials into and out of Michigan, and various instrumentalities of interstate transportation and communication.

Industry: As noted above, a very large percentage of the electric energy and gas sold by the respondent is used in the automobile and automobile-equipment industries. Plants operated by General Motors Corporation alone during 1937 purchased 371,896,003 kilowatt-hours of electricity and 1,775,892,000 cubic feet of gas, paying $3,691,655 and $567,171 therefor, respectively. These plants do not have sufficient auxiliary equipment to operate without the electric energy and gas supplied by the respondent. If this supply should fail, the operations of these plants would automatically cease.

The various operating divisions of General Motors Corporation which use the respondent's power and gas send part of their products to other divisions of that company and sell the balance to General Motors Sales Corporation, which sells them to other unallied companies. Similarly, they use some raw materials supplied by other divisions of General Motors and by outside producers. Figures furnished by General Motors Corporation show that, on the average, 53.95 percent of the raw materials used by the plants served by the respondent are shipped to them from points outside Michigan. On the average, 42.09 percent of the finished products of these General Motors plants was shipped to points outside Michigan.

Several of these General Motors plants manufacture parts which are not manufactured elsewhere, and consequently are necessary to the operations of other General Motors plants which do not use electric energy or gas supplied by the respondent. Assembly plants in 13 States are dependent on the continuous operations of these parts plants. Similarly, parts plants in other States would be affected by a cessation of the operations of the automobile plants supplied with power by the respondent. Such a cessation would cause a progressive retardation of the operations of the supplier plants, as their output could not be handled. The movement of raw materials and products to and from these plants is a daily operation. An interruption in the operations of these plants, which would result from a cessation of the flow of power from the respondent, such as would tend to accompany a labor dispute between the respondent and its employees, would stop the operations of General Motors plants both within and without Michigan in a very short time and would halt or diminish the daily flow in interstate commerce of raw materials and products to and from the General Motors plants. During 1937, the operations of some of the General Motors plants were in fact halted by the strikes among the respondent's employees which are described below in section III. On two occasions the plants were shut down and the men sent home.

Other industries in Michigan use a substantial quantity of the electric energy and gas distributed by the respondent. These include machinery and metal products, chemical and allied products, foodstuffs and tobacco, and lumber and wood products. The record shows the magnitude of the operations in interstate commerce which depend on the respondent. Evidence in the record as to specific plants operating in Michigan shows their complete dependence on the respondent for electric energy and gas, their absence of auxiliary equipment, the magnitude of their operations, the amount of their shipments of raw materials and products across State lines, and the actual effect of previous strikes among the respondent's employees. Typical of such businesses and the dependence of their operations upon power supplied by the respondent is Baker-Perkins Co., Inc., which manufactures food-producing and chemical machinery. It is completely dependent on the supply of electricity and gas by the respondent, and would have to shut down in the event of an interruption of that supply. During 1937, 60 to 65 percent of the raw materials purchased by that company were shipped to it from points outside Michigan, and 90 to 92 percent of its products were shipped to points outside Michigan. Its gross sales during 1937 amounted to $4,443,169.21. The operations of this company were interrupted during 2 days by a strike of the respondent's employees.

Another instance is Kalamazoo Stationery Co. which manufactures stationery supplies, with gross sales during 1937 of $1,485,724.35. It appears that it depends entirely on the respondent for the electric energy and gas necessary to its operations, and that during the 12 months ending on October 31, 1937, 80 percent of its raw materials, and 82 percent of its products were shipped across State lines.

A final example is that of the Defoe Boat & Motor Works, which during 1937 was engaged chiefly in the building of three ships sold at a total price of $536,243, and which depends entirely on the respondent for the electricity which drives all of its machinery. Its plant was closed down during the 1937 strikes of the respondent's employees. Eighty-five percent of the materials used in production in 1937 were shipped to it from points outside Michigan, and practically its entire output for that year was shipped out of the State.

The importance of the relationship between the respondent and its industrial customers who ship and receive large quantities of goods in interstate commerce, can be seen in the statement which appears in a prospectus, dated January 17, 1938, issued in connection with a $9,000,000 bond issue, that, "The current recession in the automobile industry and industrial production generally may adversely affect the revenues of the company."

The record clearly shows the dependence upon the respondent of a large industrial area. Engaged in business in this area are concerns which daily make and receive shipments in interstate commerce. There is a constant flow of a vast amount of materials across State lines to and from companies whose operations would cease at once upon an interruption of the respondent's output of electric energy and gas. This flow would be severely diminished in the event of such an interruption. The effect on commerce of a labor dispute between the respondent and its employees involving a cessation of work upon the part of the latter would be catastrophic.

Transportation: The respondent sells electric power to several interstate railroads, including the Pennsylvania Railroad, the Pere Marquette Railway, the Michigan Central Railroad, the Grand Trunk Railroad, and the Ann Arbor Railroad. None of these roads is electrified. Testimony by representatives of the last three railroads named above shows that the power purchased by them from the respondent is used for the operation of block signals, of crossing protection signals, of watering and coaling stations, and of various repair shops, and for the illumination of shops and stations. The testimony indicates that a cessation of the power supplied by the respondent would not result in a stoppage of the train service, but that it would cause the accumulation of repair work, that it would entail greatly increased operating expenses, and that it would necessitate the use of emergency equipment in place of the electrically operated block signals and other equipment, thereby greatly increasing the possibility of a break-down in the operations of the trains.

Power supplied by the respondent operates lighthouses maintained by the Federal Government in Saginaw Bay, which is an arm of Lake Huron. Auxiliary equipment for these lighthouses is not sufficient to keep them operating in a normal fashion in case of a failure of the respondent's power. Shipping passing through the Bay would be to some extent hampered by such a failure. In addition, drawbridges across the Saginaw River, which flows into the Bay, are lifted by power supplied by the respondent. These bridges are located in Bay City and Saginaw. One of the bridges in Bay City has no auxiliary equipment, and in the event of a power failure, 15 to 20 hours would be required to put it in operation. Stipulations in the record show that a substantial amount of freight from points outside of Michigan is shipped through Saginaw Bay, past the bridges in Bay City, to points in Saginaw and between Bay City and Saginaw. The respondent also serves electric energy to a public dock in Muskegon, Mich., on Lake Michigan.

Communications: The respondent supplies electric energy to the Western Union and Postal Telegraph Systems. Both of these companies receive and transmit messages into and out of Michigan. The respondent's energy is used by them for the operation of mechanical equipment used in the sending and receiving of messages, as well as for illimunation and other purposes. They use their own power for the energy required for transmission of the messages. A failure of the respondent's power would require the sending of messages by hand, which in turn would require skilled operators who are not available at all of the telegraph offices. A representative of one of the two telegraph companies testified that in case of an unexpected cessation of the respondent's power, service would be restored to some extent in 3 or 4 hours, and to a full extent in a day and a half.

The respondent supplies electric energy to the Michigan Bell Telephone Co., the territory of which includes part at least of the territory served by the respondent. During 1937, the company transmitted messages originating in Michigan to points outside Michigan, for which the total charges were $4,065,000. Approximately 30 percent of these messages originated at stations supplied with energy by the respondent. The telephone company has auxiliary equipment which would maintain its services for an indefinite period. With regard to the illumination of some of its exchanges, however, it appears that a sudden cessation of the respondent's power, at night, would leave them temporarily in darkness. In such a case, the service would be interrupted for a period of some minutes.

The respondent supplies electric energy to seven radio broadcasting stations operating in Michigan. None of these stations has auxiliary equipment to substitute for the energy so supplied in case it is interrupted. All of them broadcast programs which originate in States other than Michigan and are sent to the station for rebroadcast. The amount of time devoted to such programs varies between 10 and 53 percent of the total broadcasting time of the stations in question. All but two of the stations broadcast electrical transcriptions, which are sent to it from points outside Michigan, the time devoted to such programs varying from 10 to 30 percent of the total time on the air. The programs broadcast by these stations include advertising matter for articles on sale to the general public, produced by commercial firms with principal places of business outside Michigan.

It should be pointed out, with regard to both communication and transportation, that many companies which use power supplied by the respondent, but which have auxiliary arrangements to take care of a possible interruption of that power, would have to rely on batteries, small motors, and similar devices. It can readily be seen that reliance on such makeshifts would create a continuing possibility of temporary break-down. Such a change to operations on an emergency basis in itself would constitute a burden and obstruction upon these instrumentalities of commerce. Moreover, while each company, considering itself separately, might feel confident that it could procure sufficient additional equipment in case of an emergency, it may well be doubted, if all of them were faced with an interruption of service at the same time, whether all of their needs could be satisfied.

Conclusions as to the respondent's relation to commerce

It is evident from the findings above (1) that the respondent receives vast quantities of coal, as well as other commodities, in interstate commerce; (2) that the respondent ships a substantial amount of byproducts in interstate commerce; (3) that a labor dispute between the respondent and its employees would seriously affect the flow in interstate commerce of these commodities and byproducts; (4) that a large area in the State of Michigan is almost entirely dependent upon the respondent for electric energy and gas; (5) that a cessation of the flow of electric energy and gas from the respondent, such as would tend to accompany, and has in the past accompanied, labor disputes between the respondent and its employees (a) would tend to burden and obstruct the operations of various agencies of interstate transportation and communication by forcing them to use makeshift substitutes for their normal supply of power, as well as by causing, in some cases, temporary interruptions of service, and (b) would directly cause a cessation or curtailment of the operations of the businesses served by the respondent with power, which receive and ship commodities in interstate commerce, similar to that which would accompany simultaneous labor disputes in all of such businesses, thereby causing a substantial diminution in the flow of products in interstate commerce.

The respondent contends that it has scrupulously maintained a policy of avoiding interstate connections, and that its intrastate character is demonstrated by the extensive regulation by State agencies to which it is subject. It is also alleged in the respondent's answer to the complaint herein that, "it is required to serve all customers who demand or request its service, and that it is unreasonable and unlawful to determine respondent's status under said National Labor Relations Act based upon such remote and indirect consequences which respondent cannot avoid." However, the question for us to decide is, simply, what would be the effect upon commerce of a labor dispute between the respondent and its employees.[6] It is clear that the effect would be immediate and extensive. This fact is clearly demonstrated by the strikes which have occurred in the past in restricted portions of the respondent's system.

II. THE ORGANIZATIONS INVOLVED

United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America is a labor organization affiliated with the Committee for Industrial Organization, herein called the C. I. O. Its jurisdiction formerly included employees of utility companies. In the latter part of January 1938, it surrendered its jurisdiction over utility workers to Utility Workers Organizing Committee. Prior to that time it had chartered separate locals for the employees of the respondent, membership in the various locals being determined along geographical lines. Local 740, which filed the charge in this proceeding, included employees of the respondent at, and in the vicinity of, Jackson, Mich.

Utility Workers Organizing Committee is a labor organization, likewise affiliated with the C. I. O. It admits to membership employees in the public-utility industry, exclusive of companies engaged in communication. It was organized in 1938 to take over that field which had formerly been within the jurisdiction of the United. The employees of the respondent who were formerly members of the various locals of the United have been transferred to corresponding locals of U. W O. C. Members of Local 740 have become members of U. W. O. C Local 101, herein called Local 101. On February 9, 1938, Local 740 surrendered its charter and received a charter as Local 101 of U. W. O. C. The other United locals since that date have similarly changed their affiliation, although at the time of the hearing not all of the 12 separate locals had received their new charters from U. W. O. C.

As noted above, the respondent objected to the motion of counsel for the Board to change the title of these proceedings, on the ground that such a motion involved a substitution of parties. It advanced the contention that the party which filed the charge was no longer in existence. Even if the respondent's contention is true and the ruling was in error, we do not see how it can affect the issues in this case, since Local 740 was in existence at the time the charge was filed. Moreover, the evidence shows that when Local 740 of the United transferred its affiliation to U. W. O. C. the entire structure of the local remained unaltered, and it continued with the same members, officers, and bylaws. It is clear that Local 101 of U. W. O. C. is the same labor organization as Local 740 of the United, and that the union which filed the charge in the proceeding is still in existence. The respondent has at all times been aware of the changes in affiliation of the C. I. O. organizations. The contracts which it has entered into with them are discussed in some detail below in section III-A. It is sufficient to state here that the first contract was made with the United Automobile Workers of America, a C. I. O. affiliate, herein called the U. A. W., and provided for a possible future change in affiliation of the contracting union. The subsequent change from the U. A. W. to the United was acknowledged by the respondent in a letter to the latter organization. Finally, on April 4, 1938, the prior agreement was altered and extended by an agreement between the respondent and U. W. O. C., in which the first contract was referred to as "the memorandum of agreement made between said parties, or their predecessors." The respondent thus treated with U. W. O. C. as the proper party with whom to negotiate an extension of the agreement originally made with the U. A. W.[7]

Independent Power Employees' Association is an unaffiliated labor organization, admitting to its membership only employees of the respondent.

III. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background of organization among the respondent's employees

Self-organization of the respondent's employees first assumed definite form early in 1937, in Bay City and Saginaw, 2 of the northernmost districts of the respondent's widespread system. Organization soon extended to Flint and Lansing, and later to Jackson and other operating centers until, at the time of the hearing in this proceeding, 12 locals were affiliated with the C. I. O. through U. W. O. C. These locals were established in the towns mentioned above and in Manistee, Muskegon, Battle Creek, Alma, Owosso, Pontiac, and 1 other town, the name of which does not appear in the record. At present each local elects 5 delegates to the State or joint council, and from that council a 5-man executive board is elected. Each local has its own bargaining committee for the adjustment of local grievances, while the executive board negotiates with the management at Jackson concerning matters of system-wide application.

The respondent's employees in the Bay City area formed an organizing committee in January 1937. The automobile workers in Bay City were at that time being organized, and the respondent's employees enrolled in the Flint local of the U. A. W., the jurisdiction of which had temporarily been extended to include Bay City. The respondent's Bay City employees, however, elected their own officers, and set up their own 9-man committee for the purpose of negotiating with the respondent. Similar organizational activities began in March 1937 among the respondent's employees in Saginaw, a few miles south of Bay City. As in Bay City, the members of the present local were first enrolled as members in the U. A. W., but they elected their own officers and constituted a separate unit of utility workers. The respondent's employees in Flint began organizing in March 1937 and first enrolled as members in the U. A. W. In Lansing the respondent's employees began organizing in February 1937, enrolling as members in the U. A. W. local, after they failed to obtain affiliation with the A. F. of L. The record does not contain details concerning the process of organization in the remainder of the 12 locals, but most of them took form subsequent to the agreement of June 8, 1937, which is discussed below.

A conference between the respondent and representatives of the locals in Saginaw, Flint, and Bay City was held in Saginaw on April 29, 1937. Vice President M. W. Arthur and Assistant General Manager A. E. Kriegemann represented the respondent, and the C. I. O. was represented by a group of operating employees and their U. A. W. representatives. The proposals of the C. I. O. as to wages and working conditions were presented and discussed. Further conferences were held on May 4, 5, and 10. On May 10, the respondent's vice president, D. E. Karn, was present, and urged that a consent election be held, under the Board's supervision, to determine whether or not a representative had been designated by a majority of the employees throughout the system. Karn pointed out that although the C. I. O. was requesting bargaining rights only for the employees at Saginaw, Flint, and Bay City, any wage increase granted would be made system-wide. The C. I. O. would not consent to an election, and the parties left the conference in disagreement. The C. I. O. communicated with Governor Murphy, of Michigan, and a meeting of the respondent and the C. I. O. was arranged and held in the governor's office on May 11. Governor Murphy heard the opposing contentions and suggested that negotiations be continued, but that in the event of another deadlock, the parties should return to him. Negotiations were resumed in Saginaw on May 12, 13, and 14. Toward the close of the meeting on May 14, the respondent requested an adjournment of negotiations until May 18. The C. I. O. protested against the delay and attempted unsuccessfully to communicate with Governor Murphy, then in New York, but succeeded in

A. 2d), where the court said: "But the problem is not to be approached from the standpoint of vicarious liability. It is to be approached as a question of fact, namely, what will be the result upon commerce of a labor dispute between the petitioners and their employees."

reaching Homer Martin, of the U. A. W., who thereafter participated in the negotiations. On May 17, the respondent's representatives appeared at the Board's regional office in Detroit where, they claimed, the C. I. O. was to meet with them for discussion of a possible election. The C. I. O., however, did not make an appearance at Detroit, claiming that it had made no agreement to meet there. The respondent returned to the regional office in Detroit on the following day, May 18, while the C. I. O. waited in Saginaw, in accordance with the joint agreement of May 14. As a protest against the respondent's failure to attend the meeting in Saginaw on May 18, a strike was called at noon, May 19. Switches were pulled in Saginaw, Bay City, and some sections of Flint. Power was cut off and the power plants were picketed. At 9 o'clock that night, power and light service were restored following an arrangement made with Governor Murphy for a meeting with the respondent at his office the next day. Negotiations were resumed in Saginaw on May 21, when a meeting was scheduled for May 24, in New York City, at which Wendell L. Willkie, president of the respondent, and John L. Lewis, representing the C. I. O., were to be present. No agreement as to wage increases was reached at the conference in New York, and further negotiations continued in Saginaw from May 25 to June 4. On the latter date, the respondent's office employees in Flint, who had enrolled during the formation of the local in that city, went on strike in protest against the respondent's insistence that they be omitted from the bargaining unit. On June 8, negotiations were resumed in Washington, D. C., where, at about 11 o'clock that night, a contract was signed, the signatories being Willkie and Lewis.

Word that an agreement had been reached and signed was not immediately received by employees waiting in Flint, and at 2:30 a. m., June 9, another strike was called. Power was cut off in Flint, Saginaw, and Bay City, with the exception of circuits supplying hospitals, dairies, the sewage-disposal plant, jails, and other institutions. The strike did not cease until 5 or 6 o'clock in the afternoon of June 9.

The agreement of June 8, 1937, applied to all operating employees of the respondent who were or might become members of the U. A. W. or its successor, applications already having been made to the parent organization, the C. I. O., for charters covering utility workers. The agreement excluded all supervisory employees, both crew and general foremen, assistant foremen, load dispatchers, office employees, clerks, accountants, secretaries handling confidential matters, and appliance salesmen. The respondent agreed not to bargain collectively with any other organization during the life of the contract, which was to remain in force until March 1, 1938. It covered wage rates, hours, working conditions, and other matters, and established a procedure for the handling of grievances.

In December 1937, as a result of negotiations, the agreement was modified in some respects. Also in December, the C. I. O. formally requested that February 1, 1938, be fixed as the date for the opening of negotiations looking toward a new agreement. Actual negotiations for this purpose were begun on February 10. Prior to the expiration date of the original contract, a 30-day extension period was mutually decided upon.

Prior to the beginning of these negotiations in February, two other labor organizations had obtained some membership among the respondent's employees: The Independent, and International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, herein called the I. B. E. W., the latter being affiliated with the A. F. of L. The organization of the Independent is discussed at length in section III–B below. The record in this proceeding does not show the form or extent of the organization of the I. B. E. W.

On January 20, 1938, the Independent protested to the respondent against further negotiations with the C. I. O. until majority representatives had been determined, although at that time the Independent had not sought an election. On February 3, the respondent replied to this protest, stating that it had unsuccessfully sought an election by the consent of all parties before the original agreement was signed with the C. I. O. in June 1937. In the same letter, the respondent pointed out that the I. B. E. W. had filed a petition for investigation and certification with the Board. Subsequently, on February 23, 1938, the Independent filed its petition for investigation and certification. The I. B. E. W. filed its petition on February 2, 1938.

On February 25, a temporary injunction was issued by the Jackson County court, in a suit brought by the Independent, restraining the respondent from entering into an agreement with the C. I. O. The C. I. O. filed an ancillary bill of complaint and joined with the respondent in its motion to dismiss the Independent's complaint and to set aside the temporary injunction. On March 31, the respondent notified the C. I. O. that the "status quo" of their relationship would be observed by it until the injunction was lifted or modified, but no longer than 10 days from the date of notification. The injunction was dismissed on April 2, 1938.

Not until the week preceding April 1 did the negotiations between the C. I. O. and the respondent, which began on February 10, reach the state of definite discussion of wage rates for the different classifications of employees. As the close of the 30-day extension period approached, and no agreement on the wage scale appeared imminent, the C. I. O. requested continuation of the existing wage scale for a year. The respondent countered with an offer to "peg the wages" for a period of 3 months. No compromise was reached, and on April 1, members of the C. I. O. excluded the supervisory employees from a number of gas, steam electric, and other plants in Saginaw, Bay City, Flint, and Lansing, and assumed operation of the plants. They occupied these plants until April 4, 1938. On that day, Governor Murphy called a meeting of officials of the respondent and the C. I. O. in Detroit. At the Governor's suggestion, and because of the continued controversy concerning majority representation, the respondent agreed to extend the existing contract 4 months, or until August 4, 1938.

B. Formation of, interference with, and support of the Independent; interference, restraint, and coercion

1. The Letter of June 11, 1937

At the time of the signing of the June 8 contract, no local of the C. I. O. had been started at Jackson, where the respondent's headquarters are located; nor had any other labor organization displayed activity among the respondent's employees in the Jackson division. It is significant, therefore, that almost immediately after the signing of the June 8 contract, an undetermined number of Jackson employees should have received a mimeographed letter, Board exhibit 18, purporting to come from room 306 of the Consumers' Power Co. building, the executive headquarters of the respondent. The letter is dated June 11, 1938, and reads as follows:

JACKSON, MICH., June 11, 1937.

DEAR FELLOW EMPLOYEE: Events of the past few weeks have given cause for grave concern to all employees of Consumers Power Co. By this time, no doubt, you have received a copy of an agreement of limited scope between Consumers Power Co. and the United Automobile Workers of America. You, no doubt, appreciate that in fairness to all employees, the company will extend to all employees any advantages accruing as the result of this agreement.

We believe that the general attitude of the majority of the employees in this connection is one of genuine loyalty to the company and its management. Appreciating the peculiar nature of the business and mindful of the many unfair and, in some instances, vindicative [sic] measures it has been subjected to, we feel that we employees are much better qualified to negotiate with the management concerning any grievances, working conditions, rates of pay, etc., that may arise.

The recent trend, as evidenced by the Wagner National Labor Relations Act, indicates that henceforth relations between employee and employer will be dealt with by collective bargaining between the management and representatives of employee groups. In this event, what is the position of the average, responsible, and fair employee of Consumers Power Co.? In our opinion, the following is about our position.

The employee may elect not to join any union or other form of labor or employee organization. In that event he may later, through no fault of his own, find himself without adequate representation.

Or, the employee may elect to join one of the existing labor organizations, such as the A. F. of L. or the U. A. W. A. In that event, based upon the history of the last few months, he may find his relations with his employer handled by representatives, not of his own choosing, having no knowledge of the business and working conditions, whose actions and decisions are dictated by outside influences and whose interest is apparently mainly of a pecuniary character.

Or, the employees may elect, as we hereby propose, to band themselves together in a solid, loyal, and truly representative-employee organization free of any outside influence. We feel that such an organization with representatives in all departments and all divisions can better represent and settle fairly with management any and all questions that may arise.

We are enclosing a confidential card which we ask that you return to us at once signifying your cooperation in this undertaking. Upon receipt of these cards it is the intention to proceed at once to the formation of such an employee organization.

Yours truly,

CONSUMERS POWER EMPLOYEES' COMMITTEE.

Accompanying this letter was a pledge card, Board exhibit 19, which reads as follows:

To Consumers Power Employees' Committee:

I am fully in accord with the statements made by the committee for an employee organization to protect my interests, and I hereby pledge my cooperation and assistance.

Signed _____ Department _____
Division_____

The return envelope, Board exhibit 20, accompanying the letter and pledge card, reads:

Consumers Power Employees' Committee,
Consumers Power Co. Building, Room 306,
Jackson, Mich.

The identity of the "Consumers Power Employees' Committee" is not revealed in the record. Vice Presidents Arthur and Karn denied knowledge of the letter, both as to authorship and distribution. Arthur testified that for the past 2 years room 306 has been used as a storeroom. In June 1937, room 307 was occupied by Supervisor Haroldson, who has charge of gas sales and is employed by Commonwealth & Southern. The other adjacent office was an assembly room for meter readers and appliance salesmen. Executives of the respondent and Commonwealth & Southern have offices on the same floor. Arthur declared that no record of mail distribution is kept, and that he had no knowledge as to the disposition of any return cards which might have been received in reply to the letter.

An undetermined quantity of the return cards were in the office of John Markle, general foreman of the Jackson division. Markle has complete charge of all crews operating in the Jackson division. There were 20 such crews at the time of the hearing. His immediate superior is L. E. Southard, electrical superintendent of the same division. Markle hires, discharges, and transfers, and is the man to whom all crew foremen, city foremen, and line crew employees under his jurisdiction look for supervisory advice and instruction.

Markle had knowledge of the letter. While being examined by counsel for the Board concerning the distribution to the employees of copies of the June 8 contract, he testified that he had received a "group" of the "books" to be passed out to the men, and that a letter accompanied the books. Counsel for the Board handed Markle Board Exhibit 18, and inquired if it appeared to be a copy of the letter which, according to his testimony, had accompanied the contracts. Markle examined the document and returned it to Board's counsel with the comment, "Well, this letter was posted on the bulletin board."

"Q. At the service plant?
"A. Yes.
"Q. At about the same time?
"A. Yes.
"Q. For how long—a couple, a day or two?
"A. I wouldn't be surprised if one of them was on there yet.
"Q. At any rate, it was posted?
"A. I don't know for sure. Yes. I don't know for sure whether it is down there.
"Q. Who posted it, did you post it?
"A. Well, that is something I couldn't say. * * *
"Q. Do you know where it came from?
"A. No not directly."

Following a brief recess, Markle was questioned further about this letter on redirect examination by the respondent's counsel. This time he vigorously denied ever having seen the letter, insisted that he had not read the exhibit when it was presented to him by counsel for the Board, and accused the latter of "pulling a fast one" on him. At this point the trial examiner declared for the record, "* * * from my own observation, I know that the witness did read at least the first page of that letter."

Earl C. Parker, Markle's assistant, who is himself in charge of a number of crew foremen, testified for the respondent some days later. When shown a series of bulletins and letters from the management, already in evidence, Parker denied ever having seen them, although some of them should have come to his attention as a supervisor. He was shown Board exhibit 18 and denied recollection of having seen it anywhere. He was then shown Board exhibit 19, the return card above referred to. This he identified, "Yes, I remember seeing that, seeing that card there. I saw that." Asked if it was in the possession of some employee, he replied, "No, if I remember right, there was quite a bunch of those. It was down at the service building one time."

"Q. Where in the service building? Markle's office?
"A. No; I don't think they were in Markle's office, I think they were—well, it would be Markle's office, too."

Although from the testimony of Parker, reasonable doubt may exist as to the accuracy of Markle's recollection that Board Exhibit 18 was posted on the bulletin board by him or anyone else, we find that he had knowledge of the letter, and that the return cards were in his office.

Leo C. Jensen, one of the three employees who later assumed leadership in organizing the Independent, admitted that he had heard that the letter had been circulated, had read it, and had taken part in discussion of its contents with other men in the gas-production department. It is significant that Jensen, Harry Bowersox, and Ed Youman,[8] the three men had led the organizational activity for the Independent, all came from the same department, one of those in which the letter of June 11 is known to have been read and discussed.

We find that the respondent caused the letter of June 11, the card, and the return envelope, to be circulated among its Jackson employees. We find further that they were an important factor in the formation of the Independent. Although some time elapsed between the issuance of the letter and the taking of the first formal steps toward formation of the type of organization proposed by it, the letter clearly showed the attitude of the respondent regarding the type of union which it favored. This aspect of the case is further discussed in section III B 7, below.

2. Early Antiunion Activity of Markle

Prior to the actual incorporation of the Independent and the solicitation of members in its behalf in Jackson, Markle pursued a course of conduct which was calculated to, and did, reveal to many of the respondent's Jackson employees that the respondent vigorously disapproved of the C. I. O. The effect of this campaign was to clear and harrow the ground for the fostered growth of the Independent.

A C. I. O. local was formed in Jackson during July 1937. On August 4, according to his own admission, Markle attempted to attend a C. I. O. meeting, and sharply denounced a number of employees because of their union activity. Among the employees warned by Markle on this occasion, and whose testimony was substantially confirmed by Markle himself, were Clarence E. "Red" Burke, Verne "Butch" Devine, and Murl Bolenbaugh. Markle stood across the street, observing the men as they came to the meeting. Burke testified that Markle told him that he "was making a hell of a big mistake," and urged him to "use his head." Burke overheard Markle tell other employees "not to be a damn fool." Bolenbaugh testified that Markle "wanted to know if I didn't think I was making a mistake, and that these C. I. O. fellows was pretty smart, and that they was smarter than he was and for me to watch my step."

Markle's own testimony is significant. He admitted that on "the day of August 4—on Wednesday, there was passed around * * * in a whispered voice about a union meeting. * * * I didn't know at that time there was any union activities in the Jackson division. * * * I went down there of my own personal self to see what it was all about. * * * I was on my own time, figured it was on my own time. * * * I went up in the hall and looked around * * * nobody that I knew, so I came back down * * * and went across the street and stood around a little while. * * * Burke was surprised to see me. He came over and talked to me a few minutes. * * * They didn't like my language, I guess, and they went across the road." Markle admitted expressing himself in vigorous terms, but indicated that his words were mainly addressed to an organizer with Burke; and he admitted having about the same talk with employees Devine, McFayte, and Bolenbaugh. He declared that the men "kept milling around waiting for me to leave, or something, that is my decision of it, anyway, so I finally went on down the road." In view of Markle's admissions, we believe the testimony of the C. I. O. members described above.

On the following Friday, August 6, when employees came to him for their pay checks, Markle admitted that he "asked if they would all wait a second." The door was closed; about 60 men were present. "I held one pay check up in front of me, asked them to do the same. I * * * asked them if that didn't look like a pretty good pay check. * * * I told them there wasn't a man in the crowd that ever worked for me, that ever had to buy me a glass of beer, cigar, or a loaf of bread, to hold his job, he never would have to." His meaning, he admitted, was that "no man had to join a union to hold his job with the power company." Thus, Markle, by positive action, demonstrated his resentment against the respondent's employees joining the C. I. O.

3. The Transfer of Clarence E. Burke

When Burke reported for work the morning after the meeting of August 4, he was transferred by Markle from the crew on which he had served continuously for 8 years. He had been attached to the crew known as Oliver's, one of the two crews classed by Markle as being top or special crews in the Jackson division, maintained for word "on all energized wire." The remaining 18 crews under his supervision, according to Markle's description, "work out on rural lines where there is no energized wires for them to come in contact with. In other words, they work what we call everything dead." At the time of Burke's transfer, Oliver's crew consisted of 2 first-class linemen, of whom Burke was one, 2 second-class linemen, 1 apprentice lineman, and 1 groundman, with a crew foreman in charge.

The crew to which Burke was transferred on August 5, and with which he remained for 2 months, until he was returned to his old crew following a grievance meeting with the management, was known as Gilmore's crew. L. M. Gilmore is listed as a first-class lineman, but acts in the capacity of a foreman. Until Burke's temporary transfer to it, Gilmore's crew had consisted of Gilmore and two groundmen. At the time of the hearing it was again a three-man crew. Gilmore himself described his job as that of "maintenance of street lighting, and taking care of underground vaults."

Markle admitted that he transferred Burke to Gilmore's crew on August 5. The reasons which he gave for the transfer, however, are not wholly consistent. He first declared that, having observed Burke to be active in the C. I. O., and having placed him in temporary charge of the crew the previous Monday for the week of Oliver's vacation, "I knew it was no place for a crew foreman to be, acting as an organizer and running a crew." He later explained that Burke was transferred to Gilmore's crew, "especially that date, to put in a primary metering installation for the Hardy Manufacturing at Hudson." He insisted that Burke's experience was needed on this job.

The respondent offers no testimony to show that the efficiency of Oliver's crew suffered during the first 3 days of that week, although Burke had joined the C. I. O. in July, or that Burke had attempted to organize on company time. The contention that Markle was sincerely concerned with the propriety of Burke's seeming to serve two masters fails to explain why Burke, when the regular foreman returned from his vacation, was not returned to the position which he had filled on Oliver's crew for 8 years.

Upon completion of the brief Hudson job, Gilmore's crew returned to Jackson, and resumed the task at which it had been occupied since the preceding April, the removal of steel trolley poles along Jackson's main street. This work consisted mainly of cutting down the poles with acetylene torches and trucking them to the pole yard, and was hardly on an equal plane with Markle's definition of a top lineman's customary duties. During the period before his return to Oliver's crew, Burke was also assigned to the task of cleaning insects from the boulevard lighting globes. This assignment was made in the fall, although Markle testified that this work was ordinarily performed "right after Christmas and in the summertime, early spring, rather, right after the smoke season." This variance from custom is not explained in the record. Burke testified that he felt this assignment to be "humiliating" for a top lineman, and that comment upon it became general in other parts of the system.

It is difficult to conform the facts surrounding Burke's demotion in duties to any explanation but that it was an expression of resentment against his union activities and an attempt to discourage such activities. Soon after the transfer, Markle passed by Burke and Devine at the service station and asked "how all the rats were." When Burke inquired as to which one he meant, Markle replied, "If the coat fits you, you can slip it on." We are persuaded that the transfer of Burke described above was a demotion, and that it was made with the purpose of discouraging union activity.

4. The Pole-Yard Transfer

The pole yard is a storage area for poles, transformers, and pipe used in the Jackson division. Poles of varying lengths are brought into the yard by rail, piled on bunks and piers, where they remain until hauled away for line-construction jobs. At one corner of the yard a large stock of transformers is stored; in one of two small buildings transformers are cleaned and repaired, while in the other pipe and sundry supplies are kept.

One crew, under Foreman Wayne Frushard, is regularly assigned to the pole yard. This crew unloads and draws poles, and since late in 1936 has spent much time at the task of replacing the old cement piers which are inadequate to support the weight of the poles which had increased as the respondent supplanted cedar with pine. Markle testified that the work of replacing the old piers was given to employees who otherwise might have been laid off during slack periods in line construction, instead of employing an outside contractor and labor. Respondent exhibit 42 contains a list of employees who have worked at various times at the pole yard from January 1, 1937, to May 9, 1938. This exhibit, however, does not disclose the exact nature of the work which the men performed on the duties cited. It appears, for example, that on infrequent occasions an entire crew may, in the course of its regular line-construction duties, put in all or part of a day at the pole yard loading the poles necessary for its job.

Despite Markle's insistence that work in the pole yard is more desirable than digging holes for poles, or climbing the creosote-impregnated poles on a hot day, his own testimony shows clearly that, with the exception of the few who have charge of work there, steady employment in the pole yard ranks below that of construction and maintenance crews. In commenting upon Frushard's crew he stated: "* * * when these men that I gave Frushard showed ability to want to go ahead, could go ahead, I take them off of there and put them in another ground crew that was putting on arms and things like that, gave them a chance to work up."

Frushard's crew, at the time of the hearing, was composed of employees Niles M. Sowle, William Tuippi, and one Halsey. Markle testified that these men were assigned to this crew because they had been given ample opportunity to become linemen, but had lacked the necessary qualifications. Although some significance might be attached to the fact that both Tuippi and Halsey were suddenly discovered to be lacking in linemen's requisites shortly after they joined the C. I. O., in 1937, it cannot be found that their transfer to, or continuance in, the pole yard was directed at their union activity. The case of Sowle is discussed in section III B 5 below.

Verne Devine, whom Markle admitted having seen with Burke on the night of August 4, was ordered to the pole yard Friday morning, August 6, where he cleaned transformers that day and August 9, before being transferred to Oliver's crew. Until the transfer of August, Devine had served on the same crew for about 8 years, although for a part of that time he was under a different foreman. There is no evidence that he had ever before been assigned to the task of cleaning transformers. Devine is rated as a "top" lineman. Husker's crew, to which he had been attached, is the crew which, with Oliver's crew, was characterized as "special" by Markle. It does not appear that, with the exception of his 2-day assignment in the pole yard, Devine's transfers from Husker's to Oliver's crew can be considered as demotions, either in fact or in effect.

Markle's explanation of the 2-day pole-yard episode, however, is confused and conflicting. He declared that Husker had asked to have Devine transferred out, because he was slowing up on the job. Markle asserted that prior to the transfer he and Husker had discussed Devine's membership in the C. I. O., and that Husker believed Devine was using his affiliation with the union as a leverage to lay down on the job. Furthermore, he testified, he had himself observed Devine absolutely stand around on top of the pole and not do a thing, waiting for somebody to catch him standing there. Markle placed his discussion with Husker as at least 6 days before the meeting of August 4. This testimony is in serious conflict with his following answer on cross-examination:

"Question. Did you know that Devine was a member of the C. I. O. when you took him off Husker's crew and put him on Oliver's?

"Answer. No, sir; I didn't."

It is clearly established that Markle did see Devine, among others, at the C. I. O. meeting of August 4, and that, among others, Devine was summarily transferred to other duties in the pole yard. There is no evidence that Devine, when ordered to the pole yard, was informed that he would later be attached to Oliver's crew.

Of the six men in Husker's crew in early August 1937, four had joined the C. I. O. at or before the meeting of August 4—Oscar W. Anderson, Willard Freemire, William Hendershot, and Devine. All but Devine soon resigned from the union. Devine, as has been noted, was transferred on the following day to the pole yard, and eventually to another crew. Freemire went to the pole yard on August 6, and remained there August 9 and 10, the next 2 working days. All of Husker's crew was in the pole yard on August 10, but the testimony shows that the service on the 10th was in the regular line of duty in obtaining materials for construction work.

Freemire, called as a witness by the respondent, had been elected an officer of the C. I. O. the night of August 4. He was present at Markle's pay-check lecture. He stated that he did not consider the assignment of August 6 and 9 to be a punishment or unusual, although he could not recall that he had ever been removed from his crew for pole-yard service since he had joined Hucker's gang in June 1936. Excavating piers, according to Markle's own testimony, is not work regularly assigned to second-class linemen, the rating held by Freemire. Markle's explanation of Freemire's transfer on August 6, that Husker's crew was "overloaded," is weakened by the testimony of Anderson, first-class lineman called by the respondent, who admitted that, at the time Devine and Freemire were transferred, Husker's crew was consistently busy in the normal way.

Anderson was not present at the C. I. O. meeting of August 4, but admitted having heard that Markle was there. He also admitted that sometime during August, and obviously before he resigned from the C. I. O., Markle stopped him in front of the service building and asked if he belonged to the C. I. O., to which he replied that he did.

Hendershot, another first-class lineman on Husker's crew, admitted never having seen a first-class lineman, with the exception of Devine, transferred to the pole yard for detached duty. Hendershct had joined the C. I. O. in July, paid dues for the month of August, and then let his membership lapse. He was present at the meeting of August 4, and admitted having heard "some things" about Markle's sending C. I. O. members to the pole yard.

We find that Devine and Freemire were transferred to the pole yard by the respondent for the purpose of discouraging activity on behalf of the C. I. O.; that Freemire withdrew from the C. I. O. because of his transfer; and that Anderson and Hendershot withdrew from the C. I. O. because of Markle's hostility to C. I. O. activity, manifested by the transfers and attendant circumstances described herein.

Further evidence of a purpose on the part of the respondent to discourage union activity by transferring new C. I. O. members to the pole yard is found in testimony concerning Meier's crew, also under Markle's supervision. Early in August 1937, Meier's crew included Tuippi, Simmons, Hammond, Thompson, Murphy, and Sponsler. All but Sponsler had joined the C. I. O. on or before August 4, and of these five, all but Simmons attended the union meeting that night.

Hammond was transferred to the pole yard the day following the meeting, and was kept there August 5, 6, 16, and 17. He was on vacation during the interim between August 6 and 16. Murphy was assigned to the pole yard August 6. Thompson worked in the pole yard from August 9 to 16.

Hammond was secretary of the newly formed C. I. O. local, and Murphy was a trustee. Soon after their pole yard assignment, however, Hammond, Murphy, and Thompson withdrew from the C. I. O. The three men were called to testify by the respondent; all of them denied dropping out of the C. I. O. because of the pole yard incident, and Murphy, although he joined the C. I. O. on August 3, explained his withdrawal therefrom as follows: "It seemed like all the rest of the members had petty grievances of some sort they were nursing, and I didn't have any grievance like the rest of them."

Murphy talked with Markle on Monday morning, August 9, the next working day following his assignment to the pole yard, and was thereafter instructed to join another crew, stringing poles in the country, until Meier's crew should be reassembled on August 16. None of the men on the crew to which he was temporarily assigned had been present at the C. I. O. meeting of August 4. Under all the circumstances, we find that the respondent induced the withdrawal of Murphy from the C. I. O. by transferring him to the pole yard.

Hammond quit the C. I. O. upon return from his vacation, and was then transferred back to Meier's crew. Although denying that his pole yard experience had anything to do with his withdrawal from the C. I. O., Hammond admitted that he had heard others comment upon Markle's presence outside the union meeting, and that he had been present when Markle lectured the employees on their pay checks. Asked by the Board's counsel, "Did you get the idea that Markle was friendly toward unions, from his statements there," Hammond replied, "Oh, I don't know—it was his own opinion."

Recorded facts in respondent exhibit 42 refute Markle's testimony that Hammond was sent to the pole yard only because other members of Meier's crew were on vacation. Hammond was assigned there 2 days prior to the vacation period, and remained there 2 days after Meier's crew was reassembled following the vacation. In view of all the circumstances, and because Markle's testimony is in contradiction with his own records, it must be found that Hammond's transfer to the pole yard was designed to induce his withdrawal from membership in the C. I. O.

Thompson was in the pole yard from August 9 to 18, during the week that other members of his crew were on vacation. He admitted having talked privately with Markle, following the general foreman's pay-check lecture on August 6, and recalled that both Hammond and Murphy had been transferred from his crew prior to the vacation week. He insisted that his conversation with Markle did not relate to the pole-yard transfers. While the evidence is insufficient to show that the assignment of Thompson to the pole yard was an act of discrimination on the part of Markle, we find that Thompson's resignation from the C. I. O. is attributable to the action taken against his crew mates Hammond and Murphy, who were officers of the newly formed C. I. O. local.

Simmons worked in the pole yard during the week following his vacation, but admittedly at his own request. On the day of his return from vacation, he was instructed to report for work in Hudson. He protested against this transfer to another town, declaring that he was being removed from Meier's crew in disregard of seniority. Markle pointed out that he was handling such matters, but permitted Simmons to remain in Jackson another week, to take care of personal details, and work in the pole yard. The record shows that both Thompson and Murphy were employed after Simmons, but Markle maintained that Simmons had been originally hired for Hudson service, although he had subsequently exchanged jobs with a Jackson employee, and that therefore he was properly selected to return to Hudson. Markle's denial of knowledge that Simmons was a C. I. O. member is contradicted by the testimony of one of his own foremen, Robert M. McDonald, in charge of the two Hudson crews. Donald W. Darby, a Hudson employee, testified that McDonald, just before Simmons was transferred there, informed "the whole bunch" that "we have got a C. I. O. member coming down," and told them that every time he was thrown in the lake they would get a case of beer. McDonald admitted the incident in substance, but characterized the offer as a joke. While in Jackson, McDonald explained, he had been told by Markle that Simmons was to be transferred to his supervision. At the same time he overheard men in Markle's office "laughing and talking" about "someone offering a case of beer to anybody * * * that threw any C. I. O. member in the creek or river or lake, * * * and I don't know to this day who offered the case of beer." McDonald declared that he almost always tells "the boys anything I found out in the way of gossip." There is no evidence that Simmons was ever molested.

The testimony of many witnesses shows that it was known generally in the Jackson district that transfers of C. I. O. members to the pole yard had been made. As noted above, crews commonly made short stops in this storage area to get supplies. On these visits they were able to see that the transferred men were no longer engaged in their regular duties.

The events described above persuade us that Markle made use of the device of transferring men to the pole yard for the purpose of discouraging the C. I. O. activity which he had discovered. It also appears clearly that the device was effective in several cases. It should be noted that all six men who, as mentioned above, withdrew from the C. I. O. in mid-August, at the time of or subsequent to the pole yard transfers, later became members of the Independent. Although some of the men in question testified that the transfers were not the cause of their dropping from membership in the C. I. O., we do not believe this testimony. The series of events described above convinces us that these men were intimidated and that that intimidation continued to have effect up to the time of the hearing before the trial examiner.

5. The Transfer of Niles M. Sowle

On or about September 1, 1937, Lisle Goff, a gas trouble man at Jackson, was called into Markle's office. Goff is a brother-in-law of Sowle, an apprentice lineman mentioned above as being a member of Frushard's pole-yard crew. Goff, who is a member of the Independent, testified that Markle first inquired if Sowle was a relation of his. Upon receiving an affirmative answer, Markle said, "If you do see him—will you try and see him and tell him not to have anything to do with the C. I. O."; and further, "if he thought anything of his job, tell him not to have anything to do with the C. I. O." Goff's testimony was unrefuted.

About a month later Sowle was instructed by Markle to report for work at Jonesville. Sowle protested against the transfer, pointing out that men with less seniority than himself were being kept in Jackson. Markle told him that he was being sent to Jonesville as a promotion. Sowle reported as instructed, and was sent out with a line truck and crew, supervised by Foreman Myles Beattie. That noon, according to his testimony, Sowle found his lunch box "full of grease," and that night the air had been let out of his automobile tires. The following noon, he testified, "after I had ate part of my sandwiches I found there was something in them which smelled like kerosene." He was sick that night, and under the care of a physician for 2 weeks thereafter. Immediately upon his return to Jackson from Jonesville, Sowle reported his experience to Burke, head of his local, and Burke entered a complaint with Superintendent Southard, Markle's superior. When Sowle reported for work 2 weeks later, Southard "apologized" to him and said "it wouldn't happen again." Sowle was told that Foreman Beattie had been laid off for a week, that half of the crew at Jonesville had been "put on breaking up scrap iron at the waterworks at Reading, and the other half had been put tearing down the chimney in Jonesville." Sowle was questioned on this point by the respondent's counsel:

"Q. And you understood, did you, from Mr. Southard's conversation that the punishment that he spoke of as to the crew and the foreman was because of their action in connection with you?

"A. That is what I understood."

Foreman Beattie and members of his crew were called by the respondent, and all denied tampering with Sowle's food or tires. Beattie, however, admitted that he had been told by Parker, prior to Sowle's transfer from Jackson, that a new man was being sent to him and "that he belonged to the C. I. O., to be very careful there was nothing done to injure him any way." He denied knowledge as to why Parker should voice this caution, "other than he always tells me to be very careful of any new man he gives me." Parker admitted the advice, and gave as a reason for it the fear of possible accident, and the fact that he was "proud of the safety record." Questioned further by the Board's counsel:

"Q. When you told Beattie that Sowle was coming over and he was a C. I. O. man, why did you bother to go on and warn him against discrimination?

"A. I thought that he ought to know if he belonged to the C. I. O. I understood that he did, that he was a C. I. O. member. Being a foreman of a crew, I thought it was to his advantage to know that he belonged to the C. I. O."

Although Southard assured Sowle that Beattie had been punished by a 1-week lay-off, it is revealed by Board exhibit 64, his payroll record, that the latter was in fact rewarded. On the Friday prior to October 18, Southard informed him that he would be laid off the following week. During the week of this announcement, Beattie was credited with 12 hours overtime at time and a half. He was absent from duty from Monday through Friday, October 18 to 22, but on the succeeding Saturday and Sunday put in 8 hours at time and a half and 8 hours at double time. During the week preceding October 18, he earned $19.80 above his regular weekly rate, and during the week of his lay-off he received $30.49. The exhibit shows that for the 3-week period preceding, during and following his lay-off, he earned the sum of $138.60, an average of $2.20 per week above his regular weekly rate. Beattie testified that during the week preceding his appearance on the stand he got in 3 hours' overtime, and that some weeks he averages more, and some less. It is evident that Beattie, in effect, received a 5-day vacation with pay.

We are convinced that the transfer of Sowle to Jonesville was made because of his membership in the C. I. O., with the expectation that he would be mistreated there. The warning given to Sowle through Goff, the advance notice of his arrival in Jonesville as a C. I. O. member, and the other facts described above leave room for no other conclusion.

Markle's active efforts to discourage membership in the C. I. O., in the Jackson division were the subject of negotiations between management and C. I. O. representatives at a meeting on October 12. The latter demanded that Markle be discharged. This action the management refused to take, despite the fact that Southard had given him a warning in a letter dated August 9. Arthur testified that on the same day, October 12, he threatened Markle with disciplinary measures "if he would be guilty of any such discrimination in the future." On the following night Arthur called a meeting of managers and general and crew foremen, "to acquaint these men with their responsibility to the company in maintaining a neutral attitude toward any labor organization." Subsequent to October 12, Markle engaged in no further antiunion activity, nor were any complaints made by the C. I. O. concerning such activity on his part.

6. Other Discouragement of Union Activity

The record contains evidence of other incidents of interference and coercion on the part of responsible agents of the respondent, although mainly of minor and cumulative nature. These occurrences indicate that, while its activity became less apparent, the respondent continued to express disapproval of, and to discourage membership in, the C. I. O., not only subsequent to Southard's letter to Markle of August 9, but after Arthur's warning to all foremen in October.

Donald W. Darby, a Hudson employee, testified that in mid-January 1938 he was interviewed while on the job by McDonald, city foreman at Hudson. McDonald called Darby to his car and asked him why he had joined the C. I. O. Darby replied that he did not like the way things were being run down there. McDonald told him, "Well, you know I will catch the devil for it." McDonald admitted Darby's testimony in substance, but explained that he feared Darby had something against him personally.

Some indication of Foreman McDonald's early attitude toward the C. I. O., before the Jackson local was formed, is established by the unrefuted testimony of Clark D. Bolenbaugh, a Hudson employee. Bolenbaugh declared that when McDonald passed out printed copies of the June 8 agreement to employees in Hudson he said, "We wasn't under those agreements and we didn't have to sign up anything, that we would get our same rights." McDonald's active support of the Independent is discussed below.

7. Organization of the Independent

We have previously discussed the responsibility of the respondent for the letter of June 11, 1937. The events which followed its issuance show its connection with the formation of the independent.

The independent first appeared in the open on or about September 21, 1937. The three leaders were Leo C. Jensen, Harry Bowersox, and Ed Youman, all maintenance men employed at the respondent's gas-production plant in Jackson. Youman became the first president, and was later succeeded by Jensen, who was president at the time of these proceedings. Youman was not called to testify at the hearing. Although both Jensen and Bowersox testified that they had entertained the idea of such an organization, and Jensen declared that he had even discussed it, prior to June 1937, it must be borne in mind that no concrete steps were taken with regard to formation of the independent until after the receipt and discussion of the letter of June 11, in effect a circularized proposal from the management.

During the summer following the issuance of the June 11 letter, Bowersox consulted Wirt King, Jr., who was at that time a member of the firm of counsel which represented the respondent in these proceedings, with reference to the formation of an independent organization of the respondent's employees. Bowersox did not testify as to this conference with King, but Jensen, to whom Bowersox reported, recalled that Bowersox understood that King "could be retained for that purpose." There were no further activities toward the formation of an organization, however, until after the end of the summer, and the commencement of activity on behalf of the C. I. O. in Jackson.

Bowersox and Jensen sent invitations to employees throughout the system to attend a meeting, scheduled for September 21, at the Colonial Theater in Jackson. On that date about 200 employees gathered to hear one Joe Allen, an employee of the Michigan Bell Telephone Co., describe the set-up of the independent organization of that company. Jensen testified that Allen had been suggested to him by some other employee. Wendell Bather, plant chemist at the Jackson gas plant, presided, at Jensen's request. Representatives of various departments were selected at this meeting to convene at a later date.

Among the supervisors and foremen who attended the Colonial Theater meeting were Parker, Markle's assistant; Joseph A. "Red" Sheets, in charge of three tree-trimming crews and their foremen; and McDonald, in charge of the crews and foremen at Hudson. Sheets was nominated "for some office," but did not accept. McDonald was selected as a Hudson representative. In direct contrast to Markle's vigorous disapproval of employees joining the C. I. O. and his surveillance of that organization's meeting on August 4, the attendance and participation of his assistant Parker and two other supervisors at the first gathering of the independent served as genuine support, by agents of the respondent, to the latter organization.

Although the exact sequence of events is not clear, it appears that soon after the Colonial Theater meeting petitions were passed among employees in the Jackson division upon which they indicated their support of an independent organization. One of these petitions appears in the record as Board exhibit 36, and was drawn up, according to his own testimony, by McDonald. The typewritten heading of this exhibit originally read:

"We, the undersigned, are interested in an independent labor bargaining [sic] organization, and authorize K. Reed and R. McDonald to act as our representative."

McDonald called a meeting of all his Hudson employees, following the Colonial Theater gathering, outlined the purpose of the independent, and then helped Kenneth Reed, a Hudson employee, line up some of the men in his crews. A majority of the 26 employees whose signature appears on Board exhibit 36 subsequently became members of the independent, although the petition itself was never returned to the officials of that organization. It is clear that McDonald, a supervisory employee, took an active part in the formation of the independent and contributed his support to it.

Sheets has charge of the respondent's tree-trimming crews in the Jackson division, consisting of 3 crew foremen and their 14 men, and is under the immediate supervision of Markle. Sheets admitted having attended the Colonial Theater meeting with his superior, Parker, and an employee, Kenneth Meek, and that he was then nominated for some office but did not accept. Frushard, foreman of the pole-yard crew, testified that Sheets and Meek drove into the yard one morning during working hours in Sheets' truck and that Meek got out and handed a sheet of paper to Frushard's truck driver. The driver could not read without glasses and passed the paper to his foreman, who read the heading aloud. The text of the heading, according to Frushard's recollection, was "I am in favor of an independent union and I will not join any other." Frushard testified that he declined Meek's invitation to sign it himself. Frushard also testified that Sheets asked Verne Stanfield to sign, and that Stanfield did so. Sowle, who was then working in the pole yard, testified substantially as did Frushard. Meek admitted the incident in part, recalling that "somebody," whom he could not identify, had given him the petition to be circulated at the service building, before accompanying Sheets to the pole yard that morning. Meek denied, however, that Sheets knew anything about his possession of the petition. Sheets denied any knowledge of the petition or that he had asked for the signature of Stanfield. Stanfield was not called on to testify. Both Sheets and Meek are in substantial agreement that their main errand, that morning, was to visit the pole yard and other crews before Meek took over a truck and tree-trimming crew as foreman.

In view of the fact that Sheets and Meek were close friends and had gone to the Colonial Theater meeting together, and the fact that no steps had as yet been taken by the leaders of the independent to exclude supervisory employees from participation in its affairs, we do not believe it possible that Sheets had no knowledge of the petition which Meek was carrying. The story of these two witnesses is unconvincing. We find that, as Sowle and Frushard testified, Sheets, together with Meek, solicited signatures on behalf of the independent.

Representatives of different departments, selected at the Colonial Theater meeting on September 21, including McDonald, met in a private dining room of the Hotel Hayes in Jackson a week or 10 days later. At this meeting Jensen and Bowersox were selected as a committee of two to seek legal advice looking toward incorporation of the independent. Bowersox sought the advice of Wirt King for a second time, subsequent to the meeting at the Hayes Hotel. On this occasion the attorney informed him that he would be unable to act for the organization, since he was retained to represent the respondent in other matters. Following King's refusal to serve as their legal adviser, Frank C. Painter was retained by Jensen and Bowersox. Painter drew up incorporation papers for the Independent, which were signed on October 13, and filed with the Michigan Corporation and Securities Commission on November 1, 1937.

Subsequent to the incorporation of the independent, its organizational efforts were projected beyond Jackson, into other centers of the respondent's system. Roy Lee Lepley, an employee of the respondent at Jonesville, testified that Beattie, the foreman of the crew to which Sowle was temporarily attached, was present at an organizational meeting of the independent held in Jonesville. The meeting was not held on company property, or during working hours, but Lepley testified that a number of other crew foremen were present, including Ray Randall, Dick Barger, Jonas Schumann, Rex Shea, Milton Smith, and Harold Kraft, practically all of the foremen with headquarters at Jonesville. None of these foremen with the exception of Beattie, were called by the respondent to testify. Beattie did not recall the meeting about which Lepley testified but denied that he had attended any independent meeting. One witness who testified on behalf of the respondent, denied that any foremen were present at the Jonesville meeting, although he also stated that he could not remember everyone who was there. Even if we accept Beattie's denial, concerning the weight of which there is some doubt, in view of the Sowle incident, the detailed testimony of Lepley as to the presence of other foremen appears to us more credible than the general denial described above. We find that by the presence of its agents at an organizational meeting, the respondent provided open support to the extension of the independent's activities to Jonesville.

Glenn Piper, line foreman at Ionia, was present at an organizational meeting of the independent, held south of Lansing, in February 1938. Vernon A. Burch, street department foreman in Flint, attended a similar meeting in that city during March 1938. Foreman Metzgar attended the Alma meeting which took place during February 1938, but was asked to leave. These cases are in marked contrast to the active discouragement of the formation of the C. I. O. local in Jackson, described above. Furthermore crew foremen continued to attend independent meetings even after they had been declared ineligible for participation in that organization.

8. Status of Foremen

Vice President Arthur testified that crew foremen direct the work of from 1 to 10 men, usually away from headquarters. Crews are of varying types, including line, street-department, trouble, tree-trimming, and transformer crews. The foremen are paid from $4 to $6 a week more than top linemen in their crews. They assign individual tasks to the men under them. Vice President Frank G. Boyce testified that crew foremen occasionally have the power to hire local labor. The recommendation of crew foremen as to general hiring is considered, although employment is ordinarily handled by the respondent's personnel department. Crew foremen have the power to recommend promotion, discharge, and discipline of the employees under them. When, in October 1937, Arthur called all supervisors in the Jackson division together to warn them against discriminatory acts, the crew foremen were included.

Thus, from the testimony of executive officers, as well as the employees themselves, it is clear that the respondent has conferred power upon its crew foremen which enables them effectively to coerce the employees and to interfere with their right to self-organization.

As described above, Markle, Parker, Sheets, and McDonald possess even greater supervisory powers than the crew foremen. The latter, looking to them for guidance, unquestionably charted their activities against the C. I. O. and in support of the independent in accordance with the course so clearly defined by their superiors.

C. Conclusions as to the unfair labor practices

Several of the occurrences discussed above, which constituted part of the respondent's dual campaign of discouraging membership in the C. I. O. and of encouraging membership in the independent, were, if considered alone, acts of interference with and coercion of its employees in their right of self-organization. Among these incidents are Markle's surveillance of the C. I. O. meeting on August 4, 1937, his disapproval of that organization and its activity so vigorously expressed on that occasion to a number of employees under his charge, and his lecture to some 60 employees 2 days later, when distributing pay checks. The transfer of Burke, head of the C. I. O. local, from the crew to which he had been attached for 8 years, on the day following Markle's surveillance of the August 4 meeting, and the accompanying transfers of men to the pole yard, all constituted acts of restraint and coercion. We have already found that these acts effectively caused withdrawals from the C. I. O. membership and that they were designed for that very purpose.

Markle's efforts to discourage membership in the C. I. O. did not cease following Superintendent Southard's letter of August 9, relating to discrimination. His advice to Goff that he attempt to persuade his brother-in-law, Sowle, to have nothing to do with the C. I. O. constituted flagrant interference, particularly when followed by Sowle's transfer to Jonesville, where more vicious measures were taken to discourage his membership in the C. I. O.

Nor is the evidence of interference restricted entirely to Markle's acts. McDonald, supervisor of crews at Hudson, exceeded the limits of management neutrality when he informed employees under him, at the time of distributing copies of the contract of June 8, that they were not "under those agreements," that they did not have to sign anything but would get their "same rights." He exercised more positive interference when he took Darby to task for joining the C. I. O.

It further appears that all of these acts, unfair labor practices of interference and restraint, were of a pattern with a design of the respondent to foster and support the formation of an independent organization.

The respondent introduced evidence showing that early in August, after complaint by the C. I. O., it instructed Markle and other superintendents to refrain from activity directed against the C. I. O. Nevertheless, such activity continued after the instructions were given. Whatever instructions the respondent may have given his employees, it remained responsible for their acts of coercion and interference.

We find that by the acts above mentioned, as well as by other acts described in section III–B, above, the respondent interfered with, restrained, and coerced its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in section 7 of the act.

The acts which we thus find to have been separate unfair labor practices also constituted part of the respondent's effort to substitute for the organization which had gained a foothold among its employees an organization of the respondent's choosing. The letter of June 11, 1937, showed the desire of the respondent to foster a "loyal" organization limited to its own employees. The subsequent conduct of Markle and other supervisory employees tending to discourage activity on behalf of the C. I. O. further prepared the ground for such an organization. Finally, the respondent, through its agents, participated in the formation of the independent, and in its subsequent activities, and lent active support and encouragement to the independent.

While it is contended that, following the adoption by the independent of bylaws, and the employment of Painter as legal advisor, foremen were excluded from formal participation in the Independent's affairs, the findings above show that crew foremen, garage foremen, and others with supervisory powers continued and persisted, throughout the winter and spring of 1938, in attending organizational meetings of the independent, and in permitting solicitation by independent organizers on company premises and during working hours. Thus the mere procedure of refraining from soliciting foremen's membership, on the part of the independent organizers, did not and could not effectively refute the belief of many employees that the respondent, through its agents, was continuing to encourage the growth of that organization.

We find that the respondent has dominated and interfered with the formation and administration of the independent, and has contributed support to it, and that by so doing it has interfered with, restrained, and coerced its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in section 7 of the act.

At the commencement of the presentation of its defense, counsel for the respondent stated:

"And without admitting the commission of any unfair labor act or practice the respondent will further show that all charges and allegations of unfair labor practice stated in this hearing have heretofore been presented by the complaining union to the respondent in meetings held in accordance with the procedure outlined in the existing contract between the complaining union and the respondent, and that all of such claims and allegations were, after negotiations between the parties, fully and completely settled, compromised, and adjusted.

"And that even if any such claims and allegations could be held to be unfair labor practice within the meaning of the act, that all of such claims and allegations have become moot, and having been settled and adjusted that there is no relief to be administered by the Board and the National Labor Relations Act, if applicable, having been held to be remedial, has no application."

A sufficient answer to the respondent's contention may be found in section 10 (a) of the act, which provides:

"The Board is empowered, as hereinafter provided, to prevent any person from engaging in any unfair labor practice (listed in section 8) affecting commerce. This power shall be exclusive, and shall not be affected by any other means of adjustment or prevention that has been or may be established by agreement, code, law, or otherwise."

However, a further answer to the contention is found in the fact that while many of the discriminatory acts complained of by the C. I. O. were remedied by the respondent after protest had been made, this did not dissipate the most important effect of those acts, namely, the manifestation of hostility toward the C. I. O., and of friendliness toward the independent. This is particularly true in view of the fact that the adjustment of one set of grievances never prevented the commission of a fresh series of acts of discrimination by the respondent's agents. The situation thus presented was that members of the C. I. O. were impressed with the fact that their membership laid them open to the hostility of their supervisors, and that they might at any time be called on to go through the machinery laid down in the contract for the correction of abuses. The mere fact that the respondent made such corrections in many of the cases concerning which complaint was made does not, and did not remove the effect of the acts of its supervisors.

The respondent also sought to show that all those who testified concerning acts tending to discourage membership in the C. I. O. were not in fact discouraged. We have found above that in some cases at least the respondent's efforts to halt the self-organization of its employees were successful. But even if this were not clearly shown, it would not remove the respondent's conduct from the sphere of the act. Such conduct, whether successful or not, constitutes unfair labor practices which it is the Board's duty under the act to prevent.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of the respondent set forth in section III above, occurring in connection with the operations of the respondent described in section I above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relation to trade, traffic, commerce, transportation, and communication among the several States, and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

V. THE REMEDY

We have found that the respondent dominated and interfered with the formation and administration of the independent, and contributed support to it. The mere withdrawal of the respondent's domination, interference, and support of the Independent will not be sufficient to overcome the impression created by the circumstances which surrounded its origin. Therefore we will order the respondent to cease and desist from the unfair labor practices described above and also to refrain from recognizing the independent as an organization representative of any of its employees for the purpose of dealing with it concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or other conditions of work.

Upon the basis of the above findings of fact and upon the entire record in the case, the Board makes the following:

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America; Utility Workers Organizing Committee and Local 101 thereof, formerly known as Local 740 of the United; and Independent Power Employees' Association are labor organizations within the meaning of section 2 (5) of the act.

2. By its domination and interference with the formation and administration of the independent, and by contributing support to it, the respondent has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices, within the meaning of section 8 (2) of the act.

3. By interfering with, restraining, and coercing its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed by section 7 of the act, the respondent has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices, within the meaning of section 8 (1) of the act.

4. The aforesaid unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce, within the meaning of section 2 (6) and (7) of the act.

ORDER

Upon the basis of the findings of fact and conclusions of law, and pursuant to section 10 (c) of the National Labor Relations Act, the National Labor Relations Board hereby orders that the respondent, Consumers' Power Co., a corporation, and its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall—

1. Cease and desist—

(a) From in any manner dominating or interfering with the administration of Independent Power Employees' Association, or with the formation or administration of any other labor organization of its employees, or contributing support to the independent or to any other labor organization of its employees;

(b) From in any other manner interfering with, restraining or coercing its employees in the exercise of their right to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in concerted activities for the purposes of collective bargaining or other mutual aid and protection, as guaranteed in section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action which the Board finds will effectuate the purposes of the act:

(a) Refrain from recognizing Independent Power Employees' Association as representative of any of its employees for the purpose of dealing with the respondent concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or other conditions of work;

(b) Immediately post in conspicuous places throughout the various plants in its system, including among such places all bulletin boards commonly used by the respondent for announcements to its employees, notices stating (1) that the respondent will cease and desist in the manner aforesaid; and (2) that the respondent will refrain from recognizing Independent Power Employees' Association as representative of any of its employees for the purposes of dealing with the respondent concerning grievances, labor disputes, rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, or other conditions of work;

(c) Maintain such notices for a period of at least thirty (30) consecutive days from the date of posting;

(d) Notify the regional director for the seventh region in writing within ten (10) days from the date of this order what steps the respondent has taken to comply herewith.

[U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, sixth circuit. No. 8180. Consumers Power Company, a Corporation, petitioner, v. National Labor Relations Board, respondent. Petition to review and set aside an order of the National Labor Relations Board. Decided June 27, 1940]

For the Board: Argued by Mr. Phillips. On the brief: Messrs. Fahy, Watts, Knapp, Phillips, Edises, and McCalmont.

Before Simons, Allen, and Arant, circuit judges.

Simons, circuit judge: The initial question to be determined is the jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board over the petitioner under section 10 (a) of the National Labor Relations Act, which empowers the Board to prevent any person from engaging in any unfair labor practice affecting commerce.

The petitioner is an operating utility, subsidiary of Commonwealth & Southern Corporation. It is organized under the laws of the State of Maine but confines its operations exclusively to the State of Michigan, its policies being directed from its general offices in the city of Jackson. It is actively engaged in furnishing electric energy, natural and artificial gas, central heating, and in a limited degree water, to customers located for the most part within the southern peninsula of Michigan and in geographical area which includes important industrial centers, such as Bay City, Saginaw, Flint, Jackson, and Kalamazoo. As incidental to its utility business, it also sells electric appliances within its territory and operates hydroelectric developments on the Muskegon, Manistee, Au Sable, and Kalamazoo Rivers. All of its electric energy is generated within the State and none of it is sold for consumption or use outside of the State. Its gas is likewise manufactured or produced and sold within the State, it having no gas lines or electric connections extending to or from any other State or crossing any State line. It employs upward of 6,000 persons, among whom are members of three union organizations, the selection of a representative bargaining agency by a run-off election being still undecided. (See International Brotherhood et al. v. N. L. R. B. (105 Fed. (2d) 598 (C. C. A. 6), 308 U. S. 413).

The petitioner contends that it had, for a long time, been its established policy to confine its business activity to the State of Michigan; that in pursuance of that policy it had studiously avoided making connections with or giving service to anyone which would make it possible to constitute its business interstate in character, and, as evidence of its effort to confine its operations exclusively to the State, it had required prospective purchasers of power to sever use of out-State connections before it would deliver power to such purchasers; that its transmission system has been so developed and integrated that it would remain without relation to or connection with any property or business outside of its wholly localized intrastate network in Michigan.

While the petitioner purchases fuel from points outside of the State of Michigan, its purchases during 1937, amounting to $1,835,000, and while it buys appliances for resale from without the State amounting annually to approximately $1,300,000, it says that all appliances, materials, and commodities go into stock rather than into immediate use or consumption, and are commingled with similar property already on hand, so that interstate shipments have come to rest within the State long before consumption occurs. It ships a relatively small amount of byproducts, such as tar, ammonia, ammonium sulfate, and drip oil, outside of the State, but these byproducts are insignificant, amounting to but one-twentieth of 1 percent of its gross business, and are but a mere incident rather than a primary or essential purpose of its business activities. It sells electric energy to four interstate railroads, the Ann Arbor, the Grand Trunk System, the Pere Marquette, and the Michigan Central, for the purpose of lighting stations, crossings, shops, and yards, for water pumping, and for telegraph and signal purposes. Representatives of each of the four railroads testified, however, that if there were a complete failure of power from the petitioner, there would be no substantial interruption of service on their roads. The petitioner also furnishes electric energy to the Western Union and Postal Telegraph Cos., and the Michigan Bell Telephone Co. for message transmittal, time clocks, and other functions, but its evidence is to the effect that the services of these utilities would not be interfered with by a failure of electric energy, and that during a strike when power was shut off in Saginaw and Bay City, the telegraph companies switched promptly from the teletype to the Morse system without interruption of service, while the telephone company has other sources of electric energy upon which it relies. As an aid to navigation, the petitioner furnishes electric energy for the operation of vehicular and railroad bridges across the Saginaw River at Saginaw and Bay City, but these bridges are also equipped for mechanical or steam operation, and failure of electric power would not in any wise impede navigation.

Finally, the record shows that in the area served by the petitioner, there are over 250 private industrial plants which it supplies with either gas or electricity, either totally or in large part dependent upon petitioner's power for the continuation of normal manufacturing operations, and that cessation of petitioner's service would suspend interstate shipments of more than $20,000,000 per annum flowing into Michigan, and more than $65,000,000 per annum moving out of Michigan. Among these industrial plants are the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. plant at Flint and 17 plants of the General Motors Co. Of the latter only two, the Buick and Chevrolet plants in Flint, have auxiliary generating equipment, and these generate but 10 and 20 percent, respectively, of their own requirements. Moreover, a shut-down of the plants dependent upon petitioner would cause a shut-down of the Cadillac and Chevrolet plants of General Motors in Detroit, and its Oldsmobile plant in Lansing, which, while not supplied with electric energy by the petitioner, yet depend entirely upon the Saginaw and Flint plants for parts. Not only are the General Motors plants in Michigan so dependent, but its assembly plants in 13 other States would likewise have to cease operations if the Michigan plants became idle through failure of light and power.

Confining ourselves for the moment to that phase of the petitioner's business which involves purchase of fuel and appliances shipped to it from without the State and sold or consumed wholly within the State, to its business in the sale of byproducts outside the State, and to its furnishing of light and power to interstate railroads and bridges spanning navigable streams, and to telegraph and telephone companies, it would seem to be clear, under the reported decisions, that the petitioner is engaged, in a substantial way, in interstate commerce, or that the impact of a labor controversy which shuts down its plants and hydroelectric developments, would substantially and directly affect the flow of interstate commerce into and from the State of Michigan. The petitioner's contention that the interstate railroads, bridges, telegraph and telephone companies would be but momentarily affected, and that its interstate business in byproducts is relatively small even though actually substantial, must, it seems to us, be rejected upon the authority of N. L. R. B. v. Fainblatt (306 U. S. 601), and N. L. R. B. v. Bradford Dyeing Association (— U. S. —), decided May 20, 1940. In the first of the references it was said:

"Nor do we think it important, as respondent seems to argue, that the volume of the commerce here involved, though substantial, was relatively small as compared with that in cases arising under the National Labor Relations Act which have hitherto engaged our attention. The power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce is plenary and extends to all such commerce, be it great or small." In the second case the Court rejected the conclusion of the circuit court of appeals that a business in waste products sold in interstate commerce, which did not exceed 1 percent of the total goods processed, was but a mere incident to which the maxim de minimus might be applied.

These activities aside, however, it seems abundantly clear that a stoppage of power supplied to the numerous plants in the great automobile industrial area, which includes Flint, Pontiac, Jackson, and other cities in Michigan, the closing of which would affect other great industries in Detroit and throughout the Nation, establishes the jurisdiction of the Board over the petitioner under the terms of the act. Not only would interstate commerce be affected, but the effect would be as catastrophic as that pointed out in Consolidated Edison Co. of N. Y. et al. v. N. L. R. B. (95 Fed. (2d) 390, 394 (C. C. A. 2), affirmed 305 U. S. 197). The distinction which the petitioner seeks to make between that case and the present controversy is tenuous. The Commonwealth Edison Co. came within the purview of the National Labor Relations Act, and under the jurisdiction of the Board, not because its customers were instrumentalities of interstate or foreign commerce, but because labor strife, which would curtail its service, would directly and immediately affect commerce. The existence in the present case of an intervening private agency over whom the employer has no authority or control, is of no moment, since it is plain that the effect on commerce would be immediate and, in a realistic sense, direct. The distinction here urged is fanciful, for in its effect upon commerce the business of the petitioner is not insulated by the mere fact that the General Motors Co. and the Du Pont Co. are corporate entities engaged in manufacture rather than in transportation. The effect of labor strife in the petitioner's plants upon the shipment of goods from Flint, Pontiac, and Detroit would be felt immediately, and there is no sound principle by which processing of manufactured goods coming into or leaving the State, as affecting commerce, is to be distinguished from supplying power as an indispensable element in such processing. As was said by the Chief Justice in the Commonwealth Edison case, "In determining the constitutional bounds of the authority conferred, we have applied the well-settled principle that it is the effect upon interstate or foreign commerce, not the source of the injury, which is the criterion."

An added ground for the petitioner's assault upon the jurisdiction of the Board is the alleged inadequacy of the charge which initiated the inquiry, and the inadequacy of the complaint by which the Board sought to apprise it of the unfair labor practices in which it was thought to have engaged. Particularly, it complains of the Board having taken jurisdiction upon a charge failing to conform to its own rules and regulations which (art. II, sec. 4) require that the charge contain the full name and address of the person or labor organization making it, the full name and address of the person against whom the charge is made, and a clear and concise statement of the facts constituting the alleged unfair labor practice affecting commerce, with the names of the individuals involved, and the time and place of occurrence. It asserts that the charge accuses it of the violation of section 8 (1), (2), (3) of the act, but in the general language of the statute, with an additional paragraph which charges that it dominated and interfered with the formation and administration of the Independent Power Employees Association, and that the complaint subsequently issued by the Board, while more elaborate in form, merely charges the petitioner with violation of the act. It asserts that not at any time was it furnished with specific bases either for the charge or the complaint until proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law were served upon it after the termination of the hearing.

It is to be noted, in this connection, that the unions with members among the employees of the petitioner, were the United Electric Radio and Machine Workers of America, and its successor the Utility Workers Organizing Committee, affiliated with the C. I. O.; the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and later, the Independent Power Employees Association, organized by the petitioner's employees, and having no affiliation. The charge was lodged with the Board on February 2, 1938, by the C. I. O. affiliate, and accuses the petitioner of interfering with, restraining, and coercing its employees in the exercise of rights to self-organization, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in concerted activities for purpose of collective bargaining, mutual aid and protection, and accuses it of dominating and interfering with the formation and administration of the independent, the domination and interference consisting of acts restraining the employees' freedom of choice, and the form or character of representation, forcing upon them the Independent and maintaining control and domination over it, and discriminating in regard to tenure and condition of employment in order to discourage membership in the affiliated unions. The complaint is, however, more specific. It charges that the petitioner, since about April 1, 1937, and down to its date, dominated and interfered with the formation of the Independent by contributing to its support, by making known to its employees hostility to the C. I. O. union, by encouraging membership in the independent; by giving public credit to it for having procured beneficial changes in terms of employment for which the independent was in no way responsible; by discriminating in the tenure of employment of both ordinary and supervisory employees for the purpose of encouraging membership in it and of discouraging membership in other unions; by permitting solicitation of members of the independent on its premises and during working hours; by permitting meetings of the independent on its premises and giving it the use of its automobiles or gasoline for organizational purposes; by favoring its members in the assignment of desirable work and discriminating against others in the assignment of work, and by open surveillance by its executive employees of meetings of the C. I. O. union and threats of discharge or discrimination in the assignment of work, and by other means.

While the hearing ranged over a broad field, the order of the Board now sought to be set aside and on the other hand enforced, goes no further than to direct the petitioner to cease and desist from dominating, interfering, or contributing to the support of the independent, and from interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their right to self-organization, or to form, join, or assist labor organizations, or to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing and engage in concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining, or mutual aid and protection. Its affirmative provisions direct the petitioner to refrain from recognizing the independent in dealings concerning grievances, disputes, rates of pay, hours of employment, or other conditions of work, and direct the petitioner to post and maintain, for a period, the usual and appropriate notices. Whatever may have been the scope of the inquiry, the order is not broader than the complaint.

Under section 10 (a) of the National Labor Relations Act, no complaint may be issued by the Board until there has been a charge that some person has engaged, or is engaging, in an unfair labor practice affecting commerce. The filing of a charge is therefore jurisdictional. This means no more, however, than that the Board is without power to initiate a complaint upon its own motion, but must await the filing of a charge before its powers are exercised. The act contains no specification of what constitutes a proper charge, save that it shall state that the respondent has engaged or is engaging in any unfair labor practices affecting commerce. It would seem clear, therefore, that the provisions of article II, section 4, of the Board's rules and regulations, are for the information of the Board, to apprise it of the nature of the unfair labor practices alleged with sufficient particularity to enable it to determine that the charges are substantial and not frivolous, and so that it may enter intelligently upon the exercise of its exploratory powers. We must keep in mind that the statutory powers of the Board include not only the conduct of hearings and the entry of cease and desist orders, but preliminary investigatory authority necessary to a determination of the substantial character of the charge and to the formulation and issue of a complaint. There has been no lack of due process in failure of the charge to particularize specific acts as constituting unfair labor practices, when the complaint fairly apprises the respondent of acts alleged to do so. In considering the sufficiency of the complaint in that respect it is necessary to bear in mind that the nature of the proceeding is not punitive but preventive and in the interest of the general public. N. L. R. B. v. Piqua Munising Wood Product Co. (109 Fed. (2d) 552, 557 (C. C. A. 6)). It does not require the particularity of pleading in an indictment, declaration at law, or a bill in equity, for no security against double jeopardy or principle of res judicata commands the utmost of precision. Matters of evidence need not be recited in the complaint and a detailed knowledge of the Board's case in advance "is of slight value in a trial by hearings at intervals." N. L. R. B. v. Remington-Rand, Inc. (94 Fed. (2d), 862, 873 (C. C. A. 2)). We are of the opinion that the charge was sufficient to confer jurisdiction and the complaint adequate fairly to apprise the petitioner of the unfair labor practices therein charged and to sustain the Board's remedial order. There was jurisdiction of the controversy.

We are unable to perceive substantial merit in the petitioner's grievance at the union being permitted to participate in the proceeding through its counsel, or in its complaint that the conduct of the hearing was improperly delegated by the trial examiner to persons and agencies unknown to the petitioner, by the announced determination of the examiner to request a ruling upon debatable points from "Washington." Section 10 (b) of the act provides that persons other than the respondent may be allowed to intervene in the proceedings and to present testimony in the discretion of the member, agent, or agency conducting the hearing. The Board's rules and regulations (article II, § 19) provide for formal intervention, but article II, § 25, provides that any party shall have the right to appear at such hearing in person, by counsel, or otherwise, to call, examine, and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce into the record documentary or other evidence. The report of the examiner is merely a recommendation subject to review by the Board, and it is the Board's findings and order that are here in issue, and not the examiner's recommendation. If the findings are supported by substantial evidence and sustain the order, it becomes our duty to direct enforcement. It is not contended that the Board, in making its findings, was in any way influenced, coerced, or intimidated by improper conduct of the union's counsel at the examination. We find nothing in Amalgamated Utility Workers v. Consolidated Edison Co., supra, or in National Licorice Co. v. N. L. R. B. (60 S. Ct. 569) in conflict with the view herein expressed.

When the trial examiner indicated his intention to ask for instructions from Washington, the inference was, of course, inescapable that he desired instructions from the Board. His announced purpose was to save possible reversal upon questions which had never before been brought to his attention. We are unable to perceive in this announcement or in the practice anything prejudicial to the petitioner or in denial of due process.

We come finally to the contention most strongly urged as ground for setting aside the Board's order, that there was lack of substantial evidence to support findings of interference with or coercion of employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed in section 7 of the act, or to support findings that the petitioner dominated the independent contrary to the provisions of section 8 (2). It may be conceded at the outset, that many specific findings of fact to be culled from the discursive decision of the Board, are unsupported otherwise than by surmise, suspicion, or guess, as condemned by us in N. L. R. B. v. Empire Furniture Corporation, 107 Fed. (2d) 92. But with these eliminated there remain findings of coercion and domination based upon substantial evidence which support the decision and order of the Board. No purpose will be served by detailed review of the voluminous record made at the hearing. The investigation went far afield and much that is irrelevant and unimportant is incorporated, while unnecessary latitude was undoubtedly permitted the union attorney in his examination and cross-examination of witnesses. There remains, nevertheless, substantial evidence that Markle, an important supervisory employee, in charge of more than 20 line crews operating within the Jackson division comprising some 300 men, went far beyond the bounds of that strict neutrality asserted to be the petitioner's labor policy, in coercing employees to refrain from membership in the union, and in disciplining union organizers by transfers to undesirable work in the so-called pole yard. It is not necessary at this time to consider whether Markle's antiunion utterances transcended the limits of free speech, constitutionally guaranteed, for Markle's intimidation and disciplinary measures were not mere expressions of opinion. Likewise is it unnecessary to consider whether foremen in charge of single line crews of 1 to 10 men, are such supervisory employees that their antiunion acts may reasonably be attributable to the employer. Markle had much higher authority and was of much greater importance in the petitioner's organization than such line foremen, and so perhaps were others.

It may well be, as contended by the petitioner, that its officers took seemingly appropriate steps to suppress the antiunion activities of Markle, and that they endeavored, in the utmost of good faith, to be wholly impartial with respect to union organization and to redress grievances as soon as they were apprehended. The National Labor Relations Act, however, empowers the Board to protect employees in their right to organize and select representative bargaining agencies when such rights have been invaded, and we are unable to say, as a matter of law, that the Board should have relied upon the continued neutrality and impartiality of the petitioner for the protection of such rights, once there was substantial evidence that they had been overridden.

The contention that the several antiunion acts of Markle, and other supervisors amounting to intimidation, were not authorized and were beyond the scope of authority entrusted to these men must be rejected, not necessarily upon a strict application of the doctrine of respondeat superior as it has been applied in private controversies arising out of tort or contract. It has repeatedly been noted that the National Labor Relations Act contemplates the protection of the public rights which it creates and defines, and that its power to command affirmative action is remedial and not punitive. National Licorice Co. v. N. L. R. B., supra; Consolidated Edison Co. v. N. L. R. B., supra. As said by us in N. L. R. B. v. Colton, 105 Fed. (2d) 179: "The nature of regulatory statutes of the class here considered, and the scope and purpose of administrative orders made in exercise of powers conferred by such legislation, are to implement a public, social, or economic policy not primarily concerned with private rights, and through remedies not only unknown to the common law, but often in derogation of it." See also Agwilines, Inc. v. N. L. R. B., 87 Fed. (2d) 146, 150 (C. C. A. 5).

It would seem to us, in view of the public rights involved and the remedial nature of the proceeding designed for their preservation and protection, that acts of coercion and intimidation by supervisory employees may be restrained and their resumption interdicted by appropriate action of the Board, even in the absence of clear demonstration of prior authorization or subsequent ratification, at least where the circumstances are such as to induce in subordinate employees a reasonable apprehension that the acts condemned reflect the policy of the employer. The right freely to organize without coercion or intimidation, is an empty one unless there is authority under the statutory scheme to safeguard it, and the necessity for doing so calls for more appropriate action by the employer than mere declarations of neutrality and impartiality, even though in good faith proclaimed. Further than that we need not go for purposes of present decision.

The evidence in respect to alleged domination of the independent is not so clear as is that of attempted coercion by Markle of the union members by means of disciplinary transfers, and much that is sinister has been read into acts that might well have been perfectly innocent and conform to petitioner's reiterated policy of neutrality and impartiality. It must be considered, however, in relation to intimidation of union men definitely ascertained, and the failure of supervisory employees to make disciplinary transfers of officials of the independent similar to those made of officials and organizers of the union. So considered, there is room for reasonable inference that the petitioner was tolerant of the one organization in proportion as it was intolerant of the other. Whether the court would draw that inference from the established facts, is unimportant. It is sufficient if it be an inference permissible to the Board, and if so the finding must be sustained, whatever may be our own impression of the persuasiveness of the evidence.

In view of the broad authority given by the act to the National Labor Relations Board to take evidence and make findings of fact unfettered by the strict rules that govern judicial inquiry, and in view of the liberality accorded to its concept of substantial evidence and reasonable inference in the more recent cases, including Consolidated Edison Co. v. N. L. R. B., supra; Natl. Licorice Co. v. N. L. R. B., supra; and N. L. R. B. v. Bradford Dyeing Association, supra, we are constrained to hold that there are findings of the Board supported by substantial evidence which sustain its order.

The petition to review is overruled and a decree may be entered for enforcement.

DECISION AND ORDER

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Upon charges and amended charges duly filed by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, herein called the I. B. E. W., the National Labor Relations Board, herein called the Board, by the regional director for the fifteenth region (New Orleans, La.), issued its complaint and notice of hearing dated September 12, 1938, against Alabama Power Co., Birmingham, Ala., herein called the respondent, alleging that the respondent had engaged in and was engaging in unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of section 8 (1) and (2) and section 2 (6) and (7) of the National Labor Relations Act (49 Stat. 449), herein called the act. The complaint, as amended, contained certain allegations concerning the nature of the respondent's business and, in respect to unfair labor practices, alleged in substance that on or about July 30, 1934, the respondent originated a plan of employee representation, named the Alabama Power Employees' Representation Association, herein the representation association, and from July 30, 1934, up through August 1935, dominated and interfered with the administration of the representation association and contributed financial and other support thereto; that in May, June, July, or August 1935 the respondent assisted in the formation of a labor organization known as Alabama Power Co. Employees' Association, herein called the employees' association, and has at all times since dominated and interfered with its administration, and has contributed financial and other support thereto; that the respondent by pay-roll check-offs has collected dues in excess of $10,000, in behalf of the employees' association; that on or about July 23, 1938, the respondent assisted in the formation of a labor organization called the Independent Union of Alabama Power Employees, Inc., herein called the independent, and has at all times since that date dominated and interfered with its administration and has contributed financial and other support thereto; and that between July 5, 1935, and September 1, 1938, the respondent has discouraged membership of its employees in the I. B. E. W. in a number of ways specified in the complaint and by other acts and conduct. The complaint, and amendments thereto, and the notice of hearing were duly served upon the respondent and the I. B. E. W.

On September 27, 1938, the respondent filed a motion to dismiss the proceedings on the grounds that the complaint failed to set forth facts to show that the Board had jurisdiction to entertain the proceedings; that the facts set forth in the complaint were insufficient to show that the respondent had dominated or interfered with the three labor organizations, or that the respondent had interfered with, restrained, or coerced its employees; that the act is null and void because it deprives the respondent of its property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the fifth amendment to the United States Constitution in that the act exempts from its operation power systems similar to the respondent's which are operated by political bodies; and that the charge upon which the complaint is based is deficient in that it does not state the address of the labor organization making the charge, the names of the individuals involved, and the time and place of occurrence.[1]

On September 27, 1937, the respondent filed an answer to the complaint as amended, and on November 28, 1938, filed a further answer to an amendment to the complaint which was made during the hearing. The respondent in its answers, without waiving its motion to dismiss, admitted that it assisted in the formation of the representation association and made financial contributions thereto from July 30, 1934, to July 5, 1935, but denied it dominated or interfered with the representation association; denied that it assisted in the formation of the employees' association or dominated or interfered with its administration or contributed support thereto, but stated that some meetings of the employees' association may have been held upon the respondent's property without its express approval or disapproval; stated that upon the basis of individual authorizations it deducted $7,115.40 from the salary due its employees and has paid the same to the employees' association; denied that it dominated, interfered with, or assisted in the formation or administration of the independent; and denied that it had interfered with, restrained, or coerced its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed by section 7 of the act and alleged that if any supervisory employees have participated in acts resulting in interference, restraint, or coercion of the employees, such participation was beyond the scope of their authority and in violation of instructions.

After several postponements, notices of which were served upon the parties, the hearing opened in Birmingham, Ala., on November 3, 1938, before D. Lacy McBryde, the trial examiner duly designated by the Board, and closed on December 7, 1938.

The Board and the respondent were represented by counsel and the I. B. E. W. by an international representative. At the beginning of the hearing the independent moved to intervene in the proceedings. This motion was denied by the trial examiner. Full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues was afforded all parties. At the beginning of the hearing, at the conclusion of the Board's case, and at the end of the hearing, the respondent renewed its previously filed motion to dismiss the proceedings. The trial examiner denied the motion on the first occasion and reserved ruling upon the second two occasions. The motion is hereby denied. The trial examiner also ruled upon a number of other motions and objections to the admission of evidence during the course of the hearing. The Board has reviewed all the rulings of the trial examiner and finds that no prejudicial errors were committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed.

On January 17, 1939, the trial examiner issued his intermediate report finding that the respondent had engaged in and was engaging in unfair-labor practices within the meaning of section 8 (1) and (2) and section 2 (6) and (7) of the act. He recommended that the respondent cease and desist from interfering with, restraining or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights to self-organization, to form, join, or assist the I. B. E. W. or any other labor organization, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing and to engage in concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection; that the respondent cease and desist from dominating or interfering with the formation and administration of the representation association, the employees' association, the independent, or any other labor organization, and from contributing financial or other support thereto; and that the respondent withdraw all recognition from the independent as representative of its employees for the purpose of dealing with the respondent concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, and other conditions of employment and completely disestablish the independent as such representative.

On January 27, 1939, the respondent filed its exceptions to the intermediate report and on March 8, 1939, it filed a brief in support thereof in which it again renewed its motion to dismiss the complaint. On March 11, 1939, the I. B. E. W. filed a brief. Pursuant to notice, a hearing for the purpose of oral argument on the exceptions was held before the Board at Washington, D. C., on September 14, 1939, in which the respondent and the I. B. E. W. participated.

The Board has considered the exceptions to the intermediate report and, except insofar as they are consistent with the findings, conclusions, and order set forth below, finds them to be without merit.

Upon the entire record in the case, the Board makes the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE BUSINESS OF THE RESPONDENT

Alabama Power Co., the respondent, is an Alabama corporation having its principal place of business in Attalla, Ala. Ninety percent of its voting stock is owned by the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, a Delaware corporation. It is engaged chiefly in the business of generating, selling, and distributing electrical energy for lighting, power, and other purposes.

[1] This motion was renewed before the trial examiner at the beginning of the hearing and is ruled on below.

The respondent as the principal supplier of power in the State of Alabama

At the end of 1937, the respondent was supplying power either directly or indirectly to 672 communities in 64 of the 67 counties of the State of Alabama, including the cities of Mobile, Birmingham, Montgomery, Gadsden, and Anniston; there being a total of over 226,000 customers whose power requirements were being met by the respondent.[2] The respondent is the sole supplier of electrical energy to well over half the area of the State of Alabama, some portions being served by cooperatives, municipal systems, and about 8 other private utilities. Of these private utilities, the Birmingham Electric Co., which serves the city of Birmingham and vicinity, generated no power at all during the year 1937, and obtained its total supply from the respondent, which is its ordinary practice. The respondent also supplies power in substantial amounts to 4 other private utilities which operate in the State of Alabama.[3]

The cooperatives and municipal systems, which serve a comparatively small portion of the State, are supplied with electrical energy either by the respondent, by the Tennessee Valley Authority or by their own plants. The Tennessee Valley Authority supplies power to about 14 municipalities and to a few small towns. The record does not disclose how many of the municipal systems and cooperatives purchase power from the respondent.

In addition to this business the respondent buys and distributes a small amount of gas to consumers in the vicinity of Phenix City, Ala., operates a local bus system serving the city of Huntsville, Ala., and vicinity, and a street-railway system serving the city of Tuscaloosa, Ala., and vicinity.

The respondent's transmission and receipt of power across State lines

The respondent owns and operates six hydroelectric plants and seven steam plants in the State of Alabama at which all the respondent's electricity is generated. The respondent also owns and operates substations and transmission lines in the State of Alabama for the distribution of the electricity generated at the various plants. A number of these transmission and distribution lines are connected at the borders of the State of Alabama with the transmission and distribution lines of the Georgia Power Co., the Gulf Power Co., the Southern Tennessee Power Co., and the Mississippi Power Co.[4] The only break in these transmission lines at the State border is in ownership; the lines continue unbroken in a physical sense. The respondent, in selling to and exchanging power with these companies, delivers power to and receives power from them which is metered at the Alabama border.[5] During the year 1937, the respondent delivered approximately 20 percent of the total amount of energy produced by it to the above-named companies for use in States other than the State of Alabama. In its annual report to the Federal Power Commission for the year ended December 31, 1937, the respondent summarized its sale and interchange of power with other utility companies as follows:

Name of company	Kilowatt-hours, total deliveries, and receipts[1]
	Received	Delivered
Mississippi Power Co	71,440	147,065,487
Gulf Power Co		44,717,122
Georgia Power Co	79,571,158	340,795,220
Tennessee Electric Power Co.[2]	2,332,000	98,977,907

[1] These figures include both sales and exchanges. The respondent's report breaks them down into the two elements, sales and exchanges of power, as well as reporting the total deliveries and receipts.

[2] 99 percent of the common stock of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. is owned by the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation. It is noted that the responded in its answer refers to deliveries to the Southern Tennessee Power Co., but does not report any deliveries to this company in its annual report. However, in the registration statement filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation explains that the Southern Tennessee Power Co., a wholly owned subsidiary of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, owns the transmission line over which is transmitted electrical energy purchased by the Tennessee Electric Power Co. from the respondent. It therefore appears that deliveries to the Southern Tennessee Power Co. were for the use of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. and are reported in the above table as deliveries to the latter.

[2] In the year 1937 the respondent sold 111,405,455 kilowatt-hours for residential and domestic use, 20,440,284 kilowatt-hours for rural use, 1,031,508,588 kilowatt-hours for commercial and industrial use, and 7,319,255 kilowatt-hours for street and highway lighting.

[3] Three of these companies, the Baldwin County Power Co., Tallassee Mills Utilities Co., and the Tuskegee Light & Power Co., generated no current by their own facilities during 1937, and purchased from the respondent, respectively, 639,000, 3,525,797, and 4,016,400 kilowatt-hours.

[4] The Commonwealth & Southern Corporation owns all the common stock of these companies. These companies are in turn interconnected with other companies with the result that the respondent is frequently a part of an interconnected system extending as far as Ohio.

[5] The respondent owns no transmission lines outside the State of Alabama.

The annual reports for the same year to the Federal Power Commission of these four companies show that a substantial portion of the total power used by them during the year 1937 was received from the respondent.[6]

The respondent urges in its brief that this delivery of power to other utility companies at the State line is incidental to its main business and that in all but two instances was a sale of surplus power upon the basis of "when, as, and if available" and that a cessation of power supply from the respondent would not affect the free flow of commerce in the States served by the four above companies since they have other sources of power within their respective States sufficient to supply their demands. While it may be that the respondent views such deliveries as "incidental" deliveries of surplus power, it is noted that approximately 20 percent of the total power generated by the respondent in 1937 was delivered to the companies providing services in other States. It further appears from the record that these deliveries are a continuing characteristic of the respondent's business.[7] Thus the respondent has delivered and received a substantial amount of energy, which moves across State lines, for a number of years, and the record does not disclose that this practice has ceased. It is immaterial that the respondent is not legally bound to make all these deliveries in the absence of a surplus.

The respondent, by its contention that the free flow of commerce would not be affected by a cessation of its operations because the four companies have other sources of power available, may intend to urge either or both of two contentions: (1) That the sale and interchange of power at the border does not result in a movement across State lines within the meaning of "commerce" as it is defined in the act since no material thing moves; or (2) that such cessation would not hamper the interstate activities of the customers of the four companies since their needs could be met by the companies in other ways. We think it clear that the delivery of power at the Alabama border into the connecting lines of the four utility companies does result in the movement of power across State lines and [6] The report shows:

Company	Power generated kw-h.	Power purchased and interchanged (in gross) kw-h.
Gulf Power Co	48,604	52,372,872 (44,717,122 from the respondent).
Mississippi Power Co	23,990,511	151,654,287 (147,065,487 from the respondent).
Georgia Power Co	1,502,636,635	475,182,440 (340,795,220 from the respondent).
Tennessee Electric Power Co.	927,935,507	226,689,680 (98,877,907 from the respondent).

[7] The respondent's report to the Federal Power Commission for July 1938, entitled "Report of Movement of Electrical Energy Across State Lines," discloses receipts and deliveries as follows:

Name of company in adjoining State	Kilowatt-hours
	Received	Delivered
Mississippi Power Co	5,780	14,175,438
Gulf Power Co		3,804,930
Georgia Power Co	6,299,228	29,616,486
Tennessee Electric Power Co	3,200	5,184,930
Grand total	6,308,208	52,781,784

The respondent summarized its deliveries and receipts of power for the years 1934, 1935, and 1936 as follows:

	1936		1935
	Delivered kw-h.	Received kw-h.	Delivered kw-h.	Received kw-h.
Georgia Power Co	379,027,294	81,673,568	380,173,760	58,419,032
Tennessee Electric Power Co	46,752,602	59,400	8,426,400	50,200
Mississippi Power Co	135,149,714	6,228	110,251,273	8,000
Gulf Power Co	37,216,947		29,888,448

	1934
	Delivered kw-h.	Received kw-h.
Georgia Power Co	851,777,428	76,278,448
Tennessee Electric Power Co	14,183,200	632,400

that this is commerce within the meaning of the act, even though the precise nature of the movement cannot be fully explained.[8] The second possible contention is also without merit. It appears from the record that the four utility companies could not completely and immediately meet the demands of their customers. The Georgia Power Co. could take care of its "essential load" only by dropping one of its large secondary customers. If the cessation of the respondent's operations took place at a time when the load levels were high and the weather dry, the companies would require a number of hours to "bring in" their reserve steam plants. In any event the diversion of interstate commerce from the respondent to other suppliers would itself suffice to establish the relation of the respondent's operations to the flow of interstate commerce.

The respondent as supplier of power to instrumentalities of interstate commerce

The respondent supplies large amounts of electrical energy at a number of different points to the principal interstate railroads running in and out of Alabama carrying mail, passengers, and freight in and out of the State.[9] These railroads use electric power for a number of purposes, including the lighting of offices, stations, telegraphic offices, and interlocking towers, and the operation of signals which govern the movement of trains, the machinery in the shops, locomotive turntables, and to some extent for the operation of grain elevators and coal conveyors. The present normal operations of the railroads are dependent upon electric power. Certain make-shifts[10] could be employed to continue their operations should the power be cut off, although their employment would result in slowing the railroads' activities.

The respondent also supplies large quantities of electricity to the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. at a number of points in the latter's system.[11] This company supplies telephone service to the whole State of Alabama except the extreme southeastern portion, and its system is connected with systems serving other States and foreign countries and with ships at sea by means of radio telephone. It also supplies teletypewriter services to the Associated Press, the United Press, sundry newspapers, radio stations,[12] and stockholders[13] and furnishes facilities to carry radio programs originating at New York City or Chicago from the central network stations to stations associated with the network.[14] The primary use to which the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. puts electrical energy is the charging of storage batteries which supply the power to the telephone system. It also uses power for lights, for running various calculating machines, ringing machines, and for operating teletypewriter machines. If the electric power over the State were shut off, the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. could operate its telephone service until the storage batteries ran down, a period of from 24 to 48 hours, and after that would have to obtain emergency equipment at those exchanges where it had no emergency generating systems. This would require considerable time and expense.

The respondent furnishes electric power to the three principal airports in Alabama, which are located at Birmingham,[15] Mobile, and Montgomery, and for the United States Army airport at Montgomery. These airports are used as stopping places for several airlines on interstate journeys where freight, mail, and passengers are picked up and discharged. At the airports, electricity is used to operate radio beams to allow instrument flying, boundary lights, beacons, and floodlights, all of which are essential for the safety of planes landing at night.

The respondent also supplies power to bus and trucking companies, United States post offices, and other United States Government offices and facilities including the United States Lighthouse Department and the Inland Waterways Corporation, the Western Union Co., Postal Telegraph Co., numerous newspapers, Railway Express Agency, Federal Barge Lines, a number of radio stations, railroads other than those above mentioned, warehouses at the State docks at Mobile, the cold-storage plant operated by the State Docks Commission, the State and municipal docks at Mobile, and to the coaling station for ships at Mobile.

The respondent as supplier of power to industries engaged in interstate commerce

Answers to questionnaires submitted to industrial concerns located in Alabama, and introduced pursuant to a stipulation between the Board and the respondent that such answers should be considered as though given by duly qualified witnesses,[16] indicate that at least 49 industrial concerns, which do a substantial interstate business, are wholly or almost wholly dependent upon power supplied by the respondent for their normal operation.[17]

The respondent contends that the contribution of these concerns to interstate commerce is "relatively small and lacks those elements of importance to commerce which would make applicable the principles laid down in the Consolidated Edison case."[18] Even if this were a material consideration,[19] there are, as we have pointed out, a large number of industrial concerns dependent upon the respondent for power to carry on their normal operations. Some of these concerns make a very large contribution to interstate commerce. We consider the respondent's contention to be without merit.

From the foregoing it is evident, and we find, that the respondent is the principal supplier of electrical energy in the State of Alabama; that it transmits and receives substantial quantities of power across State lines; that it supplies large amounts of power to instrumentalities of interstate commerce and to industries engaged in interstate commerce; that the normal operation of these instrumentalities and industries is dependent upon power supplied by it; and that a labor dispute between the respondent and its employees which resulted in the interruption of the respondent's operations would affect the flow of large amounts of electrical energy across State lines, and would seriously hamper, and in some cases paralyze, the operations of railroads, telephones, and other instrumentalities of interstate commerce and the operations of various industries engaged in interstate commerce.

II. THE ORGANIZATIONS INVOLVED

The International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers is a labor organization affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, admitting to membership all employees in the respondent's production and distribution departments and power plants except office employees, general foremen, supervisory employees ranking higher than general foremen, and superintendents of hydroelectric and steam plants.

Alabama Power Co. Employees' Representation Association was an unaffiliated labor organization, admitting to membership all employees of the respondent who had been employed by the respondent for at least 60 days, except employees identified with the management of the respondent, such as executive officers, general office department heads and assistants, division managers, managers of districts serving more than 1,000 customers, division superintendents and assistants, district superintendents, division sales supervisors, division auditors, district auditors, chief load dispatcher, plant superintendents and assistants, shop superintendents, and general foremen.

Alabama Power Employees' Association is an unaffiliated labor organization with a membership eligibility rule identical with that of the representation association, set forth above.

Independent Union of Alabama Power Employees, Inc., is an incorporated, unaffiliated labor organization, admitting to membership all the respondent's regular employees except those identified with the management, such as executive officers, general office department heads, division managers, managers of districts serving more than 1,000 customers, division superintendents, shop superintendents, and general foremen, and those employees holding [8] E. W. Robinson, the respondent's vice president in charge of operations, testified that all the interconnected systems feed power into what is in effect one system when they are all generating power and that it is impossible to ascertain the source of a particular unit of energy. As a result of the connection of the respondent's lines with those of the other companies, the respondent's facilities would automatically supply more power to the other companies if some break-down should occur in their generating facilities.

[10] For example, the orders for train movements would have to be sent over commercial lines instead of the railroads' own telephone systems. The effect of the cessation of the power supply upon commercial telephone system is discussed below.

[12] Radio stations use the teletypewriter to communicate with central network stations outside the State of Alabama.

[13] Stockbrokers use the teletypewriters to take and transmit quotations and orders, ordinarily to and from points outside the State of Alabama.

[14] One or more radio stations located in each of the cities of Birmingham, Montgomery, and Mobile, Ala., have connections with and broadcast the programs of national radio networks.

[15] The Birmingham Electric Co. supplies power to the Birmingham Airport. We have found above that the Birmingham Electric Co. ordinarily procures all the electricity distributed by it from the respondent.

[16] The respondent did not waive its objection to the materiality of such testimony by entering into the stipulation.

[17] Included among these plants are: Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., of Alabama; Pepperell Manufacturing Co.; Nestles Milk Products, Inc.; Bemis Bros. Bag Co.; E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.; and many textile mills and coal mines. Other concerns, not so included, such as the Republic Steel Corporation and the Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. ordinarily rely upon the respondent's power but have substitute or supplementary sources of power available to them.

equivalent or higher titles or positions with authority to hire and discharge.

III. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

In our consideration of the unfair labor practices we are met at the outset by the respondent's contention that the Board and the I. B. E. W. are estopped from pressing the charges here involved because two elections have been held at the instance of the I. B. E. W. with knowledge of the respondent's activities with respect to the representation association and the employees' association. The first of these elections was held in 1934 under the auspices of the National Labor Board [20] between the I. B. E. W. and the representation association. Since this election was held pursuant to a law other than that under which these charges are brought, the I. B. E. W. is not estopped from pressing charges even if it then had knowledge of the respondent's activities with respect to the representation association. This Board had nothing to do with the 1934 election and cannot be bound by the acts of another agency which was acting pursuant to the terms of another law.

The second election was held under the auspicies of this Board pursuant to the consent of the I. B. E. W. and the respondent in November and December 1937. The Employees' Association was not on the ballot and took no formal part in the election. The I. B. E. W. was defeated by about 84 votes in this election. While in the interests of the effective administration of the act, the Board may, in its discretion, refuse to issue an order when its agents have previously represented to an employer that if he consents to an election pending charges will not be pressed,[21] the respondent here advances no evidence that any such representations were made. Even where no such representations are made, the Board has refused to consider events occurring prior to a consent election where the union later alleged to be dominated has appeared on the ballot and where the employer, subsequent to the time it consented to the election, has not engaged in unfair labor practices which show a continuity with conduct and attitude prior to such consent.[22] Here the Employees' Association did not appear on the ballot; moreover, as we find below, the respondent continued its unfair labor practices after the election of November 1937 and these practices were a continuation of the unfair labor practices indulged in prior to that time. The Board will therefore, in its discretion, consider evidence relating to unfair labor practices engaged in prior to the election of November 1937. We now consider such evidence.

A. Alabama Power Company Employees' Representation Association

1. The Organization of the Representation Association

Prior to spring 1934 there was no labor organization among the respondent's employees. In about March of that year the I. B. E. W. initiated an organizing campaign, carried on largely by a group of employees who had become interested in the I. B. E. W. The respondent's attitude toward labor organization was by that time already known to at least one of the individuals, J. C. McIntosh, who was active in starting the I. B. E. W. organization. Around the first of the year Superintendent Cox, of Jordan Dam,[23] in handing to McIntosh a letter sent to McIntosh bearing the return address of William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, said, "McIntosh, you realize that the company is opposed to organized labor." McIntosh replied that he was aware of the respondent's attitude, and Cox warned him, "Now, I don't know what is in that letter, but if I am called on for any information as regards organization at this plant, I will have to tell them about this letter." [24]

Late in March or early in April 1934, Superintendent of Production Neeson told McIntosh that the I. B. E. W. could go ahead and complete its organization if it liked but that if it did so there would not be enough men left at Jordan Dam to hold a meeting.[25] A few months later, in June 1934, McIntosh was transferred from his position as clerk at Jordan Dam to a job painting houses at the Gorgas steam plant. Upon his arrival at Gorgas, McIntosh was informed by Superintendent Lineberry that he knew McIntosh was an I. B. E. W. member, that there was no need for labor organization at Gorgas, that the men there would not be interested in the I B. E. W., and that the I. B. E. W. would not be successful on the respondent's properties. Lineberry then introduced McIntosh to Foreman Packer, under whom McIntosh was to work, and warned Packer that McIntosh was "full of I. B. E. W. ideas." [26] At about the same time Superintendent Cox asked R. R. Wade to go to work early one day. When Wade arrived Cox talked to him about the I. B. E. W. and asked him not to join.

During the spring of 1934 James Barry, the respondent's vice president and general manager, was advised by the various division managers [27] that I. B. E. W. organizational activity was going on in certain parts of the respondent's system. On about June 1, 1934, Barry undertook to draft a plan of employee representation with the aid of Vice President Robinson, Superintendent Neeson, and McWhorter, the respondent's general legal adviser. Barry testified that he undertook the preparation of the plan because he had been advised by a number of supervisors that the employees desired a plan of representation for the purposes of collective bargaining,[28] and that the National Industrial Recovery Act had stimulated the employees' interest in collective bargaining. The plan, as drawn by Barry, set up the representation association. The organizational scheme of the representation association may be generally described as an employees' representation plan. Under the plan local departmental councils, such as the accounting department council for the northern division, were to be elected. One councilman was to be elected to these department councils for each 20 members in that department. The councilmen elected as chairmen of each department council made up the division councils.[29] The chairmen of the various division councils made up the general council. The plan provided that each councilman be an employee of 1 year's standing and that he forfeited his office upon his transfer or upon his leaving the respondent's employ. The departmental councils were empowered to negotiate with the respondent concerning matters relating to employees of their respective departments; the division councils were similarly authorized with respect to the employees in the several divisions; and the general council took care of matters of interest beyond the scope of the departmental and division councils.

[23] The superintendents of the respondent's various plants are in charge of the plants and personnel generally. They are under the supervision of Production Superintendent Neeson and are themselves superior to the plant foremen, who are sometimes referred to as assistant superintendents. These superintendents, together with division superintendents, are clearly important supervisory officials. Neeson is directly subordinate to Vice President Robinson, in charge of operations.

[24] Cox did not testify. The respondent objected to the admission of this testimony because it was not covered by the complaint and because the incident occurred prior to the effective date of the act. As to the first objection, it is valid only if the respondent was not given an opportunity to rebut the testimony. In this case, however, at the close of the Board's case, the respondent made a motion that the hearing be adjourned for several days in order that the respondent might have time to prepare its defense, and the motion was granted. The respondent had an opportunity to meet the evidence and was given a fair hearing. The objection as to the occurrence of the incident prior to the effective date of the act is without merit since such matters are necessary to an understanding of the background and circumstances surrounding the formation of a labor organization which continued after the effective date of the act and which we find below was the predecessor of another organization which existed for a considerable time after the effective date of the act. (See N. L. R. B. v. Pennsylvania Greyhound Lines, Inc., et al., 303 U. S. 261.) During the hearing objections were made to other testimony upon the same grounds. We do not feel it necessary to point out and deal with each of these objections, for in all cases where such testimony is relied upon the above observations apply.

[25] Neeson testified that he did not make such a statement. However, in view of Cox's and other supervisory officials' statements of the respondent's attitude toward labor organizations, we are satisfied that McIntosh's testimony, summarized above, is substantially correct.

[26] Lineberry did not testify.

[27] The respondent, for purposes of administration, has divided its operations into 6 geographical divisions, which are under the direction of the division managers for certain purposes. It also divides its system into functional departments without reference to geographical location, such as the production department, the distribution department, and the like. Neeson, as already noted, is superintendent of the production department.

[28] In about May 1934 Foreman O. L. Heath told Division Manager Hunter that he had been asked to join the I. B. E. W., that he was not particularly interested but that he thought the employees needed some sort of organization, and asked Hunter if the respondent intended to make any response to the employees' demand for organization. Hunter replied that he would take it up with "Birmingham" (the respondent's general offices) and let Heath know. Hunter never advised Heath as to what he had done. At about the same time, Herbert Ross, an employee, was given some I. B. E. W. literature by one Williams and a few days later Superintendents Neeson and Dawkins approached Ross and inquired whether Williams had seen him and what Williams had had to say.

[29] The division councils consisted of the northern division, the eastern division, western division, southern division, southeast division, and Mobile division whch are geographical divisions of the respondent's system. The local departmental councils under these divisions are generally the accounting, distribution, local operations, and service, sales, and transmission departmental councils. In addition to these divisions the plan sets up the general office division with six departmental councils under it, and the production division council. Under the production division council are seven departmental councils, each representing one or more hydroelectric or steam-generating plants.

By the terms of the Barry plan, the reasonable and necessary expenses of the representation association were to be paid by the respondent and no dues or assessments were to be levied until a majority of the employees had so voted at a special election. The plan made no provision for regular general membership meetings, although such meetings could be called locally by the departmental councils, divisionally by the division councils, and generally by the general council. In addition, divisional meetings or general membership (by divisions) meetings could be called by membership petitions bearing the signatures of 20 percent of all members in the division and in the representation association, respectively.

The plan also makes provision for the arbitration of disputes with the consent of the general council and the management. The plan was to take effect upon the vote of a majority of the eligible employees.

About July 30, 1934, Barry had packages of mimeographed copies of the plan, together with a letter from himself to the employees,[30] sent in bundles to the various divisions and district offices to be distributed to the employees. The plan was presented to the employees by the various superintendents and supervisors. At the Gorgas steam plant, Superintendent Lineberry presented the plan to the employees and informed them that he did not think the men needed "any form of damn organization." He explained that he had attended a superintendents' meeting where Barry had discussed the plan, and had told Barry that if the respondent would restore the Christmas bonus and give the employees a 10-percent wage increase, he, Lineberry, thought the agitation among the employees would stop. He further stated that Barry had said that the respondent would have to give the employees some form of organization.

On August 9, 1934, an election was held in which the employees were to indicate whether they wanted to be represented as proposed by the Barry plan. This took place on the respondent's property during working hours. The majority of all the employees voted to accept the Barry plan. At the magazine plant and in the production department[31] generally, however, the vote resulted in the defeat of the plan. Superintendent Ames of the magazine plant then suggested to U. L. Gibson, an employee, that the plan should be given a trial to see whether the men could not obtain the results they desired through the plan and that Gibson present the matter to the other employees of the plant in that way. The plan was then resubmitted to the men and on the second vote they voted in favor of the plan. There was no resubmission of the plan to the production department generally.

Shortly after the election Foreman Pledger of the Gorgas plant informed the employees that Superintendent Lineberry wanted to see them in front of the office. When the men had assembled, Lineberry announced the results of the election and said that the result was not as favorable as he thought it should be; that he thought that Superintendent Neeson did not deserve the slap he had received in the vote; and that if the employees could not see the matter the way the respondent saw it, he would work with them for 6 months or perhaps a year or two, but if they could not come around to the respondent's view they could seek work elsewhere.[32] Thereafter most of the men present at the meeting joined the representation association.

Membership in the representation association was evidenced by the employees' signatures to a document stating that those signing chose to become members. In at least two plants the superintendent took the document to employees who had not signed and inquired if they wished to join.[33] One of these superintendents, Dawkins, told an employee that it would look bad for his plant if the men did not join. One employee, Heath, who was at that time a foreman in the distribution department, did not join the representation association. He was called into Superintendent Hulbert's office and was questioned by Hulbert about his attitude toward the representation association. Heath said that he did not care to join. According to Heath, Hulbert then spoke of the I. B. E. W. and said, "We didn't need a bunch of northerners to come down here and tell us southern people how to run our business, and that we didn't need that organization, and asked me which side I was on, the respondent's side" or the side of the I. B. E. W.; and warned Heath that if he did not drop out of the I. B. E. W. and join the representation association he would jeopardize his job with the respondent.[34]

Superintendent Hollis of Mitchell Dam also continued to make the respondent's attitude toward the I. B. E. W. clear to the employees during the period when the representation association was being organized. On one occasion, when Hollis was away, McRae and seven other employees at Mitchell Dam joined the I. B. E. W. On Hollis' return he was told by the plant foreman that as soon as he had left 8 or 10 men had joined the I. B. E. W. Hollis called these men into his office one by one. According to McRae, Hollis told him at his interview that the men had made a "terrible mistake"; that they would not have joined the I. B. E. W. if Hollis had been there; and that the respondent was like a sturdy boat which had carried them through the depression, and the men had jumped off into a frail craft, the I. B. E. W., and it would probably sink with them.[35]

Departmental councilmen were elected in August 1934. The chairmen of the departmental councils which made up the division councils and the chairmen of the division councils who made up the general council were elected shortly thereafter, and the organization of the representation association was complete.

While it is clear that the foregoing events, and other events recited below, taking place prior to July 5, 1935, did not themselves constitute violations of the act, they reveal the respondent's course of conduct over a period of years, the effects of which continued well beyond the effective date of the act. As a result, such events supply the necessary background against which subsequent events may be more accurately evaluated.

2. The Representation Association From September 1934 to August 20, 1935, and the Organization of the Employees' Association

The first production division council meeting was held in the respondent's general offices in Birmingham on September 21, 1934. One of the councilmen who had arrived early met Superintendent of Production Neeson, who told him that the respondent would not recognize the I. B. E. W. as a bargaining agency but would recognize the representation association.[36]

Starting on September 29, 1934, the National Labor Board, at the request of the I. B. E. W., held an election among the employees in the various electrical departments to determine whether the employees desired the representation association or the I. B. E. W. to represent them for purposes of collective bargaining. This election lasted for a number of days. In connection with and prior to this election, the respondent paid the expenses of representation association councilmen who went to various plants and urged the employees to give the plan a chance to operate for 90 days and see

[30] The letter advised the employees that an election would be held on August 9, 1934, on 2 propositions:

(a) The question of whether the employees desire to organize for the purpose of having representation for collective bargaining.

(b) The adoption of the tentative plan transmitted herewith as a basis for initial operation, in the event organization is desired by a majority of the employees.

The letter also stated that prior to August 9, 1934, the employees in each department should select three tellers to conduct the election.

[31] The production department operates the power-generating plants and some of the substations.

[32] Gurley Hill testified that he knew of four men who had voted against the plan. Of these, three are still working for the respondent. There is no evidence that the one no longer working was discharged because of his vote on the plan. Two of the four became members of the representation association. While it appears that the threat to discharge employees who did not accept the respondent's views on the plan was not carried out, the employees did not know at the time that the threat was made that it would not be.

[33] Upon objection being made to this procedure at one plant by one of the tellers, the document was destroyed and another one placed on the desk at the plant for the employees to sign.

[35] Hollis' version of the conversation was that he had said that he was greatly surprised that any employee who worked for him had thought he had to wait until he got out of the plant to join any organization and that was what he had informed the men; and that he had spoken of the respondent as a sturdy boat carrying the men through the depression but he had not said anything about the men jumping off into a frail craft.

We do not see why Hollis found it necessary to discuss the respondent's treatment of the employees during the depression if he did not mean to imply that the men had committed a disloyal act in joining the I. B. E. W. One, Parrish, who was apparently of the same group, testified that Hollis had told him he was making a mistake in joining the I. B. E. W. and that he, Hollis, would not do so if he were Parrish. We find that the statement of the incident set forth above is substantially correct.

[36] Neeson, although he testified, did not deny making this statement. Neeson's attitude toward the I. B. E. W. is illustrated by the following incident. Sometime prior to July 5, 1935, Neeson had a conversation with Powell, an employee, concerning the I. B. E. W. According to Powell, Neeson inquired whether Powell was one of the group of men who had sent in I. B. E. W. applications. Powell said he was. Neeson then told Powell that the respondent had Powell's interest at heart and that he thought Powell was making a mistake and was building a fence between himself and the respondent. Neeson advised him that if he had not already paid dues to the I. B. E. W. not to do so.

Neeson testified that while he had probably talked to Powell about the advantages and disadvantages of the I. B. E. W., he had never questioned Powell's right to join it. Neeson denied that he had asked Powell whether he had sent in an I. B. E. W. application but admitted that he had probably told Powell that he was making a mistake, that the respondent had Powell's interest at heart. Neeson also denied that he had advised Powell not to pay I. B. E. W. dues but stated that he may have asked Powell what dues he was paying. While the two versions vary in their details, it is clear that Neeson at least advised Powell that he was making a mistake in joining the I. B. E. W. since the respondent had Powell's interest at heart, and we so find.

Neeson's attitude toward the I. B. E. W. is further illustrated by his statement to McIntosh in May 1935, that McIntosh could not expect a better job with the respondent so long as he was an I. B. E. W. member.

what it could do for them. The chairman of the general council also traveled about the system electioneering at the respondent's expense. Just prior to the election Superintendent Lineberry suggested to G. W. Kindley, an employee, that he use his influence to get the men to "vote right" and said that some of the men were going off at a tangent. Lineberry also stated that if the men chose the I. B E. W., it would not be a representative of their own choosing, that representation would be out of the employees' hands. The representation association won the election.

Also in September of 1934, Herbert Ross, Jr., asked Superintendent Dawkins for the use of the clubhouse at Martin Dam for an I. B. E. W. meeting. The clubhouse is located upon the respondent's property and is available to the employees for various social uses. Dawkins refused to allow the I. B. E. W. to use the clubhouse. He testified at the hearing that he did not allow it to be used since the respondent's employees from other dams were to attend; that he viewed these other employees as "outsiders" and the clubhouse was for the use of Martin Dam employees only. Dawkins also testified that either in 1934 or 1935 he himself had held a Rotary Club meeting at the clubhouse which was attended by some persons who were not employees of the respondent at all. We are satisfied that the true reason for Dawkins' refusal of the clubhouse to the I. B. E. W. was not that employees from other dams were to attend the meeting but that Dawkins desired to place an obstacle in the way of I. B. E. W. organizational efforts. At that time and up to July 5, 1935, the representation association held meetings in the first-aid room at Martin Dam. Thereafter, the representation association used the clubhouse for its meetings. All meetings of the various representation association councils were held during working hours in the plants and the respondent met all the expenses of the elections and other business of the representation association incurred prior to July 5, 1935.

In the latter part of October 1934 the respondent entered into negotiations with the representation association with respect to a contract governing wages, hours, and working conditions. A separate agreement governing the production department was also negotiated. The record is not entirely clear as to how the negotiations were carried on but it appears that the production division council ultimately accepted a proposal made by Superintendent Neeson.

In addition to the negotiation of the wage agreement the representation association carried on individual grievance work. Ross was chairman of the production division council from August 1934 until April 1935 and was active in the grievance work. He was also a member of the I. B. E. W. until shortly after the I. B. E. W. lost the election in September and October 1934. On one occasion in November or December 1934, Ross' superior, Dawkins, returned from a meeting of superintendents and told Ross that the superintendents in the production department were "cussing out" Ross because of these activities. Dawkins testified, and we find, that he told Ross that the superintendents at the meeting had accused Ross of going around and "drumming up" grievances; that Dawkins thought it would be more satisfactory if Ross waited until grievances came to him instead of going around and asking the men if they had any grievances; that the superintendents felt that Ross was not handling grievances in the manner provided by the plan; and that for Ross' own good it would be well to handle grievances as the plan provided.

The record discloses nothing material concerning the activities of the representation association from this time until May 1935. On May 17, 1935, the general council appointed a committee to rewrite the representation association's constitution, the Barry plan, in order to make it conform to the act, which was then pending before the Congress. The committee prepared a draft of an amended plan. One member of the committee, Howard Williams, submitted the draft to McWhorter, the respondent's attorney, to get his advice upon the wording of one section. McWhorter made a few changes in the wording. The proposed amended plan was then mimeographed upon paper provided by the respondent and with the respondent's machines. At the same time the committee prepared and mimeographed, with the respondent's machinery and stationery, a letter submitting the amended plan to the members and a ballot form for use in the vote upon the amendment.[37] Williams, a committee member, then spent about a week in touring the system and getting the approval of various division councilmen to the proposed amendment. The petition of 20 percent of the members for an amendment is required by the Barry plan. The respondent paid Williams for the time spent in this distribution and paid the expenses incidental thereo.[38]

On July 9, 1935, the general council met in the Alabama Power Building, Birmingham, voted to hold an election upon the amendment, and approved the explanatory letter and ballot already prepared by the committee. The minutes of the meeting also disclose that McWhorter, the respondent's attorney, was called in to the meeting to interpret some of the provisions of the act; that the secretary of the general council was then instructed to write a letter to Barry advising him that no expenses incurred after the effective date of the act would be certified to the respondent for payment; and that a proposal[39] for a general wage increase was taken up with Barry, who promised that the general council would have an answer on the proposal shortly.

Copies of the proposed amended plan were then sent out to the division councilmen for distribution to members of the representative association, with the letter advising that an election would be held upon it on August 20, 1935. Some meetings were also held to explain the amended plan to the employees. On July 14 or 15, 1935, Councilman McRae went to Georgas to hold such a meeting. Either Northcutt or Kindley, employees active in the representation association, told Superintendent Lineberry of the expected visit and Lineberry gave the representation association his permission to have the meeting held during working hours. McRae addressed the men and told them it was necessary to amend the Barry plan because of the passage of the act. At about that time Lineberry told Northcutt that if all the employees would get behind the representation association it could be made to work without having any outside organization.[40]

The election on the amended plan was held on August 20, 1935. Ballot boxes were placed around the respondent's plants and at least some employees cast their votes during their working hours. The constitution, as altered by the amendment, was adopted.

The amendment made only two substantial changes in the representation association; namely, in changing the name of the organization to Alabama Power Employees' Association and in providing that if payment of expenses by the respondent should constitute a violation of any valid provision of law, the general council should then have authority to assess membership dues at the rate of 15 cents a month. The amended plan provided that the incumbent officers and councilmen of the representation association should remain in office until the next annual election. Other changes of a minor character, which in no way altered the general organizational scheme of the representation association, were also made but many of the provisions of the two constitutions are identical.

On August 20, 1935, with the acceptance of the amended constitution, the employees' association came into being and the representation association was considered dissolved.

3. The Employees' Association From August 20, 1935, to July 23, 1938

Officers and councilmen of the representation association continued to act as such for the employees' association.[41] They continued to use the representation association books and records and carried to completion the negotiation of an agreement with the respondent, originally initiated by the representation association. The employees association's general council and production division council continued to meet in the respondent's building in Birmingham until May 1937. Many of the departmental councils continued to meet and hold elections upon the respondent's property, in some instances in superintendents' offices during working hours, as late as April 1938. The employees' association officials likewise continued to use the respondent's stationery and had minutes of some of the council meetings typed by the respondent's stenographers.

The expenses of the election of August 20, 1935, conducted by the representation association were ultimately paid by the employees' association out of dues collected by it. Shortly after the election, the employees' association requested the respondent to deduct dues from the salaries of the employees. The respondent agreed to institute a "check-off" system but informed the employees' association that deductions could be made only upon the basis of individual authorizations signed by the employees. The employees' association then had membership application cards printed which had attached [37] Howard Williams, a member of the committee, testified that the committee mimeographed these documents in June 1935, prior to their approval by the general council, because it desired to have the respondent meet the expenses involved. He could not recall that the committee had been advised that the respondent would not or could not pay for this work at a later date. Lamar Aldridge, the respondent's treasurer, testified that prior to the passage of the act, he and Vice President Barry decided that if the act passed, the respondent could not continue to pay the expenses of the representation association. Barry testified that this decision was not communicated to the representation association.

[39] The proposal was in the form of a letter to the respondent's president and vice president which set forth arguments in favor of a wage increase and included the recommendation that the respondent:

"Seriously consider our statement that this council and representation association is threatened with destruction or replacement by outside labor organizations unless some outstanding and significant move is sponsored and encouraged by this association and our management."

Barry's reply was delivered to the wage committee, which was appointed by the representation association in July or August 1935. Barry explained the reasons why the respondent could not give a general wage increase at that time and with respect to the above-quoted recommendation, pointed out that it was unsound; that if the employees did not believe in the representation association they could change it; and that the respondent hoped that the fears of the representation association were groundless and that the organization would be preserved.

[40] About 2 weeks later Lineberry told Northcutt that the I. B. E. W. affected the respondent as would the shaking of a red rag in a bull's face and that the representation association affected the I. B. E. W. in the same way.

[41] New officers and councilmen were elected in April 1936. Robert Klein was elected as chairman of the general council shortly thereafter and continued to hold that position until May 1938. Klein was a cashier in the general office in Birmingham and handled the respondent's general cashbook. He had authority to recommend the hiring and discharging of employees in his department.

to them authorizations for the deduction of employees' association dues from the salary due to the signer. An applicant ordinarily signed both cards.[42] Distributions of these cards by the employee representatives among the employees started about August 31, 1935.[43] Solicitation in behalf of the employees' association was undertaken by at least one supervisor, F. J. Springer, foreman of the substation maintenance crew, who was at that time the chairman of his division council. Springer handed out the cards to the men in his crew and others and asked them if they wished to sign. The men signed the cards and returned them to Springer who completed filling them in. Springer testified that he filled in 40 or 50 application cards in this manner.

As already indicated, the employees' association continued to function in much the same manner as had the representation association. It negotiated contracts with the respondent and undertook the settlement of individual grievances. During the active existence [44] of the employees' association the respondent's officials made clear to the employees that they would do well to refrain from I. B. E. W. activity, and to join the employees' association.[45] During the year 1936, Superintendent Neeson inquired of McDaniels, an employee, whether he belonged to the I. B. E. W. When McDaniels replied in the affirmative, Neeson advised him that it would be best not to belong; that the respondent would do more for him if he were not an I. B. E. W. member; and that the payment of I. B. E. W. dues was just a waste of money.[46]

In late June 1936, Superintendent Lineberry asked F. F. Hyche, an employee, whether he had joined the I. B. E. W. Hyche said that he had applied for membership. Lineberry told Hyche that he had been coming to Lineberry for advice on other matters but if the I. B. E. W. went on strike, he, Lineberry, would be through with Hyche; that Hyche should join the Employees' Association and build himself up with the respondent. When Hyche replied that he had not joined the I. B. E. W. because he was against the respondent, Lineberry explained that Hyche was either for or against the respondent since he could not serve two masters. During the summer of 1936, Superintendent Hall inquired from Mussleman, an employee, what benefit he expected to derive from the I. B. E. W. and expressed the view that the only persons benefited by that organization were its international officers, that it was all hokum about the rank and file receiving any benefit. After advising Mussleman that he could do his fellow workers more good by working hard in the employees' association, Hall cautioned him that he need not expect any good jobs with the respondent if he stayed in the I. B. E. W. Mussleman replied that he did not believe that Hall or his assistant would discriminate. Hall answered, "Yes, but unfortunately, we are not the Alabama Power Co."

Sometime during the latter part of 1936, or in 1937,[47] Superintendent Lineberry inquired of John Walker, an employee, "John, have you heard about our union." Walker said he had not. Lineberry said, "Well, we got a union, John, you can join it if you want to. It will cost you 15 cents a month." The amount of dues mentioned clearly indicates that it was the employees' association to which Lineberry referred.

In February 1937 Superintendent Dawkins said to Romine, an employee, that he understood that Romine had withdrawn from the employees' association, and that he was sorry Romine had done so. Dawkins advised Romine that so far as he, Dawkins, was concerned, Romine could belong to anything he wanted to but that Dawkins felt that the respondent would rather that Romine did not belong to the I. B. E. W.[48] On May 6, 1937, Fred Mayfield, an I. B. E. W. member, and two friends paid a visit to Lay Dam, where S. R. Powers is the superintendent. On his way out of the plant Mayfield met Powers, who said to him, "Mayfield, I would rather you fellows wouldn't come up here trying to organize my men."

Shortly prior to an election held by the Board in November and December 1937, discussed below, McRae, accompanied by W. S. Parrish, another employee, went to visit the rotary substation at Montgomery, where Pete Chambliss was foreman. At that time Chambliss informed McRae, in the presence of several employees of the substation, that he, Chambliss, was doing everything in his power to fight the I. B. E. W.; that the I. B. E. W. was misrepresenting the facts when it said that the management was not antagonistic to the I. B. E. W.; and that the respondent's vice president, Coleman, had said at a banquet that the respondent did not need the I. B. E. W., since the employees' association was filling the bill.[49]

The respondent's attitude toward the I. B. E. W., and its freedom in allowing the employees to be aware of that attitude, is further demonstrated by a letter sent on September 13, 1937, to Superintendent Dawkins by District Manager Kittredge. The letter reads as follows:

"Mike Neeson [superintendent of production] told me the other day that you and Winn [an employee] thought I was responsible for getting Winn sent back to Martin Dam, and he said he told you that I had nothing to do with it which was true.

"I think this may have started from something I said to Mr. Thigpen [an employee] one day when we were discussing union activities, before I found out that Thigpen was active in it (the I. B. E. W.). I was talking to him about Winn keeping after our boys trying to induce them to join [the I. B. E. W.] and I remarked to him that it might be a good thing to send Winn back to Martin Dam, but that is as far as the thing went."

As stated above, pursuant to a request made by the I. B. E. W., the Board, with the respondent's consent, on November 29, 30, and December 1, 1937, held an election among the employees of the respondent to determine whether or not they desired to be represented by the I. B. E. W.[50] The I. B. E. W. was defeated in the election by 84 votes out of the 1,186 votes counted.

Shortly after the election, Superintendent Winston informed McIntosh that he personally did not care to what organization the men belonged but that he thought there was no question that the respondent would prefer to deal with the employees' association "as they had it" rather than with the I. B. E. W. A further illustration of the respondent's continued assistance to and interference with the employees' association is the conversation between R. C. Gaunt and Superintendent Hall. Gaunt had been active in the employees' association but resigned on February 1, 1938. He had joined the I. B. E. W. some months earlier. At about the time of his resignation from the association, Hall asked Gaunt how he expected to get anywhere riding two horses. He also stated that Gaunt had some employees' association records which he had been requested to return and accused Gaunt of having turned them over to the I. B. E. W. instead. Gaunt, as a matter of fact, had not turned the records over to the I. B. E. W.

On June 29, 1938, the respondent replied to the employees' association's request for a meeting to negotiate a new contract by informing it that charges had been filed by the I. B. E. W. alleging that the employees' association was dominated and supported by the respondent, and that in view of the charges the respondent

[42] Persons on commission rather than a straight salary did not sign the authorizations.

[43] During 1936, Employee Representative Maxwell asked James Farrar to join and, when he refused, Maxwell asked why and wrote down the answer which Farrar gave. Farrar inquired why he did that and Maxwell replied that he wanted to turn over the answers to Superintendent Neeson when he returned from Mobile and that he had also written down the replies of other employees. Subsequently, Farrar asked Maxwell whether he had given the information to Neeson. Maxwell said that he had and that Neeson had read the material and had requested that the employees' replies be turned over to him.

Neither Neeson nor other supervisors spoke to Farrar about his failure to join the employees' association or his reasons therefor.

Neeson denied that he had requested Maxwell to get the information but did not deny that he had received such information from Maxwell. We find that Maxwell gave Neeson the information.

[44] There is a conflict in the testimony as to whether the employees' association is still in existence. This matter is discussed below.

[45] There is evidence that these officials were instructed not to interfere with labor organization and not support any union. The general instructions, unless they were followed, are immaterial. The activities of supervisors are coercive irrespective of whether they are carried on pursuant to, or in violation of, instructions. The respondent is not absolved from its responsibility for the acts of its agents merely because they were contrary to instructions.

[46] Neeson denied that he had ever discussed the I. B. E. W. with McDaniels in the year 1936, and testified that he never discussed the I. B. E. W. with any of the men after the effective date of the act. The views expressed are those Neeson is said by other employees to have expressed to them and we find no reason for questioning McDaniels' recollection of the date of the conversation. We find that the above statement is substantially correct.

[47] The witness was not certain of the date but was sure that it was subsequent to 1935.

[48] Dawkins' version of the incident was that the I. B. E. W. was discussed only with reference to its insurance program and that he had not told Romine that he felt that the respondent would prefer that Romine not join the I. B. E. W. In view of our findings above and below as to what various supervisors had stated the respondent's attitude to be, both before and after this time, we find that the version of the incident given above is substantially correct.

[49] The version given above is McRae's. Chambliss testified that the visit took place shortly before the election conducted by the Board in the fall of 1937; that a number of men from the hydroelectric plants had visited the substation during that period and he so informed McRae; that he, Chambliss, knew what McRae was there for and he was going to vote against the I. B. E. W.; and that he had told McRae that he "was going to do all the harm" to the I. B. E. W. that he could. Chambliss denied that he had said that the I. B. E. W. was misrepresenting when it said that the management was not hostile to it and that he had quoted Coleman to the effect that the employees' association was filling the bill. Chambliss could not recall that Coleman's name was mentioned. Chambliss also testified that there had been no banquet or meeting with the respondent's officials in years. W. S. Parrish, who was also present at the interview, substantially corroborated McRae's version of the interview. We find, therefore, that McRae's version of the interview is substantially correct but our finding does not go to whether or not Coleman in fact made the statement attributed to him at the interview by Chambliss.

[50] The employees' association informed the Board that it did not desire to have its name placed upon the ballot. Both the employees' association and the I. B. E. W. were active in campaigning for the election, attempting to persuade the employees to vote as the particular organizations desired. There is evidence in the record that Line Foreman Overton was requested to use his influence with his crew to get them to vote in favor of the I. B. E. W., but there is no evidence that he did so. A line crew usually consists of seven or eight men.

believed it inadvisable to meet with the employees' association. The employees' association took no immediate action with regard to this letter or the information contained therein.

4. The Employees' Association and the Independent, From July 23, 1938

On July 23, 1938, R. B. Freeman,[51] a member of the employees' association, called a meeting in Birmingham of employees selected from various localities, of whom many were members of the employees' association. At this meeting the Independent was organized. One of the employees invited to the meeting was Marshall Blackmon, who subsequently became the president of the Independent. On July 19, 1938, Freeman telephoned Blackmon and asked him to meet him, Freeman, on July 23, 1938, in the Thomas Jefferson Hotel in Birmingham. Blackmon asked Freeman what it was "all about" and Freeman said that he would tell Blackmon when he saw him. Blackmon testified that he had assumed that the meeting was about a union although he had no reason for making the assumption. Similarly, S. W. Templin,[52] who became one of the vice presidents and secretary-treasurer of the Independent, was invited to attend by Freeman and was told that he would find out what it was about when he arrived. About 12 employees and Rice, an attorney, attended the meeting. Rice had previously been retained by the employees' association in connection with the election held under the auspices of the Board in November 1937 and continued to represent the employees' association during the summer and fall of 1938. Freeman informed Heath, who inquired how the Independent happened to retain Rice, that Rice was retained by Freeman upon the recommendation of Howard Williams, treasurer of the general council of the employees' association.

The meeting was opened by Freeman, who stated that the purpose of the gathering was to organize an independent union which would meet the requirements of Federal and State laws. He explained that he had consulted Rice, had requested him to draw up a constitution, and had then called together those present as representative persons from each division to go over and ratify the constitution drawn by Rice. Freeman said that the employees' association was going to be "thrown out," because the charges made by the I. B. E. W. would be upheld by reason of the fact the employees' association was "derived" from the representation association. Rice also spoke and said that it was necessary to have a workable organization in the event that the employees' association were ordered disestablished by the Board because the Board, if there were only one labor organization in existence, would then "recognize" the I. B. E. W. as the exclusive bargaining agency without reference to whether or not it represented a majority. The constitution thus presented was adopted at the meeting after some changes had been made. It has never since been accepted by the membership of the Independent or by representatives designated by the membership. In addition, officers were elected at the meeting to serve 1 year or until their successors were elected.[53] A resolution was adopted that the name of the organization should be Independent Union of Alabama Power Employees, Inc., and that it be incorporated. Provision was made for monthly dues of 25 cents. On July 27, 1938, incorporation papers for the Independent were filed. On July 30, 1938, the officers of the Independent distributed a letter to employees announcing formation of the organization, enclosing a copy of its constitution and soliciting the employees to join.[54]

About August 1, 1938, Blackmon telephoned Lyle, the chairman of the general council of the employees' association and inquired as to the status of the employees' association. Lyle informed Blackmon that the employees' association was not negotiating with the respondent, that things were at a standstill. On August 11, 1938, the employees' association sent out a letter to its members informing them inter alia that charges involving it had been filed with the Board, denying that the employees' association was dominated or supported by the respondent, and stating that the employees' association had requested from the respondent that if the respondent should stipulate with the Board to withdraw recognition from or disestablish the employees' association, the respondent retain the right to advise the employees concerning the basis for such action.

On August 24, 1938, the independent sent out a letter, signed by Blackmon, to all employees, soliciting membership in the Independent and stating:

"* * * the (employees') association has successfully represented the majority of the employees without coercion or interference from anyone.

"Now after two elections in which the majority of the employees have signified their desire not to be represented by any outside labor organization, the I. B. E. W. has filed charges with the N. L. R. B. charging the Alabama Power Co. with unfair-labor practice arising out of its relationship with the Alabama Power Co. Employees' Association. * * * These charges, as we understand them (and it is the opinion of competent counsel), are sufficient grounds for the Labor Board to order the company to cease and desist negotiating with the * * * employees' association * * * if any one of these charges is sustained by the Labor Board, that would automatically disestablish the employees' association as our majority bargaining agency, which would, of course, leave the employees without majority representation. * * *

"* * * we are now again being forced to decide who shall bargain for us. The answer should be, as has been in the past two elections, the independent employee representative type of labor organization. This independent union has preserved for the employees the right to select who shall represent them to the company on matters of wages, hours, (etc.). * * *

"I have been a member of the * * * employees' association since its organization and definitely know that through its efforts it has received a better wage agreement and many worth-while accomplishments that could not have been negotiated by any other bargaining agency.

"I have discussed with the chairman of the * * * employees' association the status of the old organization, and he informed me that it would definitely disband and that no further dues would be collected. His letter to each of you [the letter of August 11, referred to above], he said, was to let you know that the old organization was not tucking its tail and running, but was emphatically denying charges made by the I. B. E. W. * * * The chairman has already made application for membership in the new organization [independent]."

This letter was prepared with Rice's assistance, as was all literature sent out by the independent.[55] Templin, the secretary of the independent, attended to the mailing of the letters to prospective members whose names, according to his testimony, he procured from the roster in the employees' association office[56] to which he had access as a councilman in the employees' association from the engineering department. Late in July 1938, the independent arranged with the employees' association, through Williams to use space in the employees' association office and to pay rent therefor for about a week. Subsequently, on October 1, 1938, the employees' association gave up the office space and the Independent took it over.[57]

Other letters were sent out from time to time soliciting the support of the employees for the independent. One of these letters was sent to S. R. Watson, superintendent of the Anniston district. Watson replied, in a letter to Blackmon, as follows:

"A few days ago I received a letter from you dated September 19, 1938, in which you invited me to sign an application for membership in the independent. * * * I believe that this must have been an error in addressing. Heretofore in my capacity as superintendent of the Anniston district * * * I have been barred by the rest of the employees from membership in their unions. I believe that was a reasonable ruling on their part and it seems to me that the ruling should still apply. However, if I am wrong and my membership would be of any value to the rest of the employees I will be only to (sic) glad to help."

Personal solicitation of membership in the independent was also carried on by those interested in the organization. They were assisted in this solicitation by the actions and attitudes of some of the respondent's supervisors. High Line Foreman R. L. Winn received independent literature from Templin and took it around to the houses of the members of his crew in July or August 1938. On August 8, 1938, after he had became a member of the independent, Winn accompanied Templin and another person active in the independent to an independent organizational meeting held in the home of J. R. Hall, Jr.,[58] then employees' association councilman from Martin Dam. This meeting was also attended by E. C. Milton, plant foreman of the Upper Tallassee and Thurlow Dams.[59] Winn addressed the meeting, spoke in favor of the independent, and told of grievances which had arisen among the members of his crew and which had been handled by the employees' association.

[53] The same officers were holding office at the time of the hearing, no election having been held in September 1938, as required by the constitution, because the Independent had no money to pay for an election.

[54] On August 4, 1938, a second letter was sent out by the Independent to employees explaining that the organizers of the Independent had acted because of their feeling that "in view of certain charges having been filed by the I. B. E. W. with the N. L. R. B. * * * which charges, if sustained, would automatically disestablish the * * * employees' association, therefore leaving the employees without any majority bargaining whatsoever."

[55] No provision was made for the payment of Rice's fee. According to Blackmon, Rice was taking a chance upon the success of the Independent.

[56] The employees' association took office space on June 14, 1937. Prior to that time its records were kept in the respondent's building and it received mail from the respondent's mail box.

[57] From August 25, 1938, until October 1, 1938, the Independent rented other office space.

[58] J. R. Hall, Jr., is the clerk of the respondent's three hydroelectric plants located on the Tallapoosa River.

[59] A plant foreman of a hydroelectric plant is also commonly referred to as an "assistant superintendent." Plant foremen have the same powers as other foremen. They are in charge of the plants in the superintendent's absence, and can make recommendations concerning the hire or discharge of employees, the final word on such matters being reserved to E. W. Robinson, vice president in charge of operations, and S. M. Barry, vice president and general manager.

application card [60] in the respondent's local office and told two or three members of his crew who were present that those who cared to join the Independent might do so and that he would mail in their cards with his own. W. D. Winn also filled in a portion of one Rhodes' card at the latter's request. All the other members of W. D. Winn's crew had by then filled out their cards. At this time W. D. Winn was a councilman in the employees' association and testified that as far as he then knew the employees' association was still active.

A substation maintenance foreman, J. O. Summers, distributed Independent application cards to the members of his crew. Early in August 1938, Vernon Taylor was given an independent application card by his superior, W. H. Murray.[61] Murray told Taylor to look it over and if it suited him to fill it out and give it to Arthur Abels, who was in charge of the service department at Gadsden. At about the same time C. E. Packard, foreman in the turbine room at the Gorgas plant, asked Chester Jackson whether he had yet joined the Independent. Jackson said that he had not, that he wanted to know more about it first. Packard replied, "Well, the main thing is to keep the I. B. E. W. out of here. Ninety or ninety-five precent of the members of the independent union had rather not have any union at all, but they would rather have a company union than have the I. B. E. W." [62] That this was the attitude of the independent members is shown by the testimony of Blackmon, president of the Independent, who admitted at the hearing that the presence of the I. B. E. W. in the respondent's plants had some effect upon himself and the other organizers in coming to a decision to organize the Independent, although it was not "necessarily" one of the main reasons for organizing the independent.

On September 1, 1938, Lyle, chairman of the general council of the employees' association, acting upon the advice of Rice, wrote the respondent as follows:

"After due consideration of all the circumstances regarding the relationship of this association with Alabama Power Co., it has been decided to advise that effective immediately this association will not negotiate further with the company as the majority bargaining agent for their employees. * * *

"You are also advised that this association will not request any further pay-roll deductions for membership dues."

On September 7, 1938, the respondent replied to Lyle's letter and pointed out that the deductions were made upon the basis of individual authorizations and not upon the basis of an agreement between the employees' association and the respondent. On September 8, 1938, the employees' association replied and advised the respondent that it would not receive any "moneys representing payroll deductions * * * whether the employees have withdrawn their requests and authorizations or not." The respondent then sent out notices to the employees notifying them that it had been notified by the employees' association that it would receive no further pay-roll deductions in payment of dues and that the respondent could therefore no longer comply with the authorizations to make deductions for this purpose. The total amount deducted from salaries and paid over by the respondent to the employees' association for dues during the period that the check-off was in effect amounted to $7,115.40.

Lyle testified that this action was taken pursuant to the authority, to take whatever action Rice recommended, vested in him by the general council at an informal meeting, sometime in August 1938, at which five out of seven councilmen were present. No regular meeting was held for the purpose. Williams, treasurer of the employees' association, testified that the only activities carried on by the employees' association after June 30, 1938, were the administration of the health and accident insurance program and the hospitalization insurance program, which were sponsored by it. Williams further testified that no official of the organization had discussed with him the question of financing it after June 30, 1938.

Although there is conflicting evidence in the record as to whether or not the employees' association is still in existence, it is clear and we find that the employees' association ceased to act as a representative of the employees for purposes of collective bargaining with regard to wages, hours, and other conditions of employment on or about September 1, 1938. It is also clear that thereafter the employees' association continued to exercise its functions with regard to insurance programs, of which it was the sponsor.

[60] These application cards are almost identical with those used by the employees' association and were copied from the latter. Attached to them are authorizations to the respondent to deduct independent dues from salary due the employees, identical with those used by the employees' association. These authorizations have not been presented to the respondent.

[62] Packard denied that any such conversation had taken place. He also testified that Jackson's general reputation for truth was bad, that Jackson had made a number of misstatements. Jackson testified that immediately after the conversation he made a memorandum of the conversation. This memorandum was introduced into evidence. The memorandum gives a version substantially similar to that given in the text above, which is a quotation of Jackson's oral testimony. The trial examiner, who observed the behavior of the witness on the stand, found that Jackson's testimony was truthful. We see no reason to question the memorandum made by Jackson shortly after the conversation and we find that the version of the conversation appearing in the text above is substantially correct.

On September 9, 1938, the independent wrote to the respondent advising it that the independent had been organized, that a majority of the employees were expected to join, and that when they had done so the independent would request recognition. A copy of the independent's constitution and bylaws was enclosed. On October 14, 1938, the independent wrote to the respondent claiming to represent a majority of the employees and requesting recognition as bargaining agent for the employees. On October 17, 1938, the respondent replied that a complaint had been issued by the Board against the respondent alleging that it had assisted in the formation of, and had contributed support to, the independent; and that in view of the pending complaint, the respondent thought it inadvisable to recognize the Independent until further developments on the complaint.[63]

5. Conclusions

It is clear from the record that the representation association was originally set up by the respondent; that it received complete financial support from the respondent from its inception until July 5, 1935, that all its meetings were held upon the respondent's premises, usually during working hours; and that the respondent's other property was used freely by the representation association in the conduct of its business. It further appears and we find that the respondent's purpose in setting up and continuing to support the representation association was to counteract the organizational activity of the I. B. E. W. That this was the respondent's purpose is shown by the fact that the representation association was organized at the time when the I. B. E. W. was becoming active in its campaign for membership; by the respondent's hostility to the I. B. E. W., as demonstrated by numerous remarks of supervisory officials to that effect; and by Superintendent Lineberry's statement to the employees under his supervision that he had told Barry that if the respondent would restore the bonus and give a wage increase he thought the agitation among the employees would stop and no form of representation would be necessary That the respondent was deeply interested in the adoption of the Barry plan is further indicated by the activities of Superintendents Ames and Lineberry in connection with the employees' election upon the acceptance or rejection of the Barry plan. It will be recalled that Ames had the plan resubmitted to a vote when the first vote resulted in the defeat of the plan at the Magazine plant and that Lineberry warned that if the employees could not see the question of the plan as the respondent saw it, they would sooner or later have to seek work elsewhere. That the superintendents were acting pursuant to the respondent's well-understood policy that the plan was to be the form of employee representation to exist in its system, and as such was to be accepted by the employees, is demonstrated by Superintendent Dawkins' statement that it would "look bad" for his plant if the men did not join.

The foregoing, together with the pressure put upon employees to join the representation association by superintendents in at least two plants, and the continued expression of the respondent's hostility to the I. B. E. W. by supervisors, indicate clearly that the Barry plan was forced upon the employees and was in no sense their free and untrammelled choice. Nor was the election of September 1934 held by the National Labor Board a much better test of the employees' desires in the matter of representation. The respondent interfered with and attempted to influence the results of this election by bearing the expenses of the representation association's campaign, by urging the employees to give it a 90-day chance, and by Lineberry's suggestion that Kindley use his influence to get the men to "vote right." In view of Lineberry's outspoken attitude of hostility to the I. B. E. W., we entertain no doubt that he intended that the men should vote in favor of the representation association. In addition to the foregoing, the respondent further clarified its hostility to the I. B. E. W. and favoritism to the Barry plan, by denynig the I. B. E. W. use of its facilities, while giving the representation plan complete financial support.

The respondent not only initiated and completely supported the representation association, it also interfered with the day-to-day administration of the plan. As stated above, Superintendent Dawkins complained to Ross, the chairman of the production division council, about the latter's activity in taking up grievances and warned him that, for his own good, it would be well to handle grievances as the plan provided. This implied threat to Ross' well-being in an attempt to prevent him from exercising his best judgment in behalf of his constituents is the clearest form of domination and interference with the affairs of a labor organization.

We find that the respondent was entirely responsible for the original organization of the representation association and that it thereafter interfered with its administration and dominated and supported the representation association until July 5, 1935. The respondent contends that these acts, which took place prior to the effective date of the act, are immaterial since they were

[63] The Independent claims to have over 1,100 members, of whom 60 percent are said to be employees classified as field or physical workers. A total of 1,191 employees voted in the election held in November 1937 under the auspices of the Board. The record does not disclose the total number of employees who were entitled to vote in this election. The record does show that it was not unusual for an employee to be a member of the I. B. E. W. and at the same time to be a member of the representation association or the employees' association, but it does not indicate whether there are many employees who belong both to the I. B. E. W. and the independent not in violation of the act. As already stated, the respondent's activities prior to the effective date of the act are not unfair labor practices within the meaning of the act, but their influence upon the employees and their results continued after that date. On July 9, 1935, the general council of the representation association, holding a meeting in the respondent's building in Birmingham, decided to notify the respondent that no more expenses would be turned over to the respondent for payment. Other than this cessation of the respondent's direct financial support,[64] the representation association continued unchanged after the effective date of the act until the amendment of its constitution of August 20, 1935, which resulted in the formation of the employees' association. We find that after the effective date of the act, the respondent continued to interfere with, dominate, and support the representation association, an organization originally formed by it, and thereby interfered with, restrained, and coerced its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in section 7 of the act.

Through the action of Howard Williams, then the secretary of the general council of the representation association, the respondent bore a substantial portion of the cost of the amendment to the constitution of the representation association which resulted in the organization of the employees' association. It paid for the mimeographing and paper required for the various necessary documents and paid Williams' traveling expenses in connection with the amendment. Although the respondent's major outlay was made[65] prior to the effective date of the act, nevertheless it resulted in substantial assistance in the formation of the employees' association, since neither the representation association nor the employees' association had, at that time, any funds of their own, and a large number of documents were prepared.[66]

The amendment made only two substantial changes in the Barry plan; it changed the name of the organization and it allowed dues of 15 cents a month to be assessed in the event that payment of expenses by the respondent should violate any law. The officers of the representation association continued to act as officers of the employees' association; they continued to use the representation association books and records in the transaction of the employees' association's business; and continued and concluded the negotiation of an agreement with the respondent, which they had initially sought as officers of the representation association. Meetings and elections of the various councils of the employees' association continued to be held upon the respondent's premises, sometimes during working hours.[67] Such expenses of the amendment to the representation association as were not met by the respondent in the manner above indicated were ultimately paid out of the funds of the employees' association.[68] It is clear from the foregoing, and we find, that the employees' association is the same organization as the representation association, operating under a new name; that the respondent contributed financial support to the formation of the employees' association; and that it thereafter assisted the employees' association by allowing it free use of the respondent's property and time for meetings and elections. We find further that the respondent aided the employees' association by collecting its dues through the "check-off" system administered by the respondent. The "check-off" did more than merely facilitate the collection of dues. It also discouraged the employees from withdrawing from the employees' association, since the only method of stopping the payment of dues was to notify the respondent to cease making the deductions. Since the employees were made well aware of the respondent's desire that the employees' association endure, both by the assistance rendered to it and by the activities of supervisory employees, they would naturally be hesitant to advise the respondent to cease deducting dues. Thus the "check-off" tended to perpetuate the effects of the respondent's unfair labor practices.

During the active existence of the employees' association the respondent's officials made it clear to the employees that they would do well to join the employees' association rather than the I. B. E. W.; that the respondent would do more for them if they were not I. B. E. W. members; that they should join the employees' association and "build up" themselves with the respondent; and that I. B. E. W. members need not expect good jobs. This course of conduct clearly interfered with the formation and administration of, and gave support to, the employees' association, since its necessary effect was to make the employees fearful that a failure to join the employees' association rather than the I. B. E. W. would result in economic hardship to, or discrimination against, them.

Upon the basis of the foregoing we find that the respondent has dominated and interfered with the formation and administration of the employees' association and has contributed financial and other support thereto and has thereby interfered with, restrained, and coerced its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed by section 7 of the act.

By the activities of the respondent's officials and by the various forms of support contributed to the employees' association, the employees were fully advised that the respondent favored the employees' association and that a failure to support that organization might result in some economic injury to themselves. The employees also knew that the respondent had persisted in its policy of support and favoritism with respect to both the representation association and the employees' association over a long period of time, both before and after the effective date of the act. Under these circumstances, we find that the employees could not have felt free in their choice of bargaining representatives. Thus the election of November 1937, held under the auspices of the Board, was not a true indication of the desires of the employees as to a bargaining representative.

The final consideration here presented is that of whether or not the Independent has been dominated, interfered with, and supported by the respondent. The Trial Examiner found that the respondent caused to be formed, and sponsored, the independent. The evidence relating to the respondent's direct interference in the formation of the independent is summarized above and concerns the assistance given the independent by supervisors in the solicitation of members. Foreman R. L. Winn distributed Independent literature to the members of his crew at their homes; he attended and spoke at an independent organizational meeting; Foreman Milton attended the same meeting; Foreman W. D. Winn offered to mail in the application cards of the members of his crew with his own; Foreman Summers distributed application cards to the members of his crew; Foreman Murray gave Taylor an application card and told him to fill it out if it suited him; and Foreman Packard asked Jackson if he had joined the independent and advised him that the principal object of the independent was to keep out the I. B. E. W. As to all these foremen, the respondent contends that there is nothing in the character of their position upon which to base an inference that they could speak for the respondent in a matter of policy affecting the respondent's entire system. The foremen in question have authority to make recommendations concerning the hiring and discharge of employees, who work under their immediate direction and take orders from them. They represent the management to those working under them and as such have at least apparent authority to inform the employees upon the respondent's policy. The respondent is responsible for their activities.[69]

The respondent also urges that the assistance contributed by the foremen is no indication of interference with, or domination or support of, the independent because foremen are eligible to I. B. E. W. membership. Whatever may be the merits of such a contention under other circumstances, we do not regard it as valid under those here presented. Here the respondent had, for almost 4 years, followed a policy of dominating, interfering with, and supporting labor organizations of its employees. It had, as we have found, made plain to them upon many occasions its hostility to the I. B. E. W., had threatened to discriminate against those who persisted in remaining members of the I. B. E. W., and had advised employees that they would better their positions by being members of the representation association or of the employees' association. The respondent took no action at any time to advise the employees that there was any change in this policy, or that it no longer intended to dominate and support organizations of its employees which were amenable to its wishes. Under these circumstances, the employees could not have felt free to join whatever organization they desired.[70] In addition to the above considerations, it may be pointed out that while the record discloses that at least two foremen were members of the I. B. E. W., there is no evidence in the record that they undertook solicitation in behalf of the I. B. E. W. after the effective date of the act.

We find that by the activities of the foremen in behalf of the Independent, the respondent interfered with the formation of, and gave assistance to, the independent.

An analysis of the constitution and organizational structure of the Independent supports the conclusion that it is not an organization capable of operating independently of the respondent's wishes. In many respects, the constitution is similar to, and in some instances almost identical with, the constitution of the employees' association. It will be recalled that, with the two exceptions noted above, the constitution of the employees' association was substantially the Barry plan which had been foisted upon the employees by the respondent. The constitution of both the employees' asso-

[64] The employees as a whole were given no notice that the respondent had ceased giving direct financial support. So far as they knew, the representation association was still fully supported by the respondent.

[65] The respondent's machines, after the effective date of the act, were used by the representation association to fill in blank dates left in the documents.

[66] Further assistance in the organization of the employees' association was the advice of the respondent's attorney upon the wording of one section of the amendment. Williams' action in showing the proposed amendment to the respondent's attorney further indicates the subservience to the respondent of those responsible for the organization of the employees' association.

[67] As stated above, the Council meetings held in Birmingham were not held upon the respondent's premises after May 1937, but local meetings and elections were so held at least as recently as April 1938.

[68] The expenses were originally met by various officials of the representation association and they were reimbursed by the employees' association.

[69] Matter of Swift & Co. and Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, Local No. 641 et al., 7 N. L. R. B., 268, enf'd as mod., Swift & Co. v. N. L. R. B., 106 F. (2d) 87 (C. C. A. 10).

[70] There is some evidence in the record that one or two of the respondent's officials had, in the past, stated that employees were free to join any labor organization they desired. However, in the face of many statements and other indications to the contrary, they could have carried little weight with the employees.

ciation and the independent limit their membership to the respondent's employees and provide that membership is terminated upon the termination of the employer-employee relationship. Both establish three tiers of employee-representation councils (in the case of the Independent, called boards), local councils, division councils, and a general council (in the case of the Independent, called the executive board) and in which the chairmen of the local councils or boards make up the division councils or boards, and the chairmen of the division councils or boards make up the general council or executive board. The Independent has changed the electoral divisions in some of the divisions and has added a division or two, but the plan of organization is essentially that of the employees' association, namely, an employees' representation plan in which the membership as a whole is far removed from any direct control over the highest governing body, the general council or the executive board.

Both constitutions require that employee representatives be members of the organization and employees of 1 year's standing, which effectually prevents the employees from designating nonemployees as their bargaining representatives. Both provide that employee representatives who leave the respondent's employment or who are transferred from the electoral division from which they were elected are deemed to have vacated their offices. This provision vests in the respondent control over the representatives chosen by the employees. If an employee representative is distasteful to the respondent for any reason, it can prevent him from acting as such by discharging or transferring him. The respondent originally vested this control in itself in the Barry plan and maintained it thereafter in the constitution of the employees' association. That the Independent should provide the respondent with the power to disqualify the representatives selected by the employees is persuasive evidence of the independent's subservience to the respondent.

Representatives who are themselves employees, completely dependent upon the respondent, cannot act freely in the interest of their constituents unless they are in some way protected against economic coercion by the respondent. The constitution of the Independent makes no attempt to provide such protection. On the contrary, it provides that its members, which includes the employee representatives, lose their membership if they cease being employees. Having lost his membership, an employee representative could not have his discharge protested as a grievance since provision is made only for taking up the grievances of members.

Neither constitution makes provision for general membership meetings at which the membership can discuss its problems and instruct its representatives. Under both constitutions, meetings can only be called by the various councils or boards or upon petition of a large number of members. The membership's only functions under both constitutions appear to be the payment of dues and voting for representatives or on amendments to the constitutions. This pattern of membership nonparticipation, as well as the other essential elements of organizational structure discussed above, was originated by the respondent in the Barry plan, continued thereafter through the medium of the employees' association, and was ultimately adopted by the independent. The organizers of the independent necesarily were aware of the respondent's sponsorship of the employees' association. The form taken by the Independent clearly flowed from the respondent's hostility to outside labor organizations and its open preference for the employees' association and its predecessor, the representation association.

In view of the foregoing, the independent may realistically be regarded as the successor to the employees' association. It is apparent, moreover, that the two organizations are more closely related than the organizers of the former were willing to acknowledge. They did admit, however, that the independent was organized to supplant the Employees' Association and that one of the factors leading to its formation was a desire to prevent the I. B. E. W. from becoming the majority representative. As noted above, the respondent originally formed the representation association to prevent the I. B. E. W. from gaining a foothold and as a part of its policy of opposition to the I. B. E. W. The respondent continued its policy of opposition to the I. B. E. W. and support of a competing labor organization after the organization of the representation association's successor, the employees' association. In this respect, the independent was the direct successor to the employees' association as the respondent's bulwark against the I. B. E. W. The independent took care to emphasize to the employees that it was the employees' association's successor. In its letter to the employees of August 24, 1938, the independent pointed out that, like the two associations, it was "the independent employee representative type of labor organization," and that the chairman of the employees' association had joined the independent. Viewed against the background of the respondent's policy of support of labor organizations of the type represented by the Independent, the letter indicated to the employees that they would do well to join the independent, as successor to the favored employees' association.

A further connection between the employees' association and the independent appears in the similarity of their constitutions. Both employed the same attorney, who represented and advised them concurrently. As early as August 1, 1938, the chairman of the general council advised one of the organizers of the independent that the employees' association would not longer act as bargaining agent, but made no formal disclosure to this effect to the respondent until September 1, 1938. On September 7, 1938, the independent was sufficiently organized to advise the respondent that it would soon be seeking recognition as the exclusive representative of the employees. Other factors point to a substantial identity of the employees' association and the independent. The former allowed the latter to use its membership lists for organizational purposes; a number of employees' association councilmen were active in soliciting in behalf of the independent; Howard Williams, prominent member and treasurer of the employees' association, assisted in mailing independent literature; and the chairman of the employees' association's general council joined the independent before any notice was given to the respondent or to the membership of the employees' association that it would no longer act as bargaining representative.

Under the circumstances, we think it clear that the independent's organizers, the respondent, and the respondent's employees, all regarded the Independent as the successor to the employees' association, designed to combat the I. B. E. W. on the respondent's behalf.

We deem it important to stress again the effect of the respondent's long-standing and widely expressed policy of hostility toward truly independent labor organizations in general and the I. B. E. W. in particular. The fundamental purpose of the act is that employees should be afforded a full and free opportunity to choose their bargaining representatives, without the influence of the employer being brought to bear, either bluntly or subtly, so as to interfere with their choice. The respondent's failure to make any genuine effort to undo the effects of its unfair labor practices and to conform its labor policy to the law of the land is clear. Its 4-year campaign of sponsorship of "inside" organizations and hostility to the I. B. E. W. was in no wise disavowed by the mere diminution of the vigor with which this policy was proclaimed to the employees. The conclusion is inescapable that the formation of the independent was in large part a response to the continuing desire of the respondent for a labor organization patterned after its own creature, the original representation association.

We find that the continued existence of the independent, with the accompanying background of employer interference, domination, and support of its two predecessor organizations, offers a permanent obstacle to any free choice by the employees or their representatives for the purposes of collective bargaining.

Upon the basis of the foregoing, we find that the respondent dominated and interfered with the formation and administration of the independent, and contributed support to it, and thereby interfered with, restrained, and coerced its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in section 7 of the act.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

We find that the activities of the respondent set forth in section III above, occurring in connection with the operations of respondent described in section I above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relation to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States, and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

V. THE REMEDY

We have found that the respondent has dominated and interfered with the formation and administration of the representation association, the employees' association, and the independent, and has contributed support to them. In order to effectuate the policies of the act and free the employees of the respondent from such domination and interference, and the effects thereof, which constitute a continuing obstacle to the exercise by the employees of rights guaranteed by the act, we shall order the respondent to withdraw all recognition from the employees' association, to disestablish it as a representative of the employees for the purposes of collective bargaining with respect to grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or other conditions of employment. We shall not, however, extend our order of disestablishment to the relationship between the respondent and the employees' association insofar as it pertains to the accident and health insurance program and the hospitalization insurance program sponsored by the employees' association. We shall further order the respondent not to recognize the Independent in the future as a representative of the employees for the purposes of collective bargaining. We have found that the sum of $7,115.40 was turned over by the respondent to the employees' association pursuant to an agreement by the respondent to collect dues for the Employees' Association by pay-roll deductions, such collection of dues being a further type of support and assistance rendered to an employer-dominated organization. As we said in matter of the Heller Brothers Co., of Newcomerstown, and International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Drop Forgers, and Helpers: [71]

"It seems plain to us that the authorization by an employee for the check-off of dues owed to an organization which his employer has formed and continues to dominate cannot be considered as having been voluntarily given by the employee. When check-off authorizations are sought under such conditions the employee is placed in a position of permitting the check-off or of putting himself squarely upon record as openly opposed to the company's wishes. No employee confronted with such an option can be regarded as having exercised free choice. Thus the same pressures by the respondent which compelled its employees to abandon their free choice of representatives enforced their acquiescence in the check-off. Under the circumstances we will restore the status quo by ordering the respondent to reimburse its employees for amounts deducted from wages as dues for the Independent."

[71] 7 N. L. R. B. 646. See also Matter of West Kentucky Coal Co. and United Mine Workers of America, District No. 23, 10. N. L. R. B. 88.

Adapting the reasoning of the above-quoted paragraph to the facts in this case, we will order the respondent to make whole its employees individually for the full amounts deducted from their wages as dues.

Since we have found that the representation association is no longer in existence, we shall make no order with respect to it.

The respondent will, in addition, be ordered to cease and desist from dominating and interfering with the formation and administration of and from contributing support to the employees' association, independent, or any other labor organization; and to cease and desist from interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of the right to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing and to engage in concerted activities, for the purposes of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection.

Upon the basis of the above findings of fact and upon the entire record in the case, the Board makes the following:

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Alabama Power Employees' Association, and Independent Union of Alabama Power Employees, Inc., are labor organizations and Alabama Power Co. Employees Representation Association was a labor organization within the meaning of section 2 (5) of the act.

2. The respondent, by dominating and interfering with the formation and administration of the Alabama Power Co. Employees' Representation Association; Alabama Power Employees' Association; and Independent Union of Alabama Power Employees, Inc., and by contributing support to said organizations, has engaged in and is engaging in unfair-labor practices, within the meaning of section 8 (2) of the act.

3. The respondent, by interfering with, restraining, and coercing its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed by section 7 of the act, has engaged in and is engaging in unfair-labor practices, within the meaning of section 8 (1) of the act.

4. The aforesaid unfair-labor practices are unfair-labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of section 2 (6) and (7) of the act.

ORDER

Upon the basis of the above findings of fact and conclusions of law, and pursuant to section 10 (c) of the National Labor Relations Act, the National Labor Relations Board hereby orders that the respondent, Alabama Power Co., Attalla, Ala., and its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall—

1. Cease and desist from—

(a) In any manner dominating or interfering with the administration of Alabama Power Employees' Association and Independent Union of Alabama Power Employees, Inc., or with the formation or administration of any other labor organization of its employees, and from contributing support to said Alabama Power Employees' Association or to Independent Union of Alabama Power Employees, Inc., or to any other labor organization of its employees;

(b) In any other manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of the rights to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively with representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in concerted activities, for the purposes of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, guaranteed in section 7 of the act.

2. Take the following affirmative action which the Board finds will effectuate the policies of the act:

(a) Withdraw all recognition from Alabama Power Employees' Association as a representative of any of its employees for the purposes of dealing with the respondent concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or other conditions of employment, and completely disestablish Alabama Power Employees' Association as such representative; provided that the withdrawal of such recognition shall not require the interruption of the relationship between the respondent and the Alabama Power Employees' Association relating to the accident and health insurance program and the hospitalization insurance program sponsored by Alabama Power Employees' Association;

(b) Refrain from recognition of Independent Union of Alabama Power Employees, Inc., as a representative of any of its employees for the purposes of dealing with the respondent concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or other conditions of employment;

(c) Reimburse, individually and in full, all employees who were, or still are, members of Alabama Power Employees' Association for all dues which it has deducted from their wages, salaries, or other earnings, on behalf of Alabama Power Employees' Association pursuant to the arrangement between the respondent and the Alabama Power Employees' Association;

(d) Immediately post notices in conspicuous places in each of its plants, office buildings, or other buildings throughout its system, and maintain such notices for a period of 60 consecutive days, stating that the respondent will cease and desist in the manner set forth in 1 (a) and (b), and that it will take the affirmative action set forth in 2 (a), (b), and (c) of this order;

(e) Notify the regional director for the fifteenth region in writing within 10 days from the date of this order what steps the respondent has taken to comply herewith.

ALABAMA POWER WORKERS REAFFIRM DETERMINATION—COMPANY UNION BATTERIES AND PLUG-UGLY BOSSES FAIL TO SHAKE COURAGE OF L. U. 904—LAW FLOUTED BY WILLKIE UTILITY

TALLASSEE, ALA.—Still one of the blackest spots on the utility map, the Alabama Power Co. continues its incessant war on organized labor. The company is a unit of the vast Commonwealth & Southern, a huge holding corporation of which, until his very recent resignation, Wendell L. Willkie, former Democrat and now Republican nominee for Presidency of the United States, was chairman of the board of directors.

Whether Willkie is at fault or not is beside the question. Undoubtedly, if he is interested in labor at all, he might very easily rectify the deplorable situation now existing on this power system.

SIX YEARS CONTINUOUS

The battle for labor recognition on this property has been raging for about 6 years, has run the gantlet of every device conceived in the minds of labor-hating bosses to destroy all semblance of democracy, company unionism has run rampant, the Labor Relations Act has been flouted and laughed at, Labor Board orders have been ignored or corrupted by the tycoons, and plug-uglies have incited riotous conditions to discredit union affiliation.

"Even in this year 1940," states an observer, "men are forced to face the same brutal conditions on this company's property that were thought to be wiped out decades ago.

"Just a few instances will serve to show the deplorable treatment meted out to those who dare to exercise their right to join a union of their own choosing.

UNION MEMBER SLUGGED

"A steam plant superintendent, notorious for his slave driving and labor baiting, slugged a union member who dared to resent being falsely labeled a thief. A hydro plant foreman threatened to knock another union member on the head when the member offered some constructive criticism of the foreman's faulty work. The known presence of company spies keeps everyone on nerves' edge and the widespread enmity of bosses for union members has reduced efficiency to a low ebb.

"In addition to all of this the company is still resisting an order to refund dues deducted from the payroll for the support of a company union, condemned as illegal under provisions of the Labor Act. The amount due is in excess of $10,000.

"This battle provoked and continued by the company since 1934, is probably the most outrageous anti-union campaign in recent history. But I. B. E. W. Local Union 904 continues to hold the fort for organized labor. We shall win."

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board having issued an order against respondent, Southern Indiana Gas & Electric Co., Evansville, Ind., pursuant to a stipulation entered into by the parties on May 11, 1940, and the parties having consented to an entry of a decree of this court enforcing said order of the Board, and the Board having petitioned this court for the enforcement of its said order; upon consideration of the petition of the Board for enforcement of said order and the stipulation of the parties; it is hereby ordered, adjudged, and decreed that Southern Indiana Gas & Electric Co., Evansville, Ind., its officers, agents, successors, and assigns shall—

1. Not—

(a) Dominate or interfere with the administration of the Association of S. I. G. E. Employees, Inc., or the formation or administration of any labor organization of its employees or contribute support to the Association of S. I. G. E. Employees, Inc., or to any other labor organization of its employees;

(b) In any manner, interfere with, restrain, or coerce its employees in the exercise of their rights to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in concerted activities, for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, as guaranteed in section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the policies of the National Labor Relations Act:

(a) Withdraw all recognition from the Association of S. I. G. E. Employees, Inc., as a representative of any of its employees for the purposes of dealing with the company concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or other conditions of employment;

(b) Post immediately notices in conspicuous places throughout its plant and maintain such notices for a period of 30 consecutive days, stating that the respondent will not engaged in any of the acts or practices set forth in paragraph 1 (a) and (b) of this order, and that it will take the affirmative action set forth in paragraph 2 (a) and (b) of this order;

(c) Notify the regional director for the eleventh region of the National Labor Relations Board within a period of 10 days after the entry of this order what steps have been taken to comply with said order.

SIMPLIFICATION OF ACCOUNTS OF TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 844) to simplify the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States, and for other purposes, which was, in line 7, to strike out "1940" and insert "1941."

Mr. WAGNER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

SUSPENSION OF CIVIL LIABILITIES OF CERTAIN PERSONS IN THE ARMED FORCES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4270) to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. AUSTIN, and Mr. GURNEY conferees on the part of the Senate.

IMPROVEMENT OF RIVERS AND HARBORS IN THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9972) authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, before we proceed with committee amendments, I think it would be appropriate for me to make a brief statement about the bill.

The bill before us is not a customary river and harbor improvement bill. It has an extraordinary aspect in that it is founded upon the national defense, not the national defense as a pretext, but the national defense as an actuality, and I am hoping that we may confine the legislation, for the present, at any rate, to the technical national defense; that is, that the projects in the bill, or projects which may be proposed by way of amendment, shall have been approved by the duly constituted authorities, to wit, the Board of Engineers of the Army, or the Commander in Chief, the President of the United States, or the Navy authorities, or the Coast Guard authorities, as actual necessities of the present national-defense program of our country.

I think I should make a further statement in this connection. During the present session of the Congress the House of Representatives and the Senate passed a river and harbor bill authorizing the appropriation of about $110,000,000.

That measure was vetoed, and in the veto message the President declared that the Congress ought not to authorize so large an expenditure, in view of the current necessities of the national defense. Sympathetic with that view, I did not move to override the veto, nor was a motion to override it made in the other House, but thereafter the House of Representatives prepared the bill which is before us—House bill 9972.

The Committee on Commerce has approved the bill practically as written, making only one material addition. That happens to be a rather costly addition, but I think a very important one. The House bill authorized the appropriation of $24,000,000 for 22 projects—the list of the projects appearing on page 6 of the report—but the Senate committee, upon the advice of the Army engineers, modified the provision with respect to the Los Angeles and Long Beach Harbors in California, so as to increase the cost of the projects there from $7,000,000 to $17,000,000. So whereas the House bill as passed calls for only $24,000,000, the bill before the Senate, by that single modification, increases the sum by more than $10,000,000—that is, to $35,000,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Inasmuch as this is, at least ostensibly, purely a national-defense measure, what changed the situation, so far as the Army engineers are concerned, as to defense requirements between the time the House passed the bill and the time the bill was presented to the Senate?

Mr. BAILEY. I can state to the Senator that the change is only with respect to the Los Angeles and Long Beach projects.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand that, but I am asking the Senator with regard to those particular projects.

Mr. BAILEY. The original projects provided for a breakwater off Long Beach, in the interests of the Navy, of 7,000 feet, in order to provide harbor facilities. The engineers advised us that there was needed a breakwater of 21,000 feet, and that is what makes the difference.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did the engineers so advise the House committee and the House?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not know.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Has the situation in regard to the Los Angeles and Long Beach Harbors changed in the slightest degree since the engineers made the recommendation to the House committee or the House?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I do not think the situation in the harbors has changed, but the situation with respect to the defenses of the country has changed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further——

Mr. BAILEY. Let me answer the Senator. I wish to be very courteous and patient with him and also to be as informing as possible. The engineers advised the Committee on Commerce of the Senate that the 21,000-foot extension was essential. Whether they had so advised the House I do not know, and I have not made inquiry. But the committee responded to the advice of the engineers.

Mr. President, let me say here something which I should like to say. In all these matters most Senators have no technical knowledge. I have never known what to do in matters of this sort, except to defer to the judgment of engineers, because I am not an engineer. In all matters affecting the defenses of our country I must coordinate my judgment with the judgment of the experts who are in charge.

If I may make a brief side remark, I have had a great deal of correspondence lately with my constituents, many of them seeming to understand just what the country should do in the matter of its defense, and I have notified them in all cases that I considered it my duty to defer to the judgment of the Chief of Staff of the Army and the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy in the matters of defense, on the ground, first, that this Government is one of coordinate powers, and, second, that, after all, I am not a competent judge of what is necessary and what is not necessary for the national defense. It is a highly technical matter.

I hope I have answered the Senator to the extent of giving him a statement of my point of view. He may know—I am not saying he does or does not—that a 7,000-foot breakwater is entirely sufficient. I do not know whether a 21,000-foot breakwater is more than sufficient or not. It is a technical question, and I am advocating the amendment wholly because the technical authorities have told us that it is important to the national defense.

Now, if the Senator from Missouri knows better, all right.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me say that I again question the Senator with very great trepidation because he expressed his feelings with great patience just a moment ago in yielding to one question, so I certainly do not intend to trespass very far upon time of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. I appreciate the Senator's statement.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me say that the Senator from Missouri does not profess to be a technical expert on the matter any more than does the Senator from North Carolina; but this seems to me to be an extraordinary matter. The President of the United States announced, in vetoing the former river and harbor bill, that he would be willing to sign a bill for certain defense river and harbor projects. Then the bill was passed by the House with a provision for only a 7,000-foot breakwater. I do not know whether a 7,000-foot breakwater is needed, or a 21,000-foot breakwater, or a 100,000-foot breakwater, but it seems to me to be an extraordinary circumstance that the bill passed the House of Representatives containing a provision for a 7,000-foot breakwater, and for the first time, apparently, when the bill was in the Senate committee, these great experts, for whom, incidentally, I have profound respect, finally said they needed a 21,000-foot breakwater.

I should like to know whether the Army Engineers have changed their opinion on the subject of whether they needed a 7,000-foot breakwater or a 21,000-foot breakwater.

Mr. BAILEY. I think it might be said that they have changed their opinion. The opinion first was that a 7,920-foot breakwater was needed. Now the recommendation is for a 21,000-foot breakwater. In order that we may clear this matter, and place the responsibility upon the duly constituted and technical authorities, let me read a letter which appears in the report on page 2, addressed to me by the Navy Department, under date of August 9:

> MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Navy Department has recommended under date of August 5, 1940, to the War Department, a proposed amendment to bill H. R. 9972 (Rept. No. 2361), with a view to having the authorization for the breakwater extension at Long Beach, Calif., changed from a length of 7,920 feet to 21,000 feet, not only because this extension would provide the secure anchorage desired for the increased fleet but also because the Department has secured funds and is about to undertake the construction of fleet facilities on Terminal Island for the supply and docking of ships, antisubmarine net storage, and other fleet facilities.
> The Navy Department is vitally interested also in a number of items in the bill which are of a national-defense character, such as the dredging in San Diego Harbor, the breakwater at Sitka Harbor, Alaska, the channel at Kodiak, Alaska, the dredging of Keehi Lagoon, Oahu, T. H., and the dredging at San Juan, P. R.

That is the statement. The Navy requests the project in the interest of the Navy, and I think the change was brought about because Congress has authorized a tremendous increase in the Navy.

I hope that explanation is satisfactory to my distinguished friend the Senator from Missouri. In my remark about patience, I did not mean to indicate that I was in the slightest degree impatient with him.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. In connection with the same project there is also a recommendation by the Secretary of War, as shown in the report submitted by the Committee on Commerce, on pages 2 and 3.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes. Mr. President, that is the only change of significance as between the House bill and the Senate bill.

With one more remark I shall be prepared to go forward with the amendments and the discussion of the measure. As I have said, the former bill was vetoed because it went beyond the necessities of the present time relating to the national defense. We may open the door, and one Senator after another may come in with his projects, and we may load down the legislation and bring about another veto. We may defeat the whole program by opening the doors and admitting all sorts of projects. Certain amendments will be offered, and I hope we shall give them fair consideration. My mind shall be open on the various questions. If the amendments are directly related to national defense, they will be agreeable to me.

I think I should say that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has an amendment which is not related to national defense, but I do not mention it with a view to saying that I shall oppose it. All I shall say about it is that if that amendment can be acted upon without opening the doors to a great many others, it will be agreeable to me. The Senator from Nebraska has some special considerations which he intends to submit. He is not asking for a new authorization or a new project, but is simply asking that an old authorization for an altered project shall be renewed with a view to the alteration. I take it that statement is satisfactory to the Senator from Nebraska.

So I beg the Senate not to yield to the temptation which must be in the breasts of all of us, very reasonably, to say, "Here is the opportunity to come in with my flood-control project or my local river and harbor project and get it through while a national-defense measure is going through." I am taking the course which I suggest. In the old bill there were 11 North Carolina projects. They did not involve very much money—less than $2,000,000—but in this bill there are only 2 very small North Carolina projects, and the 2 together involve about $100,000. There are plenty of needed projects in North Carolina. This year we had one of the worst floods in the history of the State.

Demands are coming to me from the people of western North Carolina to bring about some flood-control legislation, but I am not putting it in this bill. I am hoping that we may have a first-class, scientific, and well-conceived flood-control bill next year.

A great many meritorious river and harbor projects went down in the veto of the bill in the present session. I know Senators would like to bring them forward; but I am asking Senators not to bring forward any projects unless they can show, by statements from the engineers, the President, the Navy, the Army, or the Coast Guard, that their projects are directly related to the national defense.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not think the Senator can too forcefully emphasize the appeal he has just uttered. As he knows, I have opposed all the river and harbor bills which have come from the Commerce Committee during the past 2 years. There are about $400,000,000 worth of ambitious projects lurking in the cloak rooms. Each one has more or less of a reason for being—usually less. If this bill opens itself to a general reception of amendments, I know no reason why all Senators should not consider that the vehicle is available for the whole $400,000,000 worth, and we shall be right back where we started.

The bill which the Senator now presents is the first river and harbor bill in the past few years which I have supported, in spite of the fact that I come from an area which has a very intimate relation to harbor development. The Senator's bill is supported by the recommendations of the defense authority. I am sorry to say that the Senator's total reliance upon the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers is scarcely satisfactory to me, because, in the light of the record of the river and harbor engineers during the past 2 years, I am not able to assign 100-percent dependability to their judgment. However, in this instance the Senator's bill has the mark of essential national defense from the appropriate spokesmen for the Government with respect to every item in it.

We can pass that bill and it can be signed and become a law. If it is opened up to all the other amendments, and they start to accumulate in any such—I was about to say almost scandalous—degree, as has been true in regard to our previous river and harbor bills in the past 2 years, then the national defense itself will be the sufferer.

Mr. BAILEY. That is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I join the Senator in his plea.

Mr. BAILEY. I am very grateful to the Senator from Michigan. I shall take my seat after commenting upon one remark he has made. At the rate we have been going in the matter of flood-control and river and harbor projects, we shall convince ourselves and the country that the Congress is incompetent to legislate in such matters.

In view of the experience we have had since I have been chairman of the Committee on Commerce, I have been thinking that we might make better progress, and that the progress would be more substantial, if we should constitute another board. I am opposed to all that sort of thing; but I have seriously thought of suggesting a Board of Internal Improvements, in order that we might avoid the temptation within ourselves to come in at a moment like this and put even a fairly meritorious project in the bill. It is not scientific. It loads down the legislation, and makes it unpopular. We have acquired a bad name in America for our river and harbor legislation. I see it repeatedly referred to in the newspapers as "pork barrel" legislation.

I wish to avoid that sort of thing. I wish to go forward, not only with this bill, but next year with a legitimate, well-conceived river and harbor bill. I hope to go forward next year with a well-conceived flood-control bill. Both are necessities. There is room for both. But for the present I beg Senators, if they have amendments—and I make an exception of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska—to confine themselves strictly to the national-defense relationship in this matter.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not think that appeal is quite definite enough, because nowadays everything is proposed in the interest of national defense.

Mr. BAILEY. I use the word "strictly." I should say "technically", as approved by the Army, the Navy, the Coast Guard, the engineers, or the Commander in Chief.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is much better.

Mr. BAILEY. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair state the parliamentary situation.

Prior to the unanimous-consent agreement to consider the committee amendments first, an amendment was presented by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and stated. That amendment is now pending. It will have to be disposed of prior to the consideration of the committee amendments.

Mr. BAILEY. That is agreeable to me, if the Senator from Massachusetts wishes it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, between lines 20 and 21, it is proposed to insert the following:

Norfolk Harbor, Va.; House Document No. 683, Seventy-sixth Congress.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in order to show the Senate that this amendment appears to come within the limitations and suggestions of the Senator from North Carolina, I should like to read a letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS,
Washington, D. C., September, 24, 1940.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: It is my understanding that H. R. 9972 authorizing improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of national defense will be brought up on the floor of the Senate within the next day or two.

We have been cooperating very closely with the War Department (office of the Chief of Engineers) in connection with this bill inasmuch as all of the projects therein are of vital interest to the Navy in connection with the national-defense program.

The Navy Department has just received an urgent letter from the commandant of the fifth naval district recommending that the project for providing additional anchorage area south of Craney Island in Norfolk Harbor be inserted in the subject bill.

This project which will provide two anchorage spaces, at an estimated cost of $182,000, south of Craney Island, which is the Naval Fuel Depot in Norfolk Harbor, is covered in detail in house document No. 683, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session. (See Chief of Engineers' letter of March 19, 1940, p. 2 and pars. 8, 11 (b), 14, and 50.)

The increasing importance of the Hampton Roads area due to its central strategic location and enlarged defense plans now underway make it necessary that additional anchorage areas be provided for naval craft. This area will be used for ships awaiting their turn to fuel at the Craney Island depot; as a sheltered harbor for the increasing small naval craft used for loading stores, making minor ship's force repairs, liberty parties, and for the relief of the already crowded condition of other anchorage areas and dock spaces at the navy yard and the naval operating base.

The anchorage situation in the Elizabeth River at Norfolk has been made more acute owing to the necessity of providing buoy moorings for the large number of destroyers which are now basing at the operating base. Ships of the fleet are using the Craney Island Depot for fueling purposes on a continually increasing scale. It is contemplated that this anchorage will now be used entirely for Naval craft rather than for barges, freighters, and other commercial ships as contemplated in the original project and report. The estimated cost of $182,000 would appear very reasonable in proportion to the benefits to be obtained from this project.

I would very much appreciate it if you could propose the following suggested amendment when this bill is brought up on the floor of the Senate:

"Amendment intended to be proposed by _____ to the bill (H. R. 9972) authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes: On page 2, between lines 20 and 21, insert the following:

" 'Norfolk Harbor, Va., House Document No. 683, Seventy-sixth Congress.' "

Sincerely yours,

B. MOREELL, Chief of Bureau.

Let me add that anyone who has observed the conditions at Norfolk must be convinced, in my opinion, of the absolute importance and necessity of the harbor improvement.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I assume the Senator is presenting this amendment in his capacity as chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee?

Mr. WALSH. I am. I have no personal interest in it whatever.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to say to the Senator that his authority on that subject is far more satisfactory to me than almost any other that could be quoted.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the committee amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was on page 2, after line 10, to strike out:

Thames River, Conn.; House Document No. 367, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 16, after the name "California", to strike out "seaplane base and related works in accordance with the plan recommended in the report on file in the office, Chief of Engineers", and insert "House Document No. 844, Seventy-sixth Congress", so as to read:

San Diego Harbor, Calif.; House Document No. 844, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 20, after the name "California", to strike out "improvement in accordance with the plan recommended in the report on file in the office, Chief of Engineers", and insert, "House Document No. 843, Seventy-sixth Congress, and in accordance with plans developed in conjunction with the Navy Department for modifying the alinement and increasing the length of the breakwater to approximately 21,000 feet", so as to read:

Los Angeles and Long Beach Harbors, Calif.; House Document No. 843, Seventy-sixth Congress, and in accordance with plans developed in conjunction with the Navy Department for modifying the alinement and increasing the length of the breakwater to approximately 21,000 feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] has already said, I have an amendment which I have talked over with him at some length, and which I wish now to present.

Let me say, Mr. President, I am in full accord with what the Senator from North Carolina has said, and I am willing to be judged by that rule unless my amendment is an exception, as it probably is, and does not interfere in the least with the idea of constructing or providing for the construction only of defense projects. Under a preceding River and Harbor Act and in two different statutes the Board of Engineers were authorized to survey the Republican River in Nebraska and Kansas and also in Colorado, for the purpose of constructing flood-control reservoirs and making a survey of the large number of proposed projects on the Republican River and its tributaries, which would safeguard the Republican River and the Republican River Valley from damage by floods.

In 1935 that valley suffered a flood that was beyond anything ever known in the history of that section, and which was comparable to some of the great floods that have done untold damage elsewhere.

Prior to the survey of these proposed projects on the Republican River and its tributaries the Board of Engineers had recommended, for flood-control purposes, a dam on the lower Republican River in Kansas; but in the further survey of the Republican River they reported adversely on all the projects except one, and that was the construction of a dam known in their report as the Harlan County Dam, which is near the line of Harlan County, on the Republican River in Nebraska. A prior dam located at Milford, Kans., lower down on the Republican River, already approved, was reconsidered by the Board of Engineers, and considered in connection with the proposed dam farther up on the Republican River, with the result that the Board of Engineers recommended the building of the Harlan County Dam and not the building of the Milford Dam. In other words, they found that the Harlan County Dam would take the place of the Milford Dam, and so they located the dam then in Harlan County. Therefore, in reality, they sought to move the dam from Milford, Kans., to Harlan County, Nebr. I think all the people residing in the valley of the Republican River, both in Nebraska and Kansas, have approved this change.

The engineers thought it was a better location for a flood-control project; that it would perform the same office the Milford Dam would perform, and, in addition to that, by locating the dam farther up the river, it would not only give the same flood-control advantage but enable them to use the controlled water for irrigation for a distance of 75 or a hundred miles along the Republican River Valley. The people residing in that section are in the midst of a drought which has afflicted them for the last 6 years. It is as beautiful a section as can be found outdoors, and as fertile as any on the Nile, but no crops have been raised because of the drought.

It was the idea of the engineers that by relocating it the dam would retain the full value for flood-control purposes and enable the owners of the land in the Republican Valley both in Nebraska and in Kansas to irrigate their land from the controlled waters.

The act under which the Milford Dam in Kansas was recommended by the Board of Engineers contained the usual provision that they could modify or make changes as they saw fit. I concluded that their modification locating the dam at the Harlan County line was in accordance with what the law gave them the right to do, and that no further authorization would be needed. I took up the matter with the chairman of the committee and he shared with me that view. I concluded there would not be any necessity for offering an amendment to this bill. But I had the legislative counsel take it up with the Board of Engineers, and they sent me a memorandum expressing the view that the project was not in condition for an appropriation, and that, at least, raised grave doubt in my mind whether an appropriation would lie under the authorization previously provided.

The amendment I offer would do nothing else than simply, if it were possible, to move the dam from one place to another. That is the only effect it would have. I offer the amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 5. In addition to previous authorizations, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated for the prosecution of the comprehensive plan approved in the act of June 28, 1938, for the Missouri River Basin, such sums as may be necessary for the construction of a dam and reservoir on the Republican River at the Harlan County site, in accordance with House Document No. 842, Seventy-sixth Congress.

Mr. OVERTON and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield first to the Senator from Louisiana, who rose first.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, as I understand this project and the explanation made by the Senator from Nebraska, the main, if not exclusive, purpose is flood control, but it has the incidental feature that it may be used also for irrigation purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. That is correct.

Mr. OVERTON. But the main argument in support of it is that it would be of value as a flood-control project. Am I correct in that?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. OVERTON. I desire to make the observation, Mr. President, in addition to what the able Senator from North Carolina in charge of the bill has said, that the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, while it may not have adopted the policy, has, at least, undertaken to follow the policy of not approving flood-control projects in rivers and harbors bills.

The reason for that, I think, is well-grounded. In the House there is a committee which considers river and harbor projects exclusively—that is, for navigation purposes—and in the House there is also a Flood Control Committee, which considers flood-control projects exclusively. Therefore, when a project is either exclusively a flood-control project or mainly a flood-control project, it is one which ought to be considered by the Food Control Committee of the House. When the Commerce Committee adds a flood-control project to a river and harbor bill it excludes any consideration of the policy by the Flood Control Committee of the House. So, out of regard for the Flood Control Committee of the House, we have undertaken not to include in the river and harbor projects any flood-control project.

Mr. NORRIS. This amendment does not propose a new project. It means a reauthorization, because the engineers have substituted the Harlan County Dam for the dam lower down the river. It is not a new project. There is nothing new in it.

Mr. OVERTON. It is a relocation of the project?

Mr. NORRIS. That is all; and, personally, I very much doubt whether it is necessary. I want to be frank with the Senate, but I do not want to be confronted later on with a technical objection when it comes to an appropriation, and have it said that there is no authorization for it. That is all I have in view.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator is not asking for an increase in the total authorization, as I understand.

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. BAILEY. He is simply asking for the transfer of an authorization heretofore made to a dam on the same river higher up in lieu of the dam which is to be abandoned.

Mr. NORRIS. That is correct.

Mr. BAILEY. I think that is the case.

Mr. NORRIS. It is really for the purpose of meeting a technical objection.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And it does not increase the total cost of the project by a nickel.

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The question just propounded by the Senator from Michigan was one which I had in my mind. I was wondering whether or not, by this change, a larger authorization would be required and a larger appropriation ultimately made.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no. This appropriation, as I understand, will come out of the appropriation made for the Missouri River. This river is a tributary of the Missouri. That project was authorized in 1938, I think, and appropriations have been made for it. There is now an outstanding appropriation of $9,000,000 for the improvement of that river, but, of course, it includes a vast amount of territory. The Board of Engineers decide which project is the most worthy, and take the projects in the order in which, in their judgment, they ought to be taken.

I am informed by a memorandum from the Board of Engineers that this particular dam is the next one they had in view. It is a very important flood-control project. More than that, it means something to the people who have settled in the Republican River Valley for the past 50 years, and made it a garden spot until during the past 6 or 7 years, when they have been dried up every year with a drought. It will bring relief to a people who are on the verge of being driven out of the country, of starving to death. They have been hanging on there as long as they possibly can, it seems to me; and they will be able to use for irrigation the water which will be stored, and make a garden out of what is now a desert.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Some time ago—perhaps a year ago—a lawyer who had made some investigation of these projects, in connection with the development of the vast area to which the Senator has referred, indicated to me that he was fearful that there would be protracted litigation growing out of conflicts as to priority of appropriation, and that perhaps some of the upper reaches of the streams—and some of them, as I was advised, had their headwaters in other States than Nebraska—would make claims to this water, and if those claims were sustained the project to which the Senator refers would be materially injured; and, of course, such action would give rise to very serious litigation. I am asking the Senator for information about the matter.

Mr. NORRIS. I live in this part of the country. I live on the Republican River. I have spent my mature life, from the time I was a young man, in the Republican River Basin, and I still live there. I will say to the Senator that so far as I know—and I think I know—no question of priority of right to irrigation is involved in this project. When this improvement came there was a great deal of dissatisfaction on the part of a number of persons who live right where I have lived all my life over the fact that all these other projects had been turned down by the engineers. It was heartbreaking to me, but I accepted it. While I live in the territory where I have always lived, above the area that will be benefited by this dam, nevertheless, as hard as it is to see all these projects turned down by the engineers, I cannot put myself in the attitude of opposing a project farther down which will be beneficial, and which, as far as flood-control value is concerned, I must admit has a greater value than any on the Republican River, and the people down there are suffering in the same way. Irrigation is needed in that part of the country just as much as it is needed farther up, in my part of the country.

Aside from the technicalities concerning this matter—I do not want to take up time in discussing it—if I had the ability I could paint a picture here that would reach the heart of every listener. Those people have gone into that area and raised families. Now they are old. Their children are now occupying the farms. They have seen the days of prosperity, when they raised rich crops on this soil. They have seen prosperity disappear. They have seen the region go into decay, all because of the lack of rain. This project will be a godsend to a large portion of those people who live below the dam. All of the few irrigation projects there are, I think, without exception, above this dam. They are not affected by it in any way. I will say to the Senator from Utah that I do not think there is a possibility of any litigation affecting the priority of water rights.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. If I correctly understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, it does not increase the authorization or the amount to be expended.

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. OVERTON. And it has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; this dam is recommended by the Chief of Engineers, all the way down the line to the local engineer.

Mr. OVERTON. The change in the location of the dam has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; in a report, I think in House Document 842, the change of location has been recognized.

Mr. OVERTON. The reason why I am careful about the matter is that I assume that the constituents of practically every Senator on the floor are desirous of having amendments made to this bill. Louisiana wants amendments made to the bill. I shall not offer any of the amendments, under the suggestion made by the chairman of our committee and by the committee, and under the recommendation made by the President; but I think there can be a departure from the rule, as in the case of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, when there is no increase in the authorization, and when there is merely a change in the location of a reservoir, and it has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers. I think an exception can be made in such a case; and therefore I shall support the Senator's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GURNEY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which is on the desk, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, between lines 12 and 13, it is proposed to insert:

East Hartford, Conn.; House Document No. 653, Seventy-sixth Congress.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I am not sure that this particular amendment falls within the objectionable category referred to by the distinguished chairman of the committee, but I know very definitely that it falls within the category of the amendment just adopted, presented by the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

This amendment does not cover a new project. It is a project heretofore approved by the Army engineers, by committees of the House and the Senate, and in a separate bill has already passed the Senate. The amendment provides a reauthorization for a project approved a long time ago, to construct dikes and other protective works at East Hartford, Conn.

A reauthorization is probably necessary, and I find myself in exactly the position taken by the Senator from Nebraska, because in the proposal covered by my amendment there was a change in the plans. During the course of an investigation the Army engineers and others felt that greater protection could be afforded to this important industrial area by a change, and it is only because of that change that this authorization is probably now necessary.

I should like to point out, if I may, that in the bill under consideration one of the committee amendments struck out a project in my State, a project which I think is extremely important; but, because I am in complete sympathy with the high purposes of the committee——

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. That was stricken out because the work was going on. It is not destroying the project.

Mr. MALONEY. Not completely, in any event; the work is going on; but what I started to say was, that I am so completely in sympathy with the purposes and aims of our able chairman, and with the purposes of the Committee on Commerce, that I would make no attempt to resist that amendment.

But I would be derelict in my duty as a Senator, as well as a representative of the State of Connecticut, if I did not make every possible effort to bring about the adoption of the amendment which I have now offered, and I beg Senators to hear what I have to say in this respect.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one question?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator says his amendment falls in the same category with the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], which the Senator from North Carolina has accepted. Does he mean by that statement that his amendment does not increase the total appropriations or authorizations carried in the bill?

Mr. MALONEY. I am not definitely sure. I think there is probably involved a very slight additional cost. There has been a change in plans. I am not absolutely certain, but I think that there would be an additional cost of $249,000. This whole project would cost approximately $1,600,000, and I am about to explain, as briefly as I can, the purposes impelling me to offer the amendment, and to urge, as seriously and sincerely as I can, that it be adopted, because it is extremely important.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. During his explanation of the merits of this case, may I inquire of the Senator whether or not the situation is not such that the State itself, or the municipality, should have undertaken the project, or at least made some contribution toward its development? I hope the Senator will pardon me, but I may say that I made investigation of every river and harbor project from the days of Washington down to about 5 years ago. I investigated every single one of them, examining hundreds and hundreds of reports and thousands of pages of testimony, and I discovered that a very large number of the projects lack merit, and a very large number of them should have been constructed by local communities, by counties, by cities, or by States. I was wondering whether this project was one which should receive some aid in its construction from the county, or the city, or the State.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, in reply to the very able Senator from Utah, I can only say that the particular community involved has made such a contribution as the Congress and the community and those interested in this character of legislation feel it should have made. There has been some contribution on the part of the community.

I am concerned with this project because it is, in my judgment, as important to the national defense as any project under this bill could be. Located at East Hartford, Conn., is the plant of the Pratt & Whitney Aircraft Corporation, which, from the standpoint of national defense, is probably the most important of the manufacturing plants in our country; it is certainly one of the most important. It is contributing right now to the greatest need we have—the manufacture of airplanes, or airplane motors. At this factory there are employed at the present time approximately 18,000 men. Much additional construction is going on at the plant. So I presume that in the near future thousands more men will be employed at the Pratt & Whitney plant.

During the very serious floods affecting my State in 1936, and again in 1938, it was necessary to close the Pratt & Whitney Aircraft Corporation plant because the employees could not get to the factory, since their homes were under water, and there was no way for them to reach the plant excepting by boat or by plane. I am fearful that another flood, coming at an even more serious time than the present, might handicap our national defense to a disastrous extent.

The Army engineers, in reporting on my amendment to the Committee on Commerce, point to the importance of this project in connection with this plant.

My State is very much concerned, and the people in the neighborhood, for the sake of their own homes, are greatly concerned; but that is not all that prompts me to make this appeal. I urge the adoption of the amendment because it is, in my judgment, extremely vital to the national defense. I doubt whether there is another such project in the bill, or a project which might be presented, that is so important as this one.

I am very hopeful that, for the reasons I have stated, the Committee and the Senate will approve this tremendously important amendment, which the Senate has previously adopted in the form of a bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, between lines 9 and 10, it is proposed to insert the following:

Sabine-Neches Waterway at Orange, Tex., in accordance with report on file in the office of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, since the bill was reported the Navy Department has awarded a contract to a plant at Orange, Tex., for the construction of twelve 2,100-ton destroyers. After awarding the contract the Navy certified to the Chief of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors that a channel would be necessary from the main channel to afford proper access to this plant manufacturing destroyers, certifying that it was necessary in the national defense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 4107) to transfer the jurisdiction of the Arlington Farm, Virginia, to the jurisdictions of the War Department and the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. JONES of Texas, Mr. FULMER, and Mr. HOPE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10412) to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. LANHAM, Mr. CROWE, and Mr. HOLMES were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 4270) to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MAY, Mr. THOMASON, Mr. COSTELLO, Mr. ARENDS, and Mr. HARNESS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 3437. An act for the relief of the Franco-American Construction Co.; and

S. 3920. An act to amend the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938, as amended June 20, 1939, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF SUGAR ACT OF 1937

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9654, the so-called sugar bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9654) to extend, for an additional year, the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937 and the taxes with respect to sugar.

Mr. GEORGE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Shipstead
Andrews	Downey	King	Smathers
Ashurst	Ellender	McKellar	Stewart
Austin	George	Maloney	Thomas, Idaho
Bailey	Gerry	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Bankhead	Gibson	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Barkley	Gillette	Murray	Townsend
Brown	Glass	Norris	Truman
Bulow	Green	O'Mahoney	Tydings
Burke	Guffey	Overton	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Gurney	Pepper	Van Nuys
Capper	Hale	Pittman	Wagner
Caraway	Harrison	Radcliffe	Walsh
Chavez	Hayden	Reed	Wheeler
Clark, Idaho	Herring	Russell	White
Clark, Mo.	Hill	Schwartz	Wiley
Connally	Holt	Schwellenbach
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, House bill 9654 extends for another year the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937, and it also extends for another year the taxes levied with respect to sugar. These taxes, under existing law, would expire on June 30, 1941. Unless this proposed legislation be enacted, the quota provisions and conditional payment provisions of the 1937 act will expire on December 31, 1940. The bill extends these provisions for 1 year. The bill also restores the limitations on direct-consumption sugar coming from Puerto Rico and Hawaii for 1 year, since these provisions expired on March 1, 1940. The bill also authorizes the appropriation of amounts equal to the taxes on the sugar coming from the Philippines to be used to finance the program of economic adjustment in the Philippines. Under present law no payments can be made for these purposes after June 30, 1941.

Mr. President, as every Senator knows, the sugar question is involved and complicated. Many Senators desired to change some of the provisions in the sugar law. The Senate committee considering the matter reached the conclusion that it would be better for everyone concerned if we merely extended the 1937 act for another year, and then, when Congress returns next year, to try and work out a sugar bill which might meet the objections made and make the adjustments which those representing the different phases of the sugar industry are demanding.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In the Senator's time I should like to make it plain that the statement which he has just made authentically describes the state of mind of many of us from the midcontinent sugar-beet area. We are not accepting this continuing legislation through any degree of satisfaction or any notion that it adequately meets what we believe to be the essential changes in the sugar-control arrangements and administration. We are accepting it solely because it appears to be the only alternative open if there is to be any sugar program at all commencing New Year's Day. Therefore the statement which the Senator from Colorado has just made, it seems to me, is very important so far as the record is concerned, lest there be any misunderstanding with respect to the support which many of us give to this continuing legislation; and I do give it support under the circumstances as indicated. The support we give is predicated upon the fact that there is no time to do an adequate job at the moment, but that we expect an adequate job to be done in 1941.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Michigan for his statement. I think the same statement could be made by representatives of every other part of the sugar industry. The fact that none of the sugar people are satisfied rather indicates that this is a pretty good compromise. I know that the continental sugarcane section is not satisfied. The Puerto Rico and Hawaiian interests are not satisfied. The Philippine sugar interests are not satisfied. No one seems to be satisfied with the measure, and therefore I have reached the conclusion that it is a fairly good compromise.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry of my colleague.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. If the bill should not pass, it would leave the tax upon the sugar industry as it now stands, without the benefit payments?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. In other words, the industry would be forced to stand the tax without receiving any benefit payments in compensation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. In addition, we have had a reduction in the tariff on incoming sugar through the reciprocal-trade agreements.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is also true. Of course, the tax which is now in effect would expire——

Mr. ADAMS. The point I wish to make is that the sugar situation in this country is now worse off by a reduction of 60 cents a hundred by reason of the reciprocal-trade agreements. If the bill should not pass, the domestic sugar industry would further suffer the detriment of a 50-cent tax, with no benefit payments.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator has stated the case very well.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Has the Senator any figures to show the amount of sugar which might come into this country if the quota law now on the statute books should lapse?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have no figures. Any statement I might make would be an estimate at best, and would be entirely dependent upon world conditions. I do not think anyone could answer that question.

Mr. ELLENDER. World conditions during the second world war differ from the world conditions that prevailed during the first World War and——

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes. Of course, the blockade affects the situation.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is what I desire to point out. Because of said blockade sugar has accumulated in South American countries—Cuba, the Philippine Islands, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico—in excess of 2,000,000 tons; and if the quota were not retained, all that excess sugar would be dumped on the American market, thereby considerably affecting our prices.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator has made an accurate statement of the situation. Of course, if the act is not continued, all that sugar will come in. I understand that the price of sugar in New York today, with no tariff, is about $1.65. Of course, that would completely put out of business all the sugar industry of continental United States. All our domestic-sugar industry would go.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to detain the Senate for any great length of time on this important measure. First, I wish to compliment the Senators from the West and the South who have spent so much time trying to work out a program which would help the sugar industry. I want it distinctly understood that I am not at all satisfied with the present arrangement; but I agree with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] that probably this is the best solution which could be reached at this time, and it should be accepted, because it is of tremendous importance that this proposed legislation should be passed before this session of Congress ends. It is important that our sugar industry know what to depend upon for at least a short time.

In this connection I have the feeling that the Department of Agriculture has put into effect every obstacle it could think of in order to destroy the domestic-sugar industry, especially the sugar-beet industry of the West.

There can be no doubt whatever of the administration's intentions with reference to the domestic-sugar industry. Mr. Wallace, as Secretary of Agriculture, stated the administration's views quite bluntly at the time the first Sugar Act was being considered by Congress:

> The sugar-beet industry, as measured from the standpoint of free-world competition, is inefficient.

It was left to Mr. A. J. S. Weaver, then head of the Sugar and Rice Division of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, to explain in detail the administration's views. I want to quote briefly here an exchange between Congressman HOPE and Mr. Weaver before the House Committee on Agriculture in 1934.

> Mr. WEAVER. * * * In this emergency situation it is not possible to do everything at once; but, now speaking from the point of view of long-time policy, if further expansion is continued, the United States will be saddled, possibly forever, with a high-cost industry which is not a fair thing to contemplate for consumers.
> Mr. HOPE. Well, then, in other words the policy is to start in eliminating the industry before it gets any bigger. Am I correct in that assumption
> Mr. WEAVER. Yes; if you mean limiting the industry, I think that is a reasonable statement.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. I prefer not to yield at this time.

I wish to point out how the administration has acted deliberately to cripple the domestic sugar industry. Under the present Sugar Act, and under the Jones-Costigan Act which preceded the present act, the American market is protected not by a tariff, but by quotas which are adjusted at the discretion of the Department of Agriculture. The tariff on Cuban sugar, which was formerly 2 cents a pound, has been reduced to 0.09 cent a pound—considerably less than the difference in the cost of production between the United States and Cuba.

The law provides that Cuba shall be given a substantially larger share of the American market than the entire western sugar-beet area is permitted to supply. The western area is limited to less than 25 percent of the American market, and both the sugar-beet section and the southern cane growers together are permitted to supply less than 30 percent of the domestic market. This in itself, even were the act administered with the interests of the American grower in mind, is unfair. It is unfair to the sugar growers, and it is unfair to every other farmer in the United States. There are thousands of additional acres in the West on which sugar-beets could be profitably grown if the Government would permit. Today, these acres, which should be producing sugar which can be profitably marketed, are producing crops of which we already have surpluses burdening the market and depressing prices.

However, if the Department of Agriculture continues to administer the act to depress the price of sugar, there will be no need to worry about acreage allotments. All domestic production will be destroyed. At present, the price has fallen so low that many growers are producing at an actual loss. They cannot and will not continue to do so for long.

Let me show how the policy of Secretary Wallace and the administration has acted to depress the price of sugar. Hardly had the present Sugar Act become law in 1937 when the Department of Agriculture fixed its estimate of American sugar consumption at 7,042,000 tons, an amount of sugar greater than has ever been consumed in the United States in any year. The effect was to bring in sugar surpluses which reduce prices.

This policy of fixing the estimates of production high enough to depress the price has been followed consistently. This year, because of the hostility of the administration to the domestic sugar industry, domestic growers are in a peculiarly difficult position.

In September 1939, supposedly because of the fear of rising prices due to war conditions, quotas were suspended by the President, and the tariff on Cuban sugar automatically was raised from 0.9 to 1.5 cents per pound, still half a cent per pound lower than the tariff which protected the American grower prior to the New Deal. Then, on December 27, 1939, the tariff was reduced to 0.9 cent per pound, 4 days before the 1940 quota went into effect on January 1, 1940. During this 4-day period, only a 0.9-cent tariff was in effect, and there were absolutely no quotas effective to protect the American market.

Someone had evidently tipped off the owners of the Cuban sugar industry, for during this 4-day period 284,000 short tons of sugar, valued at $11,000,000, which had been stored in bond in this country, were admitted at the 0.9-cent tariff and free from any quota restrictions. This amounted to 15 percent of the entire year's sugar imports, and it meant a loss to the Federal Treasury of about $3,500,000. The loss to the American sugar grower was much more serious than that.

As a result of this manipulation, we faced the present year with an inventory of sugar in the United States of approximately 900,000 tons, about 400,000 tons more than normal. The situation, inevitably, has been detrimental to the American sugar grower.

In August, as a concession to the American sugar producers, the quotas of imported sugar were reduced by 136,000 tons. This was not enough materially to remedy the situation or to improve the price of sugar.

Today the price of sugar is at very nearly the lowest point in history. In August it was, at 5.1 cents per pound, lower than before the first sugar act went into operation. Yet that is only part of the picture. Out of that price of 5.1 cents per pound comes a tax of 0.53 cent per pound.

When the sugar legislation was first before the Congress, Mr. A. J. S. Weaver, who was officially presenting administration views, spoke of the danger that the price of sugar, without legislation, would bring us back to last year's very low prices, of which and about which the beet producers and continental can producers complained, and rightfully complained.

The low price referred to, of which beet producers "rightfully complained," was 5.3 cents a pound, 0.2 cent per pound higher than the price during August 1940. Moreover, no tax was taken out of the 1933 low price. Deducting the tax, the return on sugar would be less than 4.6 cents per pound. If farmers "rightfully complained" in 1933, they are entitled to a mighty howl of protest today, since the condition which prevails in the sugar market is the result of deliberate manipulation by a Secretary of Agriculture and an administration whose announced desire it is to eliminate the domestic sugar producer.

As the situation stands today, sugar growers in the United States are permitted to supply only a fraction of the American market. That is the result of an unreasonable law. There is absolutely no justification, however, for the administration to use that law to depress prices to the point where farmers will be forced to abandon domestic production altogether.

Last year many American sugar-beet growers sold their crop at an absolute loss. This year, prospects are not improved. In fact, with lower prices of sugar, the return to farmers may be no better this year than last. This condition could be easily remedied by a further reduction of the import quotas, but this the Department of Agriculture refuses to do. The Department's refusal means another loss for farmers.

It is nothing short of a crime that the administration should use the Sugar Act—supposedly framed in the interests of the cane and sugar-beet farmers—to destroy the American sugar industry. Nevertheless, that is precisely what is happening today.

Mr. President, I ask to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an article from the National Beet Grower of the issue of September 1940 under the heading "United States sugar prices drop to all-time low in world history."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the National Beet Grower of September 1940]

UNITED STATES SUGAR PRICES DROP TO ALL-TIME LOW IN WORLD HISTORY

Sugar, as you no doubt recall, was supposed to be a war baby, but during the week of August 12 the world price fell to the lowest point recorded since trading was instituted on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange.

This world price represents an international appraisal, through the medium of futures traded in New York, or what raw sugar is worth on the dock in Cuba. At the outbreak of the war it shot up on the assumption that much of Europe's sugar-beet crop would be ruined. For a while Cuban sugar commanded about $15 a ton. But Nazi conquest and the blockade have eliminated one customer after another, while British rationing has further reduced the market, and during the week of August 12 the price backed down to about $8 a ton.

Cuba is capable of producing pretty close to 6,000,000 tons of sugar a year but output for a long time has been held down to around 3,000,000 due to lack of sales outlets. Of that, the United States normally takes roughly two-thirds, and the United Kingdom is the second largest customer, taking about one-fifth.

If the United States could increase its takings of Cuban sugar, it might help to make up for the lost markets in Europe. However, the quota system in this country freezes the amount that the island is permitted to supply in order to protect domestic producers. The result is that buying interest in Cuba's surplus has dwindled almost to the vanishing point and a small amount of selling readily depresses the world market price.

The quota system sets the United States market on a plateau protected by the tariff of $1.87½ a hundredweight. (Cuba enjoys a preferential tariff of 90½.) Nevertheless, a decline in the world price exerts a distinctly negative influence on prices in this country. The result has been another outbreak of cutthroat competition among refiners, particularly in the South, in the last couple of months. In fact, prices quoted (after deduction of the processing tax of 53½ cents a hundredweight and 2 percent discount for cash) were lower than the all-time bottom in 1932—and Louisiana cane growers are wearing Willkie buttons.

Meanwhile, Congress is still wrangling over the sugar-quota system. The House passed the Cummings bill, which would extend the quota provisions, due to expire the end of the year, through 1941. In the Senate, where votes of the beet and cane sugar States weigh more heavily than in the lower Chamber, opposition still is apparent. With revenue matters to the fore, the Senate Finance Committee announced that it was postponing consideration of the bill for indefinite time.

The cane sugar-refining industry in continental United States has been up against its usual fight over the quotas of Hawaii and Puerto Rico. The islands, being part of the United States, insist they should be permitted to ship their entire quota in the form of refined sugar. This was headed off when the 1937 law was passed. Puerto Rico in 1939, for example, was given a total quota of 806,642 tons (March revision) of which only 126,033 was to be refined. Hawaii's total was 948,218 tons with only 29,616 to be in refined form.

This limitation on refined sugar expired the end of last February, and Puerto Rico since that time has been shipping much more than its usual allotment in the form of refined sugar. Whether or not this has been a factor in the weakness of the refined sugar market in this country is now a subject of lively argument in the trade.

The sugar bill, now awaiting a Senate vote, would reimpose the limitations on the amount of refined sugar which can come in from the islands. It would not, however, penalize Puerto Rico for current overshipments of refined sugar.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as part of my remarks a resolution adopted by the National Reclamation Association at its annual meeting at Great Falls, Mont.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Resolution adopted by the National Reclamation Association at its annual meeting at Great Falls, Mont.]

RESOLUTION NO. I—SUGAR-BEET EXPANSION

Whereas large areas of the West are dependent to a great extent on the maintenance and growth of the sugar-beet industry; and

Whereas the sugar-beet industry provides more field labor per acre unit than any other major crop produced and also provides more income for industrial labor in associated industries, such as railroads, coal mines, limerock quarries, and many manufacturing enterprises and is therefore far reaching in its possibilities; and

Whereas an orderly and sound expansion of beet plantings and processing as suitable land is developed is a reasonable and necessary condition precedent to the building up of this country and should be encouraged; and

Whereas American sugar-beet producers provide less than one-third of the requirements of our home market at the present time but could and should be supplying a major portion of its requirements to the economic advantage of the Nation; and

Whereas our Government should adhere to the principles of American markets for American producers; and

Whereas the present all-time low net price of sugar is insufficient to maintain the industry on a profitable basis: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by this association, That the Congress of the United States is urged to provide through proper legislation for the progressive, orderly expansion of the production of beet sugar within the United States and to maintain the beet-sugar industry on a reasonable income basis by quota regulations and adequate tariffs on foreign sugar; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary be directed to send a copy of this resolution to the Secretaries of Agriculture, Interior, and State, and to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives of Western States in Congress.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement prepared by E. W. Rising, vice president of the Western Beet Growers Association.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT PREPARED BY E. W. RISING, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE WESTERN BEET GROWERS ASSOCIATION

Mr. Chairman, I am representing the Western Beet Growers Association, composed of farmers in beet-growing areas that desire substantial increases in their acreage allotments, also farmers in areas that are not growing beets because of acreage or marketing-quota restrictions.

We favor new legislation along the general lines of the 1937 Sugar Act, to replace the act which expires December 31, 1940, but with yearly increases in tonnage allotments to continental growers, and with a provision which will enable new growers and new factory areas to share in allotment of increases in tonnage.

We hold that the American market belongs first, to the American farmer, the American laborer, and the American businessman. We propose to discuss sugar legislation with these principles in mind.

RIGHT OF AMERICAN FARMER TO AMERICAN MARKET

The right of the American farmer to supply the American market to the full extent of his ability is so fundamental that it seems scarcely to need discussion. It has been recognized for generations in our tariff policies, and it has become a doctrine supported by every large farm organization in the United States. Until that right is fully recognized in sugar legislation there will be no permanent settlement of the sugar question.

Continental American farmers are now denied the fundamental right to grow sugar beets and sugarcane, American labor is discriminated against in favor of cheap labor in a foreign land, and American businessmen are prohibited from processing and marketing the products of American soil and American labor.

In order that we may explain our position on this subject, I am placing a table in the record, showing the percentages of sugar supplied from all sources, under provisions of 1937 Sugar Act, to consumers in continental United States.

QUOTA PROVISION SUGAR ACT OF 1937

Under the provisions of the 1937 Sugar Act, the sugar needed to meet the requirements of consumers in the continental United States is to be supplied approximately as follows:

	Percent
Domestic beet sugar	23.19
Mainland cane sugar	6.29
Total, continental allotment	29.48
Hawaii	14.04
Puerto Rico	11.94
Virgin Islands	.13
Total, American possessions allotment	26.11
Total, American allotment	55.59
Commonwealth of Philippines	15.41
Cuba	28.60
Foreign countries other than Cuba	.40
Total, foreign countries and Phillippines	44.41

There are three main sources of supply for the 6,682,670 short tons of sugar normally required to supply the continental market.

	Short tons
First:
Beet sugar, continental growers	1,549,711
Cane sugar, continental growers	420,340
		1,970,051

Second: American possessions		1,744,845
Third:
Philippines	1,029,799
Cuba	1,911,244
Foreign, other than Cuba	26,731
		2,967,774
Total normal requirement		6,682,670

LEGISLATION REQUIRED IN INCREASING CONTINENTAL ALLOTMENTS

If the continental growers of sugar beets and cane are to be permitted to produce additional tonnage it follows that one of the other two main sources of supply must be given a smaller allotment.

It will not be our purpose to ask that the allotment for our island possessions be reduced, but we do not hesitate to say that we do feel that the allotment of more than 26 percent of the requirements for the continental market, in addition to guaranty of full home market, is very liberal, and that our possessions should not be given additional tonnage until the needs of the continental farmer are take care of in a fair manner.

Provision in the Independence Act for Philippines allowing 850,000 long tons, equivalent to 952,000 short tons, duty-free sugar until 1946, brings the discussion at this time to the question of whether we shall continue to look after the interests of Cuba, before we provide for the welfare and markets for the products of our American farmer and American labor.

BEET-SUGAR TONNAGE ALLOTMENTS REQUIRED BY PRESENT GROWERS

Under normal requirements the beet-sugar allotment is 1,549,711 short tons. For the year 1938 the production of beet sugar was 1,803,000 short tons. For the year 1939 the production of beet sugar was 1,750,000 short tons.

Figures given indicate that present growers of sugar beets are exceeding a normal quota by approximately 200,000 tons of sugar each year. There is, therefore, no opportunity for new growers or new areas to engage in growing of sugar beets until the domestic quota is materially increased.

Sugar beets are peculiarly adaptable to irrigated land. For more than a third of a century, the Federal Government has encouraged irrigation as a means of developing the arid lands of the West. Since 1902 it has advanced nearly $700,000,000 for construction of irrigation and related projects under the Federal reclamation policy.

Repayment of a quarter of a billion dollars in these advances is to a large extent dependent on the ability of water users to grow sugar beets and market them under the protection of American law. The future of a score of reclamation projects now in operation is to a large extent dependent on sugar beets. Others under construction will require a cash crop like sugar beets if settlers are to get a proper start and become self-sustaining.

In the light of the facts above mentioned, the Government has a direct responsibility for and interest in the maintenance of a stable agriculture in the irrigated areas of the West.

The Department of Agriculture has recognized sugar beets as a logical cash crop for irrigated lands. Its Farm Security Administration includes sugar beets in crop rotation plans for the irrigation farmers it finances.

I might also state that in selecting a row crop a farmer in irrigated areas is limited to a few items, such as beets, beans, corn, and potatoes, all of which with exception of beets are currently produced in quantities to supply domestic market.

Statement of increased sugar-beet acreage desired by 10 Western reclamation and Great Plains States (with supporting data)

Idaho: Boise and loger Snake River Valleys	45,000
Oregon: Additional acreage for Nyssa factory	5,000
Minnesota-North Dakota: Red River Valley, for new factories	75,000
Montana:
Lower Yellowstone-Sidney-Fairview-Savage	2,000

IDAHO

"Southwestern Idaho was one of the early beet sections of the United States, having a sugar factory in 1907. Our section was affected by the blight and finally ceased to grow beets. After the perfection of the new resistant seed a new start was made and in 1937 a factory was located at Nyssa, Oreg., to process beets grown in that section of Oregon, and in southwestern Idaho.

"We have over a half million acres of fine irrigated land in southwestern Idaho and along the Snake River in Oregon. We find that our section is well adapted to dairying and stock raising, but we need a good root crop for rotation with alfalfa and grain. Sugar beets have proven to be an ideal rotation crop, having long roots reaching down into the deep soil, and through the intensive cultivation required assisting in eradication of weeds. Our small-dairy farmers are ideal customers for the beet pulp from the processing plants."

OREGON

New factory at Nyssa, built in 1937, has not been allotted sufficient acreage for full operating capacity.

NEVADA

In April 1940, Senator McCARRAN stated in a letter to me:

"Nevada some years ago engaged in a prosperous endeavor of beet-sugar culture, even to the extent of establishing a factory at Fallon, Nev. It was, indeed, a profitable pursuit with much promise of increased production. Unfortunately, beet-sugar culture in Nevada was beset with wilt, caused by the white fly sucking juice from the foliage.

"In 1938 the Spreckles Sugar Co. cooperated with the farmers in Pershing County, Nev., in planting several experimental patches using a newly developed alkali tolerant plant particularly adaptable to that climate. Again in 1939 with increased acreage more extensive tests on approximately 1,800 acres were carried on. These tests have conclusively shown that sugar beets of excellent quality can be successfully and profitably grown in Nevada.

"There is another important factor to be considered. By using sugar beets as a rotation crop alfalfa blight has been eliminated in those areas fortunate enough to receive beet-sugar acreage. You can readily appreciate what this means to a livestock State somewhat reliant on alfalfa as a foliage crop. In my judgment, by rotating these two crops, not only would the livestock industry be greatly benefited but the farmer would be guaranteed a cash-income crop."

MINNESOTA-NORTH DAKOTA

The Minnesota-North Dakota Sugar Beet Development Association state that the area represented by the association in the valley of the Red River has well over 200,000 acres of cultivated land adaptable to sugar-beet culture.

They have one processing plant at present with a quota of 26,500 acres. The plant manager had on file for the 1940 growing season well over 40,000 acres in applications. Additional farmers in the valley had indicated desire to plant another 60,000 acres, making a total demand available for 1941 planting of 100,000 acres.

Gov. John Moses, of North Dakota, under date of April 8, 1940, addressed a letter to the chairman of the Agricultural Committee of the House of Representatives, in which he stated:

"A considerable number of farmers of the more progressive type in the Red River Valley, in both North Dakota and Minnesota, are actively asserting their interest in the production of sugar beets. They have formed the Minnesota-Dakota Sugar Beet Development Association, with a present membership of over 1,200 which is expected to grow to well over 2,000.

"Sugar beets have been grown in North Dakota for many years. For the past several years they have been and are now the most successful crop grown in the Red River Valley, which is far-famed for its fertile soils, and in other parts of the State.

"In addition to the market value of the beets for sugar production, our farmers have an equal and increasing interest in the use of beet byproducts for livestock feeding. The tops, pulp, and crude molasses are valuable auxiliary feeds for lambs and sheep, dairy cattle, and beef cattle especially, and to some extent for other livestock. The use of these byproducts has become increasingly popular, and the demand exceeds the supply.

"Our farmers are emphatic adherents to the American principle that the American market belongs to Americans. They are irreconcilable to regulatory restrictions on the production of an important food commodity when over 70 percent of the domestic consumption is being imported.

"Sugar is the only essential agricultural commodity that we do not produce in quantity sufficient to meet normal domestic requirements. Our dependence on offshore supplies is hazardous in the event of war, as was forcefully demonstrated twenty-odd years ago when the price was forced up to 500 percent of normal."

MONTANA

The Southeastern Montana Counties Association, under date of March 23, 1940, wrote Congressman JAMES F. O'CONNOR in regard to the need of additional acreage for sugar beets. The following statements are made in the letter referred to:

"Mr. CUMMINGS' bill seems to have quite overlooked areas that have recently been brought under irrigation and, if that is really done, we in the Dust Bowl, or at least on the edge of it, might as well join the "Okies," which, of course, the people of Montana are not inclined to do.

"Nobody is being fooled by the ban being lifted on acreage, because unless the parity price is maintained and the processors given an opportunity to dispose of the refined sugar, they are not going to venture any capital in a new refinery.

"Our soil here is such that it is essential that we have a rotation of crops and there is no crop that does the soil so much good as a root crop. With our open range back of all these potential beet areas that provide the best feed in the world during the summertime, why shouldn't our stockmen be able to bring their stock in and feed it out on these beet fields.

"The beet growers and the stockmen, members of this association, have in the last 2 weeks had seven meetings, and this letter is being written at their specific instruction and direction, and they are in hopes that you will be able to get this picture across to Congress. If you do, they are satisfied that the great drought disaster of 1934 and 1936 and such a calamity as the stockmen experienced in this area will never be experienced again, and a large number of people who are now on relief will be able to rehabilitate themselves and once again become self-respecting citizens."

From the Broadwater County Beet Growers Association of Townsend, Mont., under date of March 22, 1940, I have the following:

"During the past 10 years, sugar beets have been satisfactorily grown in all parts of this area, thus proving the adaptability of our soils and the fact that our climate and the altitude permit the satisfactory production of high-quality sugar beets. A new sugar factory located in this valley would, in turn, eliminate high freight rates and increase the agricultural wealth of the community by encouraging the development of livestock feeding, rotation of crops, and assist in building up the fertility of our soils. It should be further pointed out that the entire area is surrounded by range lands producing high-quality feeder livestock, including both sheep and cattle, which are now moving to other areas to be fattened for the market. The Federal Government in building the Broadwater-Missouri project assumed that the production of sugar beets would provide the cash crop retnurn required in order that we might repay the obligation which we owe to the Public Works Administration."

The Sun River and Pondera Beet Growers Association state:

"Sufficient sugar-beet acreage in the counties of Cascade, Teton, and Pondera, in Montana, to support a sugar factory is urgently needed. There are 200,000 acres of irrigated land in these three counties, two-thirds of which are suitable for sugar-beet production. Over 10,000 acres were signed up by the beet-growers' associations in 1938 to be planted in 1939 if a sugar factory were built, and at the present time growers would pledge 20,000 acres for 1941 if a factory were definitely promised.

"The effect of sugar-beet production on crop values of the Federal reclamation projects in Montana is shown by the fact that in 1937 the Huntley projects in Yellowstone County with 25 percent of its acreage in beets had an average crop value of $43.23 per acre; whereas the Sun River project with less than 1 percent of its cultivated area in sugar beets had an average crop value of $13.21 per acre.

"To summarize: What we want and very badly need is a new sugar factory situated somewhere in the Cascade-Teton-Pondera area so that at least an additional 15,000 acres of beets can be grown. We have the land, the water; have demonstrated that beets are entirely successful; and only need a factory, which we can get if proper legislation is passed."

The Sidney Water Users Association ask for an allotment of 1,000 acres for growing sugar beets and state:

"It is necessary to grow beets because the entire country toward the Little Missouri River is a range country, and livestock feeding is dependent on sugar-beet industry and the by-products therefrom for feeding livestock."

Statements showing a demand for sugar-beet acreage have also been filed on behalf of farmers in the Lewistown, Forsyth, and Hardin, Montana areas.

WYOMING

Congressman HORTON, of Wyoming, under date of April 10, 1940, advised me that the Lovell, Wyo., beet-sugar factory, should have an allotment that would permit the contracting of approximately 1,250 acres of beets in excess of acreage harvested for 1939.

Congressman HORTON also stated that with the completion of the Sunshine Dam on the Greybull River, that valley will need an additional acreage allotment for beets; that the soil in this area is identical with the Big Horn Basin.

NEBRASKA

Mr. H. C. James, of Arcadia, Nebr., states from his contacts and management:

"It is extremely necessary that these two valleys be provided with cash crops, and the ability to grow sugar beets would provide a very desirable cash crop. Thus, we are strenuously supporting the efforts now being made to change the quotas to permit the growing of gradually increasing acreage in the Continental United States, in the hope that a sugar factory can ultimately be established for the North and Middle Loup Valleys."

From the Central Nebraska Public Power and Irrigation District of Hastings, Nebr., we have the statement that:

"Nebraska is at the crossroads in her agricultural life. The agricultural methods of the past have clearly demonstrated that only through irrigation can a major portion of Nebraska's farms be salvaged from a return to grazing land and the original prairie.

"Nebraska now has just completed extensive irrigation improvements. Federal funds in the amount of over $50,000,000 have been invested in Nebraska in the past 6 years for multiple-purpose projects whose primary aim is to bring irrigation water to more than 350,000 acres of land. This is in addition to the expenditure of millions of dollars from other public and private sources for the same objective.

"This brings about a paradoxical situation. On one hand we find Federal funds being allotted the State in an attempt to bolster a failing agriculture, and on the other hand the most important irrigation crop, sugar beets, is placed under such stringent Federal regulation that it will absolutely prevent any sugar-beet production in the new areas."

WASHINGTON

Congressman KNUTE HILL stated in a letter to me dated April 10, 1940:

"As regards the question of expanding the industry in the State of Washington, Commissioner Page, of the Bureau of Reclamation, has written: 'The success of sugar-beet production on the Yakima project warrants further expansion of the area, which could well support a second factory with an initial allotment of 10,000 acres.'

"You may know that the Roza project is nearing completion, and in this connection I believe future plans should include from 10,000 to 15,000 acres for sugar beets in this area. The Reclamation Bureau is studying the subject of crops best suited for the Grand Coulee project."

CUBA AN AMERICAN MARKET

It is argued that the size of the beet-sugar industry in the United States should be limited because an expansion means a loss of the Cuban market for the corn-hog farmer of the Mississippi Valley. If more sugar is grown in the United States, so the argument runs, less will be needed from Cuba, and if Cuba's income from sugar sold the United States is reduced, she cannot buy Iowa's pork and lard.

In view of the above argument, Congress is expected to see a conflict between the need of maintaining a market for the Middle West and the market needed for the beet-producing States of the Northwest.

In fact, no conflict exists because the beet-producing States are large importers of Iowa's corn, pork, hams, and bacon. On the other hand, Cuba's imports of corn and hog products no longer look impressive.

The following figures are taken from page 87 of House hearings and were originally supplied by the United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce:

Cuban imports:
Salt pork	$5,432,675	$506,131
Hams, cured or smoked	1,041,625	128,575
Corned beef	55,757	115
Sausages, canned	750,788	2,173
Corn	2,390,172	6,974

A great deal has been said regarding the large quantity of lard we sell Cuba; however, Senator THOMAS of Idaho in his speech before the Senate on July 29, 1940, stated that for 1939 we sold Cuba lard to the value of $3,976,000 while our purchases of sugar amounted to $72,772,000.

Statement made by the chairman of Cuban Committee, National Foreign Trade Council, at House hearings, page 174 of the record, shows that Cuba purchases from the United States rice, wheat flour, lumber, petroleum, fruits and vegetables, chemicals, iron, steel, paper, textiles, automobiles, machinery, hardware, and glass in moderate quantities. For all of these products the beet-producing States offer a much larger market.

Most recent figures from United States Tariff Commission indicate that we are making purchases from Cuba at the rate of approximately $110,000,000 per year and selling Cuba about $77,000,000 annually. Ratio of our sales to purchases being about $70 to $100.

While we do not agree that the sugar-allotment question should be settled on the basis of which is the better customer the low-priced laborer of the Tropics or the farmer of the West, nevertheless there is ample evidence that a decision on such basis would be favorable to the beet-sugar producing area of the West.

NATIONAL DEFENSE AND SUGAR

A speaker recently said that in case of war, the United States could depend on Cuba for a permanent and cheap supply of sugar. Perhaps so—but let us refer to the record.

In 1920 Cuba was in a position to name the price of sugar in the United States, and the record shows that the average price for the 12 months of 1920 was $19.40 per hundred; in May, $25.40; in June, $26.70; in July, $36.50; in December, when sugar from beets was on the market, it dropped to $10.50, and by December 1921 it was down to $6.05.

Do you think we should take a chance in the future?

It seems to me to be entirely logical that if we are in time of war likely to become the world's bread basket, then we are just as likely to become the world's sugar bowl. Sugar is an essential food.

It is also perfectly easy to imagine a time in the future when all the sea power this Nation has or can muster will have to be put into use for defense purposes. Such a situation would eliminate our opportunity to bring sugar from island producing areas and would leave our people entirely dependent on the sugar that could be produced right here in the continental United States.

When a nation is involved with an enemy in conflict, it is certainly not a time for our Army and Navy, and those who support them in the field and on the seas, to live or be dependent on imported food.

You cannot grow beets and produce sugar on a hit-and-miss basis. Time is required to prepare the land and produce a crop and factories must be built and equipped to manufacture sugar. Like any other branch of agriculture, the production of sugar must be on an orderly and systematized basis.

It seems to me that it is obvious that this is the time when we should plan that our agricultural resources of all kinds, particularly essential foodstuffs, be built up to as near our maximum requirements as is possible. Certainly we should not plan to continue to import 70 percent of our sugar.

It takes a lot of food to keep a nation of over 130,000,000 people at full fighting strength, and we should not take chances of having our supply of any essential item cut off or with being left dependent on a supply limited to less than 30 percent of our peacetime requirements.

LABOR IN REFINERIES AGAINST LABOR PRODUCING DOMESTIC SUGAR

It has been pointed out that in American refineries there are employed 18,000 workers at an annual pay roll of $27,000,000. A splendid pay roll and a phase of the sugar question to be given due consideration. It is the pay roll of the United States for production of 70.25 percent of our sugar, all but the 29.48 percent of domestic beet and mainland cane.

Now let us see what labor there is employed in the United States to produce the 29.48 percent of our sugar. There are over 70,000 growers and 90,000 field workers, and 10,000 factory workers employed in the beet-sugar industry.

Louisiana sugar industry lists those engaged in the cane-sugar industry as 17,000 farmers and 100,000 employees.

Labor in processing plants is paid from $5 to $9 per day. Under the present Sugar Act the field labor is paid wages as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture. Field labor costs exceeds an average of $21 for every acre of sugar beets.

In addition to the direct labor mentioned, huge quantities of limerock, coal, cotton sacks, and equipment are used in the production and transportation of which labor is a large item.

"Railroads collect approximately $35 in freight for every acre of sugar beets, and please keep in mind that 47 percent of gross railroad revenue is expended for pay rolls."

I have seen statements to the effect that refining a ton of raw sugar in the United States costs under $4 per ton, while processing a ton of beet sugar costs $10.28.

It is not denied that reduction of imports of raw sugar from Cuba would proportionately reduce the figure of $27,000,000 in wages for refining, however it is clear that any reduction will be replaced more than fourfold by the expenditure for labor in growing and processing sugar beets and sugarcane.

It should be noted that more than 70 percent of the income of farmers on irrigated land is expended for manufactured and agricultural products of the Midwest, East, and South. The benefits to American labor, from the home market irrigated agriculture has created, are attested to by the long trains of west-bound freight and streams of trucks carrying eastern products westward.

Every dollar earned in the production of beet sugar is spent in the United States.

SUGAR BEETS PRODUCED ON FAMILY-SIZE FARMS

Ninety percent of the sugar beets grown in the United States are produced on family-size farms, with the growers and their families doing part of the work. The average area per grower of sugar beets is less than 14 acres.

In no other sugar-producing area serving the American market is the percentage of producers so largely individuals. In every other area corporations largely or entirely control production.

In Cuba 68.1 percent of the production is on corporate farms; in Puerto Rico, 77 percent; in Hawaii, 100 percent; in Florida, 99 percent; in Louisiana, 48 percent.

CONSUMERS' INTEREST

A great deal is being said about protecting the consumer in every discussion regarding sugar legislation. Government officials are on record as stating, that if tariffs, processing taxes and benefit payments were eliminated that the consumer would be able to buy sugar at retail for 2 cents per pound less than the current prices. This conclusion is sometimes reached by considering the sum of the tariff on raw sugar entering the United States plus processing taxes, or benefit payments, more often, however, by pointing to the wholesale price of raw sugar in the so-called world market.

Most of the sugar produced in the world is sold in protected markets similar to the market in the continental United States. The world market is simply the market that exists, particularly at London, for sugar that is dumped after the producers have sold nine-tenths of their product in a protected market.

Not to exceed 10 percent of the world sugar production is sold on this dump market. Can it be said that the price for such dumped sugar is by any stretch of the imagination, the world-market price. By using the so-called world price for dumped sugar, administration officials have estimated that the American consuming public is paying a $350,000,000 annual subsidy to the sugar industry.

Let us analyze just what would be necessary if the United States were to be able to secure sugar at this dumped price.

First, we should remember that less than 10 percent of the world's production is dumped on the market—not more than 3,000,000 tons annually. It must be assumed that the market for this 3,000,000 tons will continue to exist, therefore in order to fill the present market and supply the needs of the United States, 6,500,000 tons of additional dumped sugar would have to be secured. There is no evidence to show that growers in any country in the world would engage in producing a large additional quantity of sugar for the so-called dump price.

Certainly, if the United States had to go into the market and purchase its entire supply it would immediately cause a very abrupt rise in the price of sugar in the world market. In fact there is every indication that our consumers would be required to pay more than present retail prices. This is proven by the fact that consumers in the United States buy sugar today at prices lower than prices in effect in any first-class nation in the world.

The average retail prices of sugar which have prevailed in continental United States under the Jones-Costigan Act and the Sugar Act of 1937 have been decidedly low. The annual average prices since 1934, as reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, are as follows:

Cents a pound

1935	5.7
1937	5.3
1938	5.4
1939	5.4
6-year average	5.48

The following table, quoted from CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 20, 1940, and originally obtained from the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, shows the retail prices of sugar in 38 countries of the world in May 1939, as follows:

Retail price per pound United States cents

Exporting countries:
Brazil	2.95
British Guiana	9.75
Cuba	3.84
Dominican Republic	6.00
Peru	2.40
Hungary	9.60
Australia	6.21
Philippine Islands	3.52
Netherland Indies	3.38
Union of South Africa	6.27
Average price	5.39
Principally self-supplying countries:
Argentina	4.75
Ecuador	2.71
Guatemala	4.00
Mexico	2.88
Panama	7.50
India	6.01
Japan	5.56
Bulgaria	12.49
France	7.68
Germany	13.64
Italy	15.62
Netherlands	11.19
Rumania	10.25
Sweden	5.47
Yugoslavia	13.86
Average price	8.24
Importing countries:
Chile	4.52
Honduras	3.92
Uruguay	3.58
China	3.70
Finland	8.43
Ireland	5.85
Norway	7.69
Portugal	8.49
Switzerland	4.74
Turkey	9.44
United Kingdom	5.36
Canada	6.30
United States	5.10
Average price	5.93

The average retail price of 0.0548 per pound for the last 6 years is lower than prices in 9 out of 12 importing countries, less than in 12 out of 15 self-supplying countries, and much less than average price for all countries.

How can it then be said that our consumers are paying a subsidy or that sugar would be sold at retail for a lower price if our American beet- and cane-sugar industries are destroyed.

SUGAR LEGISLATION REQUIRED

I believe it is generally conceded that the American grower of beets and cane cannot, except in a very limited way, continue without some measure of protection. I believe the statement just made is equally true regarding almost all other products grown or manufactured in the United States. No grower or manufacturer can pay the wages to labor that are in effect in the United States and compete with the cheap breech-cloth labor in the Tropics or in Europe.

The tariff in itself has proven defective as the sole means of protecting domestic production, because in the event of a tremendous world-over production there can be dumping on the American market.

The Western Beet Growers' Association favors sugar legislation continuing the quota system but with provision for increasing the allotment for continental growers. An increase of at least 300,000 tons for the beet area should be granted for 1941; 200,000 tons of which are needed to offset the present excess production over quota, and 100,000 tons for the benefit of new growers and new areas.

From 1942 until 1946 moderate additional allotments are needed by the beet areas. We are assuming that with the expiration of provision for duty-free Philippine sugar in 1946, that allotments will again be subject to adjustment.

The bill H. R. 9668, introduced by Congressman LEMKE on May 6, 1940, would provide satisfactorily for expansion of the beet-sugar industry, except that the basis for domestic beet for 1941 should be increased to 1,850,000 tons, and proportionate increases for the next 4 years.

H. R. 9668 also contains the following clause, which is very desirable for the purpose of granting new growers and new areas the right to participate in the sugar program:

"Provided, however, That in determining the proportionate shares (in terms of acreage) for the progressively increasing tonnage for the domestic beet-sugar area, as provided in section 202 (a) (1), the Secretary of Agriculture shall give first consideration to newly irrigated or other areas desiring to plant beets so that the establishment of necessary factory capacity for processing purposes where needed may be encouraged, it being the intent of this section to insure consideration for new sugar-beet producers in areas now without adequate processing facilities where beets may be economically produced."

H. R. 9654, passed by the House and now under consideration by the Finance Committee of the Senate, would extend the 1937 Sugar Act for 1 additional year. In connection with the consideration of this bill the Western Beet Growers Association ask that amendments be made granting additional acreage to beet growers. Suggestions for necessary amendments are hereto attached.

WESTERN BEET GROWERS ASSOCIATION

Proposed amendments to H. R. 9654, extending provisions of Sugar Act of 1937 for 1 year, now pending before the Senate Finance Committee, are attached hereto:

Amendment A provides:

1. That in extending the Sugar Act of 1937 the domestic beet-sugar area shall be allotted approximately 300,000 tons in addition to the basic quota provided for by existing law. This would increase the beet-sugar allotment for 1941 to approximately 1,850,000 short tons. With the average production for the last 2 years approximating 1,750,000 tons, the proposed amendment would take nothing from existing beet growers but would provide that the 100,000 additional tons or one-third of the increase should be allotted to new growers and especially to newly irrigated and other areas which heretofore have not been able to secure allotments.

2. That the method of adjusting quotas among the other sugar-producing areas, including Cuba, shall be left to the Secretary of Agriculture with the provision that no domestic area shall have its allotment reduced below the average production for the calendar years 1938 and 1939. This would prevent any decrease in the sugar production for the insular possessions, Louisiana, or Florida.

Amendment B: 3. An alternative amendment would provide for a flat increase of 20 percent in the allotments for all domestic sugar-producing areas and a corresponding decrease in the allotment for Cuba.

(The suggested amendment under paragraph 3 is more in line with the previous proposals that all domestic-sugar areas should be increased proportionately. A 20-percent increase in domestic allotments will give the beet area about 300,000 additional tons and reduce the Cuban allotment by a total of around 740,000 tons.)

Amendment C: 4. A suggested amendment provides for reducing the Cuban total.

E. W. RISING, Vice President.

Amendment "A" proposed for H. R. 9654, extending the Sugar Act of 1937: Section 6, subsection (a) of section 202 of the Sugar Act of 1937 (relating to proration of sugar among domestic sugar-producing areas) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"This subsection is hereby extended to provide that not less than 4,115,353 short tons of sugar shall be allotted for proration among domestic sugar-producing areas: Provided, however, That of said 4,115,353 short tons not less than 44.95 percent (1,850,000) short tons shall be allotted to domestic beet-sugar areas: And provided further, That it is the intent of this amendment to authorize and direct the Secretary of Agriculture, in determining proportionate shares (in terms of acreage) of the increased tonnage to give preference for at least one-third of the additional tonnage for the domestic beet-sugar area to new growers and to growers in newly irrigated and other areas who have heretofore been deprived of opportunity to produce and market sugar beets under the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937."

NOTE.—This proposed amendment does not undertake to say where reductions shall be made in quotas to permit the increase for the domestic sugar-beet area, but since it can come only from Cuba this proviso may be added:

"And provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to make such reductions in the allotment to Cuba as will permit the increase in the tonnage allotted to the domestic beet-sugar area."

Amendments "B" and "C" proposed for H. R. 9654 extending the Sugar Act of 1937 for 1 year:

Amendment "B"

Section 6, subsection (a) of section 202 of the Sugar Act of 1937 (relating to allotments to domestic sugar-producing areas) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Provided, however, That for the calendar year 1941 the Secretary is authorized and directed to increase the basic allotments for each of the domestic sugar-producing areas by 20 percent, with the proviso that at least one-third of the increased allotment for the domestic beet sugar area shall be apportioned among new growers and among growers in newly irrigated or other areas who have heretofore been deprived of opportunity to produce sugar beets under the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937."

Amendment "C"

Section 7, subsection (b) of section 202 of the Sugar Act of 1937 (relating to allotments to the Philippine Islands and Cuba) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following sentence:

"Provided, however, That for the calendar year 1941, the amount of sugar prorated to Cuba shall not exceed the difference between the amount of sugar determined to be needed to meet the requirements of consumers and the sum of the amount allotted to domestic sugar-producing areas under the provisions of section 6 of this act and the quota established for the Philippine Islands under the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937."

WHAT EXPANSION OF SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY MEANS TO WEST AND SOUTH

For the farmer

1. Permits the production of a crop of which the United States does not produce a surplus.
2. Will preserve for the American farmer a greater share of the American market.
3. Will more than offset any loss of foreign markets for American farm products by increasing purchasing power at home.
4. Will stabilize agricultural conditions in the West, including the livestock industry, and provide needed diversification of crops.
5. Will provide cash income for farmers on Federal reclamation projects and assure repayment of the Federal investment in irrigation facilities.

For labor

6. Will require construction of sugar factories, with consequent greater employment of skilled and unskilled labor.
7. Will give increased employment for farm labor and remove many from relief rolls.
8. Will provide opportunity for making a new start in life for many of the 100,000 farm families forced to migrate westward by the drought and other conditions.

For the businessman

9. Will turn a larger percentage of the American consumer's dollar into channels of American trade.
10. Will more than offset any loss of foreign markets for American products by increasing purchasing power in the West and South.
11. Will provide investment opportunity for millions of dollars of new capital in sugar factories and equipment.

For the taxpayer

12. Will bring no charge on the Federal Treasury, since the sugar program is more than self-sustaining.

REVISION AND CODIFICATION OF NATIONALITY LAWS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I submit the conference report on House bill 9980 and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair). The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9980) to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of inserting the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, on page 92 of the House bill, between lines 10 and 11, insert the following:

"SEC. 503. If any person who claims a right or privilege as a national of the United States is denied such right or privilege by any Department or agency, or executive official thereof, upon the ground that he is not a national of the United States, such person, regardless of whether he is within the United States or abroad, may institute an action against the head of such Department or agency in the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia or in the district court of the United States for the district in which such person claims a permanent residence for a judgment declaring him to be a national of the United States. If such person is outside the United States and shall have instituted such an action in court, he may, upon submission of a sworn application showing that the claim of nationality presented in such action is made in good faith and has a substantial basis, obtain from a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States in the foreign country in which he is residing a certificate of identity stating that his nationality status is pending before the court, and may be admitted to the United States with such certificate upon the condition that he shall be subject to deportation in case it shall be decided by the court that he is not a national of the United States. Such certificate of identity shall not be denied solely on the ground that such person has lost a status previously had or acquired as a national of the United States; and from any denial of an application for such certificate the applicant shall be entitled to an appeal to the Secretary of State, who, if he approves the denial, shall state in writing the reasons for his decision. The Secretary of State, with approval of the Attorney General, shall prescribe rules and regulations for the issuance of certificates of identity as above provided."

And the Senate agree to the same.

LEWIS B. SCHWELLENBACH,
WARREN R. AUSTIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN LESINSKI,
CHARLES KRAMER,
EDWARD H. REES,
JAMES E. VAN ZANDT,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the conference report deals with a measure of considerable importance covering a rather wide range of matters of legislation and political concern. I do not rise for the purpose of opposing consideration of the report but primarily to invite attention to the fact that in my opinion an injustice is being done to a number of persons who enjoy a civil-service status and who are in the Government service. As Senators know, after the United States took over the Philippine Islands a considerable number of Filipinos from time to time came to the United States, and I might add that a number of American citizens established themselves in the Philippine Islands and are there engaged in various business activities. Many Filipinos entered the military and naval service of our Government and, as indicated, several hundred—perhaps several thousand—from time to time came to the United States.

For a number of years there was uncertainty as to what would finally be the relations between the United States and the Philippines and the status which Filipinos would occupy. However, the Tydings-McDuffey Act, passed only a few years ago, made provision for the independence of the Philippines in 1946. A number of Filipinos who came to the United States obtained positions in the Government, and a limited number submitted to civil-service examinations and obtained civil-service ratings. Perhaps 200 of those who have a civil-service status are affected by the measure under consideration. This measure provides for the naturalization of various groups who are denominated in the measure as—

White persons, persons of African nativity or descent, and descendants of races indigenous to the Western Hemisphere.

The bill, however, excludes Filipinos, even though they have a civil-service status, and have served the Government for many years, and are still occupying positions under civil-service rules and regulations.

As will be observed, many groups and persons who are not citizens, who have not served the Government, and who do not have a civil-service status have the privilege of becoming naturalized citizens. Filipinos, however, regardless of their loyal service to the Government, are discriminated against and are denied the opportunity of becoming American citizens. I stated the number is very small, probably not more than 200, and they are discharging with fidelity the duties of the positions which they occupy. It was claimed by opponents of the proposition to permit the naturalization of the Filipinos referred to, that there were groups in other nationalities for whom provision was not made for their naturalization. A sufficient answer to that contention is that those persons within the category last referred to were not denied because of their race or nationality the chance of becoming American citizens. The Filipinos may not be naturalized, whereas groups of various nationalities may become citizens of the United States.

Hon. JOAQUIN MIGUEL ELIZALDE, the Resident Commissioner of the Philippines to the United States, appeared before the conferees and submitted a plea in behalf of the naturalization of certain Filipinos who enjoy a civil-service status. He suggested an amendment providing that "nothing in the act shall prevent the naturalization of native-born Filipinos with full civil-service ratings who have been in the service of the Government for at least 3 years."

His proposed amendment also covered other persons and groups as to which, as I understand, no controversy exists. The conference committee, however, refused to accept the amendment to the conference report and it, therefore, contains no provision in behalf of the group covered by the proposed amendment.

It seems to me that under all the circumstances the group of Filipinos who are now in the civil service of the Government and enjoy a civil-service status, should not be denied the opportunity of becoming naturalized. Many of them, as I have indicated, have been in the United States for 15 or 20 years—perhaps some for a longer period. A considerable number of them have married Americans and have children and homes, and constitute a part of the community in which they reside. They take part in civic, social, and political matters and they are, as indicated, a part of the communities in which they reside.

To deny them citizenship means to cast them out of the positions which they occupy, and to prevent them from obtaining any position whatever with the Government. While it may not occur to many, it seems to me that Congress should take cognizance of the dangerous situation in the Orient and the important position occupied by the Philippines in the event of a conflict in the Pacific. The Philippines are under the jurisdiction of the United States until 1946. They may be called upon to play some part in questions of international importance, which to a greater or less extent affect the United States. At any rate, I have felt that it was hardly fair or just to oust these fine public servants who have rendered and are rendering faithful and efficient service to our country.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I should like to say a brief word. The Senate added 11 amendments to the House bill. The conferees on the part of the House, after full consideration, accepted 10 of those amendments. They stated very definitely that it was their deep conviction that if the other amendment remained in the bill it would not be possible to secure the passage of the bill in the other body.

This bill is a codification of the nationality laws, work on which was started in 1933 by the Department. It has been in the House of Representatives for 2 years. Some 30 or 40 hearings were held in the House on the bill, and it would be extremely unfortunate if, because of an amendment, the bill should fail of passage. While I was in full sympathy with the position of the Senator from Utah, and he presented the matter with his customary vigor and ability, I felt that the Senate should recede from that amendment in order to secure the passage of this very important piece of legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF SUGAR ACT OF 1937

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9654) to extend, for an additional year, the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937, and the taxes with respect to sugar.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, while I concur in all the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] has said, while, of course, I am in agreement with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] when he says that he would like a better bill, and while I, of course, coming from a particular locality, should like to see the bill written entirely for the benefit of my own people and my own section, yet I feel that it would be unfair to the administration, unfair to the American people, and unfair to those who are interested primarily in the sugar industry for us at this time not to provide some sort of extension of the Sugar Act which has been the law since 1933.

I have, therefore, as carefully and as concisely as I know how, with what aid I could get, gathered together each of the objections which have been made to the sugar program as it has been administered by our Government since 1933. I shall categorically list the eight objections which have been made, as briefly as I can, and then I shall categorically answer those objections, also as briefly as I can.

Mr. President, the opponents of the administration's sugar program have made the following charges:

First. That the sugar program "has tended to discourage the domestic sugar industry in every possible way."

Second. That the present policy, which in the main is an extension of the program which began with the Jones-Costigan Act of 1934, was declared unconstitutional in 1936.

Third. That the growers are "rigidly limited" in acreage allotments.

Fourth. That "quotas have been adjusted to permit the price to fall below what it had been in 1934, although even the administration's theorists admitted that in 1934 it did not give the farmer a fair return."

Fifth. The sugar program has injured the American taxpayer because of the lower revenue obtained from the reduced duty on sugar.

Sixth. That the "sugar program has not helped either the grower or the consumer."

Seventh. That Secretary Wallace "traded the American sugar market for the Cuban lard market," and that a $72,000,000 sugar market was traded for a $4,000,000 lard market.

Eighth. That the administration's entire sugar program has been dictated by "anxiety for the welfare of the Cuban sugar industry."

Certainly it was not the view of the senatorial sponsor of the sugar program in its inception in 1933, the late Edward P. Costigan, that the plan for relieving the ills of the sugar industry embodied in his bill would have the vicious results described by opponents of the program. Speaking on the radio in defense of the administration's sugar program, as embodied in the then pending Jones-Costigan Act, on March 6, 1934, he said:

> On Lincoln's birthday there was introduced in Congress a much misrepresented bill which is part of President Roosevelt's farm-improvement program. It directly aims at the betterment of farm conditions and earnings for American sugar growers. The bill (S. 2732) has three special aims. First, it seeks to add sugar beets and sugarcane to the other basic commodities, such as wheat, cotton, and corn. * * * This means on the side of farm earnings, if the bill passes, that sugar farmers will receive the pre-war fair-exchange value of sugar beets. * * * Second, the bill provides that bounty payments are to be raised, without any increase in sugar cost to consumers, out of the proceeds of a processing tax on refined sugar exactly matching in amount the tariff reduction. Third, the bill provides a stabilization limitation on tonnage production in the different sugar areas of the continental United States, our island possessions, and shipments to the United State from Cuba.

> The combination of a more moderate sugar tariff with bounty payments is a far sounder treatment of the sugar problem than the persistent policy of ever higher tariffs, which has led our domestic industry to the verge of ruin.

> I am, therefore, merely repeating when I say—backed by long official experience on the Tariff Commission—that the pending bill is the most constructive tariff effort to save and promote our domestic sugar industry in the history of this country. It is the Rooseveltian New Deal experimentally applied to sugar. This new approach to an old problem is so well worth trying that growers can afford for the time being to be less worried about some details. It represents an immense advance over outworn methods.

Let us examine the facts to determine whether the late Senator Costigan was correct in his prediction as to the benefits of the sugar program, or whether opponents of the program are correct in their criticism. May I answer the charges in the order given:

First. That the sugar program has tended to discourage the domestic sugar industry in every possible way.

Here is the way in which the administration has discouraged the industry:

(a) Beet-sugar production, which averaged 1,276,000 tons of refined sugar in the period 1929–33, increased to 1,685,000 tons in 1938 and 1,641,000 tons in 1939, an increase of no less than 28 percent.

(b) The sugar-beet processors, who showed losses of about 5 percent on their equity in the fiscal years ending in 1931 and 1932, before the administration's sugar program, have enjoyed an average net income equal to about 10 percent of their equity since these programs have been operative.

(c) Sugar-beet growers, who averaged approximately $6.15 per ton of beets and a total annual income of $54,250,000 in 1929–33 period—this amount includes Government payments of approximately $2,500,000 made with respect to the 1933 crop—had about $7 per ton in the period 1934–38, and $61,335,000 total in annual grower income.

(d) Sugar-beet growers received special payments for damage caused to their crops by drought, flood, freeze, storm, and other natural calamities. This form of free crop insurance is not provided for any other agricultural crops.

Second. That the present policy which, in the main, is an extension of the program which began with the Jones-Costigan Act of 1934, was declared unconstitutional in 1936.

It was the Agricultural Adjustment Act which was declared unconstitutional in January 1936. The Jones-Costigan Act was never before the Supreme Court; and, except for the tax-payment feature of the Jones-Costigan Act, the act continued in effect throughout 1936 and 1937 until enactment of the Sugar Act of 1937, with reenactment of the tax-payment feature. Various sections of the Sugar Act have been before the courts in recent years, and these sections of the act and the administration thereof by the Secretary have been upheld by the courts in every instance.

Third. That the growers are "rigidly limited" in acreage allotments.

It is true that there have been rigid limitations on Puerto Rican growers, and, under Cuban and Philippine sugar legislation, supplementing our sugar program, there have been severe limitations on growers of cane in these countries. There has also been an attempt of large Louisiana and Florida growers to exceed their acreages, which the administration has been obliged to resist. But except for the crop of 1938 there have been no limitations on growers' beet acreages since 1934, and the 1938 acreage was practically at the record level. The acreage devoted to sugar beets has greatly increased in recent years.

Fourth. That "quotas have been adjusted to permit the price to fall below what it had been in 1934, although even the administration's theorists admitted that in 1934 it did not give the farmer a fair return."

This statement conveniently ignores the Government payments which have been made to producers under the sugar program. In 1934, prior to the sugar program, whenever prices fell to a low point, Government payments to producers were not made to supplement their income from processors. Under the sugar program the growers' returns per ton, for the United States as a whole, show a significant increase as compared with the prior years, as the figures already cited show. Furthermore, the proportion of the total income from the sale of sugar received by growers has increased under the program. Until doubt arose this year about continuance of the sugar quotas after December 31, 1940, the price of sugar, including payments to growers, compared very favorably with the years prior to the program. The low price of 1934 for raw sugar, duty-paid, was 2.70 cents, while the price, including Government payments, has averaged in excess of 3.50 cents per pound since the passage of the Sugar Act of 1937.

The recent decline in price is, in the opinion of trade experts, due more to uncertainty about whether or not there will be a quota system next year than to failure to adjust supplies to demand under the quota system. If anyone desires to help the sugar growers and processors, the first step is to give the sugar market confidence in the continuance of the quota system after December 31, 1940.

Fifth. The sugar program has injured the American taxpayer because of the lower revenue obtained from the reduced duty on sugar.

This statement is misleading, because the Treasury income from the duty on sugar was gradually disappearing as the high tariff duty stimulated the production of duty-free sugars in the United States and its possessions. The duty collections on Cuban sugar decreased from a peak of $145,000,000 in 1922 to only $63,000,000 in 1933, even with the highest tariffs on Cuban sugar in the history of the industry.

Sixth. That the "sugar program has not helped either the grower or the consumer."

It is, of course, inconsistent to say that the sugar program has not helped the consumer and at the same time to argue for greatly decreased supplies to consumers in order to increase prices to them.

Seventh. That Secretary Wallace "traded the American sugar market for the Cuban lard market," and that a $72,000,000 sugar market was traded for a $4,000,000 lard market; and

Eighth. That the administration's entire sugar program has been dictated by "anxiety for the welfare of the Cuban sugar industry."

In the above statement rice and other agricultural exports to Cuba are omitted in sarcasm. These exports, plus industrial exports, amounted to $78,000,000 in 1939. All the "invisible" items of trade are omitted also: the purchase of silver by the Cuban Government, for example.

This is how this administration has favored the Cubans:

First. Throughout the entire period of the 90-cent duty, there was in effect an excise tax on sugar against Cuba which makes the total burden on Cuban sugar producers throughout the period $1.40 per hundred pounds instead of 90 cents per hundred pounds.

Second. The amount of sugar permitted to come in from Cuba was slashed from about one-half of our total consumption in the late twenties to about 29 percent under the sugar program. This year's Cuban quota of 1,863,000 tons compares with receipts of Cuban sugar in the years 1925–32, as follows:

1926	3,944,500
1927	3,491,000
1928	3,125,000
1929	3,613,000
1930	2,945,500
1931	2,534,000
1932	1,834,500

As a part of my remarks I should like to have inserted in the RECORD at this place a letter by Joshua Bernhardt, Chief of the Sugar Division, to a friend of mine in Utah. The letter explains the problems facing the sugar industry in America.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUNE 10, 1940.

MY DEAR SIR: Hon. ELBERT D. THOMAS has referred to us your letter to him of May 13, 1940, and has asked us to write and inform you on the sugar program.

As you point out the beet-sugar industry is essential to the prosperity of Utah and the intermountain region, and it goes without saying that if it were possible to expand the beet-sugar industry in the Western States as you request without injury to important groups of citizens in other parts of the United States, there would be no difficulty in the sugar situation. Unfortunately this is not the case.

In support of your view you state that the sugar-beet industry "is not competing with any other American industry." The following quotation from a speech by the executive secretary of the United States Cane Sugar Refiners Association, made at a public meeting held on May 3, 1940, in New York City, shows the conflict of interests between the sugar-beet industry and the various communities on the eastern and southern seaboard which have long been dependent upon the business of refining raw sugar:

"In the face of an increased consumption, the port of New York business declined from about 2,100,000 tons to 1,200,000 tons. And I repeat: Last year, in 1939, New York had the lowest volume of sugar business, on a proportionate basis, that it has had since it was organized here in 1696.

"Now, why did that take place? Why did New York lose its volume of sugar business? Well, New York lost its volume of sugar business largely—not entirely, but largely—due to the fact that our Federal sugar policy favored other sugar groups and areas.

"The first thing that has crippled New York's sugar industry—and, gentlemen, it will continue to cripple it unless legislation stops it—has been the tremendous increase in the production of beet sugar in our Western States. I want to get it into the record, Mr. Pike, without any equivocation, that the refiners are unalterably opposed to an expansion of the production of beet sugar."

The recent public hearings on sugar before the House Agricultural Committee contains similar statements and resolutions by many organizations and communities which would be adversely affected by further expansion of the sugar-beet industry.

The primary cause of anxiety of the sugar-refining communities referred to is the record expansion of sugar-beet production in the United States under the sugar program of this administration. As you know, the production of beet sugar increased from an average of 1,238,000 short tons of refined sugar in the years 1928–37 to 1,685,000 tons in 1938, and 1,641,000 tons in 1939. All beet sugar is produced in refined form and consequently competes directly with the products of the seaboard refineries.

Curtailment of our importations of sugar is also an injury to a number of agricultural and industrial areas that have export outlets in the offshore sugar-producing areas which supply our market. Cuba, which supplies about 29 percent of our sugar requirements, is one of our most important foreign markets for our agricultural and industrial products. In fact, last year, the neighbor republic took $81,000,000 worth of commodities from us, compared with only $24,763,000 in 1933. The island is our principal foreign market for rice, and our second most important export outlet for lard. Exports of rice to Cuba in 1933 totaled only 4,785,000 pounds; in 1939 they amounted to 209,253,000 pounds, while in the same period lard exports went from 10,908,000 to 55,431,000 pounds. Obviously, American exporters of these and other products are anxious to protect the Cuban export market.

Consequently, as the President has repeatedly explained, the whole problem of sugar legislation is an effort on the part of the Congress to balance equitably the interests of the various conflicting groups involved. Every effort was made by representatives of the different interests during the past 6 months to agree upon a program, but it was not possible for them to come to a satisfactory conclusion. To avoid serious injury to the sugar-beet farmers, sugar-beet processors, and other interests now enjoying protection under the sugar program, it was necessary for the President to drop definite legislation on sugar and concentrate on mere continuance for 1 year of the existing program.

We have noted your statements to the effect that the profits of those engaged in the beet-sugar industry are unsatisfactory. The following table sets forth the financial record of the processors to whom you have referred:

	Utah-Idaho Sugar Co., net income after all charges	Amalgamated Sugar Co., Inc., net income after all charges [1]

[4] 18-month period.
[5] After allowance of $250,000 for property abandonment in addition to normal depreciation. In the absence of this unusual charge, the net income of the company would have been equal to approximately 5 percent of its net worth. The income of the Amalgamated Sugar Co. for the period ended with Sept. 20, 1939 (the last date for which information is available), was equivalent to approximately 10 percent of its net worth.

You will note that processors' losses in the years 1929–33 were turned into substantial profits under the sugar program. Growers have received approximate parity returns during this period.

For your further information we enclose a copy of a bulletin recently prepared in this Department explaining the sugar program in relation to sugar beets and a copy of the letter from the President to the Honorable MARVIN JONES, dated April 11, 1940, on sugar legislation.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I should like to emphasize the figures given in the last part of this letter. The figures deal with the incomes of the two great sugar companies in my State, and it seems to me that from the figures we can draw a conclusion which is absolutely based upon facts. The conclusion is that over a period of years these great sugar companies operated in the red, as I have previously stated. Then, beginning in 1934, and down to the present time, they have been consistently in the black, with a reasonably good, in fact, a splendid income from the investment.

From 1934 to the present time we note gains which have been substantial. Making comparison from the day of the loss to the day of the gain, we find the gain in percentages is tremendous. Of course, any percentage of gain compared with any percentage of loss is a tremendous gain, but when from a 5- or 6-percent loss on all equity, on all investment, the income has increased so as to show approximately a 10-percent gain on all investment, the program seems even too good to be true.

The processors in my own State have always been unfriendly to the act until there was danger of its not being continued in force; they have always been unfriendly especially to those who aided Senator COSTIGAN in bringing about the great sugar reform, and especially unfriendly to that particular Senator who had charge of the international sugar agreement, which supplemented the local act, and which put sugar pretty well under control, if not under control completely, at least to the extent that the whole world knows exactly what is taking place in the sugar industry in all parts of the world.

From this type of control, or from this type of study, we can gain at least an understanding, so that if there is anything at all in a managed economic system, if there is anything at all in the ability to fit industry into actual need, if there is anything at all in artificially or arbitrarily attempting to make industry profitable by any kind of act, we will be able to demonstrate it.

I cannot help saying, furthermore, that, as a result of what may be called experimental economics, and experimental agriculture, that which has been accomplished is all to the good, not, as one Senator has said, all that we would like, not, as any of us say, all that we want. Heaven only knows that if we could have all we pray for, we would have this world revolving around ourselves and our own interests. But I know of no time in the history of the world when an ordinary individual group, unless it has gone definitely into the exploitation of other groups and has taken advantage against other groups, has ever had its way for a very long time.

Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a Department of Agriculture press release dated August 26, 1940. I know that this information will be of interest to the Senate and to the general public.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., August 26, 1940]

SECRETARY APPROVES REVISION IN SUGAR CONSUMPTION ESTIMATE

Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace today announced reduction in the estimate of consumers' requirements of sugar for the calendar year 1940 from the present estimate of 6,607,745 tons, announced February 23, 1940, to 6,471,362 tons, a decrease of 136,383 tons.

The Sugar Act of 1937 directs the Secretary of Agriculture to make an initial determination of consumers' requirements in December for the following calendar year and to make any necessary adjustments in this initial determination during the year. The present revision was made in accordance with a formula contained in the act on the basis of an analysis of statistics on sugar distribution in the United States during the first 6 months of 1940, which have been obtained recently and which were released on August 5, 1940, preliminary figures received to date on "invisible" stocks of sugar to be released shortly, and other data on demand conditions for sugar. The quotas for the various sugar-producing areas under the revised figure compare with the former quotas as follows:

	Revised determination	Previous determination of Feb. 23, 1940
Domestic beet	1,549,898	1,549,898
Mainland cane	420,167	420,167
Hawaii	938,037	938,037
Puerto Rico	797,982	797,982
Virgin Islands	8,916	8,916
Philippine Islands	[1] 982,441	1,003,783
Cuba	1,749,796	1,863,217
Foreign countries other than Cuba	24,125	25,745
Total	6,471,362	6,607,745

[1] 1939 duty-free quota.

Officials of the Department pointed out that under the Sugar Act no reduction may be made below 3,715,000 tons in the domestic quotas. Consequently, the reduction affects the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, Cuba, and other foreign countries solely.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, my remarks have in a sense been political, therefore it will not be entirely out of place for me to turn to another subject.

Last night in Pittsburgh Mr. Wendell Willkie, the Republican nominee for President, attempted to win labor's votes by announcing his belief in the gains labor has won under the New Deal.

No doubt many workers will question Mr. Willkie's sincerity in view of the labor record established by some of the companies he has headed in the Commonwealth & Southern system. For instance, the Radio and Electrical Union News, published by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, an A. F. of L. union, recently reported that the Alabama Power Co., one of Mr. Willkie's former concerns, was "still one of the blackest spots on the utility map" from the labor standpoint.

But, for the purpose of this discussion, I do not question the Republican nominee's sincerity. I want to suggest to organized labor that as President, Mr. Willkie can be no more friendly to labor than his party—which has shown, and continues to demonstrate whenever there is a showdown—that it does not agree with its nominee on the National Labor Relations Act, or many of the other reforms to which Mr. Willkie pledged allegiance last night.

Workingmen who listened to the speech last night undoubtedly noted that his Republican audience found much more reason to cheer when Mr. Willkie talked about changing the administration of the Labor Board than when he announced he was for the act and supported the right of labor to bargain collectively. Workers, I am sure, noticed that throughout his speech there was little enthusiasm when he listed labor's gains, but great enthusiasm when he used the language of labor critics in denouncing the Board's record.

That attitude is the attitude of the Republican Party as demonstrated by its voting record here in Congress. It was not Republicans who put through the Wagner Act and these other protections for the workingmen. The record shows that these laws are on the books because of Democratic votes, not Republican votes.

When the Wagner Act originally passed the Senate, on May 16, 1935, there were 12 votes against it in the Senate, and 8 of them were Republican votes. Republican votes were largely responsible for forcing through the House the so-called Smith amendments to the labor law, which, if they should be adopted as they stand today, would sabotage that act. Republicans voted more than 10 to 1 for that emasculating proposal.

When labor looks at the record, I am sure it will realize that Mr. Willkie cannot speak for his party on these issues. It will vote for the party which put these laws on the books and against the one which has tried to block these gains or would sabotage them.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I desire to make my opposition clear with reference to the pending bill. I am opposed to it because I consider it undemocratic and against the best interests of the consumers and producers of sugar, as well as the interest of American labor, and a detriment even to our national defense in this emergency.

Recognizing my right to object to the consideration of the bill at this time, any objection I might make would be immediately nullified, I am sure, on a motion to consider the bill, and I therefore do not interpose an objection to its consideration. However, I desire to have the RECORD show that I am opposed to the proposed legislation, but I do not object to its consideration now solely because I know that my objection would be immediately overruled by a majority vote of my colleagues, and I consider our time at this moment to be too valuable to be wasted by the interjection of dilatory tactics against the proposed legislation.

Mr. President, I propose, in what I shall say, to lay the foundation for future activity on the sugar-quota measure, and I shall present my views at this time.

In these days of world stress America should guard well her supplies of essential materials. Congress has been asked to spend many millions for the acquisition of essential raw materials, but there is one item on the essential-material list which we apparently have overlooked. I refer to sugar.

Sugar today is not a mere luxury. Sugar is a food. Sugar is something that is essential to any nation, whether at war or at peace, and it is one essential material it can cost us nothing to acquire.

Conditions in Europe have vitally changed the American sugar problem. It has been recently stated that for a nation at war bullets come first in importance, wheat second, and sugar third. I sincerely hope that our Nation will never be at war; but, if sugar is so important, let us do something to be assured of a steady supply for our people, irrespective of war or peace.

Home production should not in any event be denied or restricted so long as America produces less than it consumes. In spite of this obvious fact, under the iniquitous Sugar Act of 1937, we have set up a quota system in this country under which we must get two-thirds of our sugar from areas outside our mainland. This sugar which comes to us from Cuba, the Philippines, and other offshore areas must be transported by boat, and recent figures from the Maritime Commission concerning its transportation indicate the danger of relying on offshore areas for our sugar.

Over 85 percent of the vessels engaged in transporting sugar from Cuba to the United States are Scandinavian, and it must be remembered that Cuba supplies us with about one-third of our sugar consumption. Approximately 27 percent of the vessels engaged in transporting sugar from the Philippines to the United States are Scandinavian, 14 percent are British, 40 percent are Japanese, while only 15 percent are American. The Philippines supply us with about a sixth of the sugar; in other words, nearly 1,000,000 tons.

What would happen tomorrow if we were to engage in war with Japan? Probably the Philippines would be cut off. In the first place, there would be no vessels to bring the sugar to us. We know that the Japanese, who transport most of it, would not transport any and we could not obtain that sugar supply. If that were to occur it would take us 5 to 6 years to overcome the resulting deficiency in America. We are running a great and a dangerous risk in not allowing the people on the mainland of the United States at this time to lay the foundation for supplying ourselves. Let the world do what it pleases. We should look after ourselves.

What will happen to our sugar supplies if the Scandinavian British, and Japanese vessels are unable or refuse to transport our sugar to us? Britain needs all her vessels, including the Scandinavian vessels commandeered when those countries fell, for her own life-and-death struggle; Japan's militaristic clique now in power is unfriendly to us; the dictators, if they conquer Britain, will control the shipping industry. How, then, will we get our sugar from these offshore areas?

The answer is obvious. If unsettled world conditions continue, we in the United States will have a sugar shortage similar to what we had during the last war, and sugar prices will go sky high, as they did then.

Let us look back and see what happened to sugar prices during the last war, when we had to rely on offshore sources for sugar.

In 1914 the average retail price of sugar in the United States was slightly less than 6 cents per pound. By 1919 the average retail price for sugar in the United States was nearly 11½ cents per pound, while in 1920 the price was 20 cents per pound. It was even necessary to ration sugar during this period. Do we want this to happen in the United States again?

During the World War sugar was apportioned or rationed in my home city, and I recall very distinctly the trouble the authorities had in trying to prevent a great number of selfish persons from stealthily buying and storing excess amounts of sugar for the use of their own families and causing those who did not do likewise to suffer thereby.

Last year the United States had a sample of what happens when wartime conditions are coupled with limitations on marketings as provided for under the present Sugar Act of 1937, with its undemocratic quota system.

On August 15, 1939, the average retail price per pound for sugar in the United States was a little over 5 cents. In early September, immediately after the outbreak of war, retail prices jumped sharply all over the United States. The average price of sugar jumped about 1½ cents per pound, but in some cases prices went up as much as 5 cents per pound. The Department of Justice, as Senators remember, was flooded with complaints from housewives who were unable to buy sugar at any price and who in many instances were actually rationed when purchasing sugar.

By mid-September the price flurry had subsided, but the housewife in Boston was paying on the average a little over 6½ cents per pound for sugar, the housewife in Pittsburgh was paying slightly more, the Cleveland housewife was paying 7 cents per pound, while the housewife in Detroit was paying a little more. This occurred without the United States being in war. What would happen if this country ever becomes subject to wartime conditions?

Because of these advancing prices and the shortage in sugar supplies, on September 11, 1939, the President of the United States found it necessary to suspend the undemocratic sugar quotas so that more sugar could come in and prices could come down. Immediately the price of sugar fell to its pre-war level. In this act of the President we have the answer to the entire sugar problem in the United States and a way to avert a repetition of any wartime increase in price.

The present oppressive Sugar Act expires, as far as the quota powers of the Secretary of Agriculture are concerned, on December 31, 1940. As Senators know, this act allows American mainland producers to have only 30 percent of the American market and hands over the rest of the American market to the producers in the Philippine Islands, Cuba, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. Cuba alone is magnanimously given 28.60 percent of the American market, or about as much of the American market as our own American producers.

Now pending in the Senate is a bill to continue the present Sugar Act for another year. There is absolutely no need to continue the Sugar Act if we are to safeguard our position in the face of what may turn out to be a very strained condition between some of the great powers of the world and the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point, or would he rather not be interrupted?

Mr. ANDREWS. I should rather not be interrupted until I conclude my speech, and then I shall be glad to answer any questions Senators may wish to ask.

To those who claim continuance of the act is necessary because the beet growers and sugarcane growers need the Government subsidies, I would say that they are provided for by the Agricultural Appropriation Act and that this would take care of the 1940–41 crop.

Under the present act the taxing powers for benefit payments do not expire until June 30, 1941. It is therefore unnecessary to pass any additional legislation to provide for benefit payments for another year. Next year if it is deemed advisable to continue the quota system of sugar control, there will still be time for the new Congress to give that matter whatever consideration is its due.

I am opposed to the continuation of the Sugar Act, first as a citizen of the United States, and, second, as a citizen of Florida, for I feel that the best interests of our Nation and State are adversely affected by the act.

Let us look at the case of Florida for a moment. Under the so-called historical basis of the Sugar Act, Florida producers of cane sugar get less than 1 percent of the American market, or about 60,000 tons. According to statistics, Florida consumes 120,000 tons of sugar per year; yet under the act Florida is not allowed to produce even enough sugar for her own uses. Is that a fair situation? Florida is permitted to produce only half the amount of sugar which the people of Florida themselves consume. That is a situation which no one can satisfactorily explain. It is un-American. I am wondering what would happen, for instance, if the people of Wisconsin were not allowed to produce more than 50 percent of the cheese they consume. The same question may be asked with respect to many products in the various States. Suppose, for example, that the State of Wyoming were not allowed to raise more than 50 percent of the cattle which would supply the needs of the people of Wyoming. We are exactly in that situation. You may try to explain to our people in Florida. It cannot be explained.

Florida pays the highest wages of any area furnishing sugar for the American market. In spite of that fact the cost of producing sugar in Florida is approximately 2 cents a pound.

On the other hand, Cuba pays the lowest wages, yet Cuba, according to figures recently introduced before the House Agriculture Committee, has a cost of production in excess of 2¼ cents per pound. Strange as it may seem, Cuba with a higher cost of production, is given the lion's shares of the American sugar market, taking jobs away from American workmen and adding thousands to our relief rolls.

Those favoring the retention of the Sugar Act have given as one of their arguments the statement that turning over the American sugar market to outside interests in turn creates a market for the American manufacturer. "Buy their sugar", these people say, "and they will buy our automobiles, our radios, and the rest of the things we manufacture."

Let us analyze this statement. As pointed out before a recent House Agriculture Committee meeting on sugar legislation, in Florida there is a radio for every 7 persons. In Cuba there is a radio for every 48 persons, in Puerto Rico there is 1 radio for every 100 persons, and in the Philippines only 1 radio for every 608 persons.

In Florida there is 1 automobile for every 5 persons. In Cuba there is only 1 car for every 250 persons, in Puerto Rico only one car for every 130 persons, and in the Philippine Islands only 1 car for every 490 persons. The question arises, Who is spending our money and where?

These facts should completely dispose of the theories advanced by those who desire to retain the Sugar Act on our statute books. A member of the House Agriculture Committee in open hearings asserted that in his opinion a dollar spent in this country for sugar creates a far greater market for American products than a dollar spent in Cuba, of which only about 30 cents returns to this country. I should say that the return is much lower. While only 30 cents out of every dollar we spend for Cuban sugar is returned to this country in the purchase of goods, we can say that practically 100 percent of the amount spent for sugar raised in this country is spent among our own people.

When hearings were held in 1937 on the Sugar Act, some interesting facts were introduced, but somehow or other they were ignored. It was shown that American banks in New York own sugar mills in Cuba which produce nearly 60 percent of all the sugar produced in Cuba, and that only about 25 percent of the sugar in Cuba is produced by mills owned by Cubans. It is easy to see from this that Cuban labor cannot be expected to buy much of our manufactured goods when the profits of the sugar industry in Cuba are being siphoned off by the New York bankers and the Cuban laborers are paid peon wages. I understand they receive an average of 53 cents a day. American laborers producing sugar in the State of Florida are paid nearly $2; in addition, they are furnished homes, trained nurses, hospitals, and schools.

I have no objection to bankers making a profit, but if they are to make a profit let them make it in the United States; let them come to Florida for their sugar and we will produce it for them more cheaply. At the same time our workers will receive a much higher wage than that paid the peon labor of Cuba, and we shall thus maintain the American standard of living for the workers. If the bankers come to Florida and produce their sugar there, we can be assured that the American workers hired will purchase American goods and thus increase American production. We can be assured of a steady supply of sugar, a lessening of the relief rolls, and a lessening of the danger that we might not have enough sugar in the event of war.

Florida is not asking charity. Florida is asking for simple justice. In the 1937 hearings before the Senate Finance Committee on the Sugar Act the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] stated that an examination of the Florida lands led him to believe that they are the richest in the world for the production of sugar.

Today in the Everglades of Florida thousands and thousands of acres of the richest soil in the world lie idle. Today in the State of Florida more than 30,000 persons are on relief because there is no employment for them in the State. Florida offers a solution to all these problems. Remove the sugar quotas and we shall put all this rich acreage to work; we shall furnish sugar cheaply for families now in want; and we shall take off the relief rolls many of our finest citizens.

In the production of 60,000 tons of sugar in Florida more than 5,000 heads of families are employed; and as we increase the amount allowed continental United States, or Florida, every time an additional 100,000 tons of domestic production are allowed, something like six or seven thousand more persons can be put to work. It seems to me that is a matter which ought to be seriously considered. Every person employed in America producing additional tons of sugar will spend all his money at home. I have some figures on the subject. In 1937 our exports to Cuba were $92,000,000, whereas our imports from Cuba were $148,000,000, a difference in favor of Cuba of $56,000,000. If we compare the imports and exports over a period of years we find that the same proportion generally holds true. For example, in 1911 the proportion of the total exports of the United States which went to Cuba was 3 percent, whereas the percentage of total United States imports which came from Cuba amounted to 6.9 percent, the exports being one-half of the imports. That condition has obtained consistently.

Florida should not be penalized for its ability and initiative. Immediately after the World War, when America learned that it could not produce enough sugar for its own consumption, the taxpayers of the State of Florida and the owners of the Everglades taxing district spent more than $20,000,000 in preparing this land for cultivation.

The Federal Government did not help drain the Everglades, but the landowners of Florida did it themselves in order to have land from which we could produce our sugar and winter vegetables. After the disastrous storm and flood of 1936, the Federal Government aided at a cost of $10,000,000 in building dikes around Lake Okeechobee to protect it from floods after the State had succeeded in draining this area.

Now let us look at the consumer. On March 1, 1938, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace wrote a letter to a member of this body stating as follows:

> It is estimated that at current prices American consumers are obliged to pay more than $350,000,000 per annum in excess of the value, at world prices, of their annual sugar supply—

That is without allowance for the estimated net revenue of approximately $47,000,000, represented by the difference between disbursements under the Sugar Act of 1937 and receipts from the tariff and the 50-cent tax on sugar, or for the possible increase in world price that might result from changed conditions—this is equivalent to a tax of approximately $2.70 per capita on a population of 129,000,000 persons. It means on the average a levy of more than $10 per family, including that one-third of the Nation which is ill-nourished, and it represents an amount of purchasing power equal to more than 50 quarts of milk and 50 loaves of bread for each family in the United States.

It actually costs the American consumers $350,000,000 a year over and above world prices just because of our quota system restricting supplies. In the 6 years the quota system has been in effect American consumers have paid an additional sum of money amounting to more than $2,000,000,000. Think what we could have done with this huge sum. Our purchasers would have been able to take up a lot of the slack in the surplus commodities market; they would have been able to purchase the surplus citrus fruits, the surplus wheat, the surplus lard, the surplus apples, the surplus cotton, and a large amount of our manufactured products. Yes, this $350,000,000 a year would certainly increase our standard of living.

The undemocratic sugar-quota system penalizes people of low income more than any other group in the United States, for they can least afford this loss of purchasing power. In terms of families this sugar protection contribution amounts to the cost of from 12 to 30 family meals per annum, depending on the size of the family income. Or we can say that the extra cost of sugar means 50 fewer quarts of milk per year for these families. This may sound like a small matter, but to those who have all too little to eat it is a very important item.

We feel that the beet areas are entitled to their normal protection which the Tariff Act gives them. If the Sugar Act of 1937 should not be continued, as I fervently hope it will not be, domestic areas would still be automatically protected by a $1.50 per hundredweight tariff.

Mr. President, we should bear preeminently in mind at this time that England and France are now paying for their failure to build up their own capacity for the production of airplanes and other war materials. We all recognize this to be so. Let us at the same time recognize that we are in the same position with reference to sugar. We are neglecting to build up our own sugar-producing facilities, so that this strategic material and basic food will be plentiful in the United States irrespective of any war conditions.

Let us give American industry a chance; let us give American workmen a chance; let us, when the proper time comes, which I hope will not be in the distant future, wipe out, once and for all, the undemocratic Sugar Act of 1937 from our statute books.

I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point a table showing the retail price and consumption of sugar in 10 countries in the past few years, which partially indicates why there is a war in Europe today. Germany and Italy have the highest prices for sugar and the lowest consumption per capita. It is obvious that the struggle for sugar is one of the many factors in the present war in Europe.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Retail price of sugar and consumption in 10 countries, 1936–37 and 1937–38

Country	Price (cents per pound)		Consumption per capita (pounds refined value)
	1937	1938	1936–37	1937–38
United Kingdom	5.1	4.7	112.9	111.6
United States	5.6	5.3	97.3	96.5
Canada	5.9	5.9	102.3	103.0
Australia	6.6	6.6	99.0	116.8
Norway	7.2	7.2	78.5	73.9
Irish Free State	7.2	6.8	90.8	90.6
France	8.8	7.2	59.3	54.7
Netherlands	12.1	12.2	62.4	64.4
Germany	13.7	13.7	59.3	59.1
Italy	14.6	15.7	18.5	20.1

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, let me refer to the situation in Florida. Between September 1939 and January 1, 1940, the sugar quota was lifted. That is the time of the year when the seed must be placed for the next planting. Feeling that world conditions at that time would justify the farmers of my State making additional plantings, they increased their plantings in cane 35,000 acres. Since that time the apportionment has been placed on cane, and, proportionately, the share of Florida is only about 25,000 acres. In other words, 10,000 more acres have been planted than are permitted under the apportionment act because of the suspension in September 1939.

I wish to stress also that Florida is allowed to produce less than 1 percent of the mainland consumption of sugar. That is a very difficult thing to explain. I was raised on a farm and I know that for many years we were told and instructed by the county agents and other farm agencies to rotate our crops, to diversify them. We were told, "Do not plant so much cotton and tobacco." Cotton and tobacco are now being planted under an apportionment system, and in continental United States, apparently, more cotton and tobacco are now produced than can be consumed with the consequent effect on prices.

Sugar, however, is a nonsurplus product. In the mainland of the United States we grow less than 30 percent of what we consume. Is it not a pity that after we have diversified our crops, and inaugurated the production of sugar, which is a nonsurplus crop, we are not allowed to use the fruits of our labors? That condition cannot be explained. No one need try to explain it, because it would not be common sense to try to do so. My people are resenting the fact that, although they have spent $25,000,000 draining the richest soil on the face of the earth, soil which is anywhere from 1 to 8 feet deep, and which produces more per acre than any other in the world, for the valley of the Nile has no soil to compare with it, now they are not allowed to use the land. They undertook that development soon after the World War when they found that this country ought to begin to prepare for its own self-sustenance in any crisis.

Cuba is allowed to ship to this country 2,000,000 tons of the 6,500,000 tons of sugar we consume. Our people will never understand—and how can they understand—why we should look so carefully after the interests of other peoples outside the United States while within a stone's throw of Cuba they themselves are not allowed to produce enough sugar to supply their own needs. I have heard the statement made that perhaps if we could float Florida down to the sea and attach it to Cuba, the farmers would have been infinitely better off than we are at this time in our efforts to produce and sell sugar and winter fruits. However, that is not the only unfavorable condition which we confront; it is only one of them. In Florida we produce winter vegetables. On the coldest days of the winter, in January and February, when ice in the north is on the ground, we can still get in the Senate restaurant, or any other restaurant, almost any kind of fresh vegetables, which are needed so badly during the winter. Where do they come from? In Florida roasting ears can be picked in December and January; strawberries are picked often at Christmas. I could name a great many other vegetables produced by Florida's winter gardens. Who are our competitors? Our competitors are those countries which are similarly located and have similar climates; and under the reciprocal-trade agreements, they are allowed to ship into the United States commodities which compete with us and we are "sold down the river."

Florida, which once had a prosperous pineapple industry, has lost it. Because we were without the proper protection and because of the cheaper methods of production in Cuba, the Cubans have taken it away from us. I understand the avocado-pear industry is going the same way, and we are apprehensive now that our sugar industry will suffer a similar fate, if it has not already gone that way.

That is the reason why we oppose the reciprocal-trade agreements on perishable farm and grove products. The people down there are trying to own and live in their own homes. They are nearly all native Americans; and they feel that they are getting rather severe treatment, particularly when they realize that they are not allowed to produce as much of a necessary article of food as our own people themselves consume.

Mr. President, I have on the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated. It is an amendment to section 212 of the Sugar Act of 1937.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair). The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, immediately after the enacting clause, it is proposed to insert the following:

That section 212 of the Sugar Act of 1937 (Public, No. 414, 75th Cong., ch. 898, 1st sess.), be, and the same is hereby, amended in the following respect: By striking out the period at the end of the section and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon, and following the semicolon the following words, to wit: "(5) Any sugar or liquid sugar produced from sugar beets or sugarcane grown within the United States upon which no application is made for conditional payments under title 3 of the Sugar Act of 1937."

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, that subsection merely inserts in the Sugar Act of 1937 another proviso to the effect that any grower shall be exempt from acreage who declines to take the benefit payments; that he may grow as much cane or beet as he desires if he waives that right of benefit payments.

Some of the growers have already offered to waive that right. Each one of these amendments now offered I introduced here last spring in the Senate in the form of an amendment to the same act, and I have just brought together these three amendments. The first one covers that particular subject. Any one who waives any right he has to any benefits should be allowed, we think, to grow whatever amount of sugar he desires on whatever amount of acreage he desires. In other words, he cuts himself off from any benefits whatever. It seems to me that that is fair; and I ask that the amendment be adopted.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, a statement giving the answers to certain questions.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(1) ANSWER TO QUESTION RE BENEFIT PAYMENTS TO UNITED STATES SUGAR CORPORATION

There have been paid United States Sugar Corporation so-called benefit payments aggregating $2,750,000. Taxes for meeting benefit payments, deducted by refiner in settlements with United States Sugar Corporation, are probably far in excess of such amount; for the harvest just completed the excess of taxes over benefit payments was $183,741; and for the preceding harvest $310,150. It is interesting to here note that had we been permitted to operate at capacity the increased earnings would have been much greater than the so-called benefit payments received; I believe this condition is also true of all efficient producers other than operators of family-size farms to whom payments not in excess of $250 per annum have been suggested.

(2) ANSWER TO QUESTION RE MAXIMUM BENEFIT PAYMENTS

The benefit payments per acre of sugar beets, based upon agricultural statistics, 1939, and using the maximum payment of 60 cents per 100 pounds of sugar, would be $21.75 (12.5 tons beets per acre times 290 pounds sugar per ton of beets times 60 cents per 100 pounds sugar. See table 170, p. 126). Using the same statistical source, and maximum base, the benefits per acre of Louisiana cane would be $18.60 (21.7 tons cane sugar per acre times 148 pounds sugar per ton cane times 60 cents per 100 pounds sugar. See table 180, p. 134). It is clear from these figures that the sum of $200 will cover sugar-beet production on 9 acres and sugarcane production in Louisiana on 11 acres. It is maintained without fear of successful contradiction that such acreage is the maximum which can be maintained on a diversified family-sized farm. It is interesting to note the much greater returns available from sugar beets than from three of our major crops. The average farm value of sugar beets is $63.50 (table 170, p. 126), and so-called benefit payments aggregate an additional $21.75 per acre, or a total of $85.25; such amount is 14 times the farm value of an acre of wheat (table 1, p. 10), 6 times the farm value of an acre of corn (table 45, p. 45), and more than 4 times the farm value of an acre of cotton (table 137, p. 103).

(3) ANSWER TO QUESTION RE SUGAR-HOUSE CAPACITY

Unrestricted production means we could operate from the beginning of October through the middle of May, a total of 227 days; deducting recent percentage lost time all causes yields 218 net operating days. Clewiston can average better than 600 tons 96-degree sugar per full operating day and as Fellsmere is one-sixth the size of Clewiston we have a combined daily output of 700 tons. A harvest season of 218 net days at 700 tons per day gives an annual capacity of 152,600 tons, which we have rounded off to 152,000 tons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS].

FRANCIS BIDDLE

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I hesitate to enter into a controversy with one of my colleagues over a matter which seemingly and on the surface does not affect me, but I was chairman of the special committee appointed by the House of Representatives to investigate the Tennessee Valley Authority, and one of the duties of the committee was to employ an attorney. In the discharge of my duties, in connection with my colleagues, we employed the services of an attorney who is now the Solicitor General of the United States.

I well remember the discussion which took place when we offered Mr. Biddle the position of attorney for the Tennessee Valley Authority investigating committee. We realized that we were employing the services of a very busy man, of a man who had a number of excellent clients, of an attorney whose income was much larger than we could hope to offer. Our committee felt that they could offer Mr. Biddle $10,000 for the task which he was to perform, assuming that he might be able to complete the task in 6 months. After our investigation got under way, and as a result of regulations and legislation, we found that we could not pay Mr. Biddle the $10,000 we had planned to pay him; so he actually worked for 10 months instead of 6 months, and he drew $7,500 instead of $10,000.

The reason why I am saying a word in Mr. Biddle's behalf today is because his service was rendered to our committee, and I was a member of the committee, and a rather serious charge has been made on the floor of the Senate about his conduct in connection with the services he rendered to the committee of which I was a member. Because of the part I played in the conduct of the committee's investigation, and in the employment of Mr. Biddle as the committee's attorney, I thought I was duty bound to make inquiry as to the accuracy of these charges.

I received a reply on yesterday. I did not want to bring it to the attention of the Senate until I had opportunity to notify my distinguished colleague who had made the charges. I found that he was not in the city, and so I carried the letter around until today. I learned that my distinguished friend is out of town today. In view of the fact that I shall perhaps be out of the city on Monday, I felt that it was entirely proper for me to have the letter read on this particular occasion. I enter this controversy in a spirit of fairness and justice, together with a degree of loyalty to one who served very well the committee of which I was a member, and also because it seems to me that my integrity and the integrity of our committee, to a degree at least, are at stake.

Before I have the letter read, and in order that my associates of the Senate may know what the charges were, let me read from the RECORD of last Wednesday:

I here solemnly charge that the present Solicitor General not once but twice has abused his official position, first as counsel for the T. V. A. investigating committee—

That, of course, is the part of the charge which involves the committee of which I was a member—and, second, as Solicitor General, in attempts to injure and destroy a newspaper whose only afternoon rival was a paper in which Francis Biddle was financially interested. Had he succeeded he might have lined his pockets with the resulting dividends.

That is a serious charge and it must be proved to the hilt. I shall proceed to do so.

This is a statement made by my colleague from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES].

Then he goes on to say:

Francis Biddle, now New Deal Solicitor General, used his position as chief counsel of the T. V. A. congressional investigating committee to attempt to destroy a newspaper which was in competition with a second newspaper in which he was financially interested. Had he been successful his personal gain would have been substantial.

The charge goes on, and there are some rather petty references to Mr. Biddle's boyhood, his student years at college, his association in connection with the committee, and his present occupation as Solicitor General.

As I said in the beginning and as I now repeat, as one of the members of the committee who sought and secured the services of Mr. Biddle, I felt that I was duty bound to find out and to report to my colleagues of the Senate as to the accuracy of those charges. I know that the Senator from New Hampshire is enough of a sportsman to give to Mr. Biddle an opportunity to reply to the charges made by the Senator. That is in keeping with the American methods of doing business. I, therefore, send Mr. Biddle's letter to the desk and ask that it be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read the letter, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., October 3, 1940.

Hon. JAMES M. MEAD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIM: You'd think that after his comic misadventures with that famous T. V. A. "jackass" about 2 years ago, Senator BRIDGES would be extremely careful to get his facts straight before jousting again on the same field. You will remember that he got stirred up over T. V. A. spending $2,500 over a "jackass"—which afterward turned out to be a mechanical jack. But either the Senator is more reckless than I supposed or his skin is thicker than anyone had suspected.

He suggests I was substantially interested in the Chattanooga News, and, for financial gain, tried to kill off that newspaper's rival, the Free Press. As usual, the Senator is misinformed. As a member of the committee, you will remember that we went down to Chattanooga late in August 1938 to investigate, under specific directions in the joint committee resolution, attempts of utility companies to block public power. It was in the course of these hearings that we uncovered the subsidizing of the Free Press by the Tennessee Electric Power Co., a Commonwealth & Southern sidiary. The evidence at the hearings showed that a citizens and taxpayers' association was formed to fight public power in the Chattanooga election, but that out of a total $22,265.45 contributed by this organization for the purpose, a cool $20,000 came from the Commonwealth & Southern subsidiary.

The Tennessee Corrupt Practices Act makes it a crime for a corporation or its officers doing business in that State to spend money toward influencing a public election; but, of course, the Commonwealth & Southern subsidiary which contributed the $20,000 was a "foreign corporation" and was therefore able to avoid the letter of the law. The other day in Seattle I commented upon this and suggested that Mr. Willkie, who only recently had resigned as president of Commonwealth & Southern, and who even more recently made some remarks about obeying the spirit of the Hatch Act, explain if he could this plain violation of the spirit of the Tennessee Corrupt Practices Act.

And now, to put Senator BRIDGES straight on the facts: In April 1939 I subscribed to 5 shares of the preferred stock of the Chattanooga News for $500—a contribution to George Fort Milton's courageous fight to maintain an independent newspaper, which was openly advocating public power, against the power-dominated press and the public utilities. This is the only investment I ever made in the paper.

This, I assume, is what Senator BRIDGES had in mind when he mentioned my heavy financial interest in the paper. As usual, he seems to be pretty foggy about the whole thing.

As for the Senator's lyrical remarks about me personally, I can only express my admiration for so gifted a public servant, and suggest that perhaps this talent is being wasted on the current Republican campaign. Certainly it is not characteristic of most of his party's statesmen.

Won't you please give him my regards along with my most earnest suggestion that next time before he turns upon me or anyone else the full power of his poetic license he get the facts straight?

Sincerely yours,

FRANCIS BIDDLE,
Solicitor General.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, in my judgment the letter answers the charges specifically and definitely and completely, and I feel that as a member of the Tennessee Valley Authority Investigating Committee, I am not only wholly within my right, but I am obligated to my colleagues on that committee to seek out, as I have, this reply, and to give the publicity which the charges prior to the reply had received.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I think I should say a word while this matter is before the Senate.

I do not believe it was necessary for Mr. Biddle to reply to the charges made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. If Senators will read the speech of the Senator from New Hampshire, delivered here one evening when there was practically no one present, I think they will agree with me that the language used by the Senator from New Hampshire in reference to Mr. Biddle was unbecoming any Senator, and was not language which any Senator should have used against any high official of the Government unless he had some evidence to back up what he said.

Mr. Biddle's conduct as attorney for the committee, in my judgment, has been above approach. Everyone who knows Mr. Biddle knows that he is not a pettyfogger, not a narrow-minded partisan, and if the chairman of the joint investigating committee, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], were present, he would say to the Senate, I am sure, as he has often said to me since the investigation, that Francis Biddle's work for the committee was of the very highest quality, showing ability and fairness and courage, and that he thought the committee was extremely fortunate in selecting an attorney of the ability and courage of Mr. Biddle.

The Senator from New Hampshire in his language referring to Mr. Biddle was impolite, and he used language which I do not believe I would desire to repeat in reference to an honorable man on the floor of the Senate. I think it was uncalled for, and was not backed up by any evidence.

It is untrue that Mr. Biddle was dishonorable or disreputable in any way. The committee investigated the Chattanooga election, as they were specifically instructed to do by the concurrent resolution which brought them into existence, and under which they were then working. The work of Mr. Biddle will stand in the future, I think, as an example of fairness and high character.

I talked with the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], who is not present in the Senate at this time, and is not in the city, and I know he has commended Mr. Biddle's work in the very highest terms. I regret exceedingly that, without any evidence to back them, the charges would be made against Francis Biddle which were made by the Senator from New Hampshire.

I intended to refer to the matter in a speech which I expected to make yesterday, and thought of making today, in reply to the Senator from New Hampshire. There were other things in the speech just as bad as the charges against Mr. Biddle. The charges he made against the New Republic were uncalled for. I think they were untrue, although they were characterized by the Senator from New Hampshire in language which was vicious, and, I think, malicious, and I expect when I make my address, as I probably will next Monday, to read a telegram from the New Republic which will show absolutely that the charges in reference to that periodical were not only unfounded, but were absolutely untrue.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I merely wish to conclude by saying that the most important point to remember, so far as these charges are concerned, is the matter which comes to the mind of one who listened to the charge or read the charge that Francis Biddle, while serving the Tennessee Valley Authority investigating committee in the capacity of attorney, was financially concerned with the well-being and the success of a newspaper, and that he was using his office and that he was using agents of the Government to destroy that newspaper. The fact of the matter is that Francis Biddle, after the work of the investigating committee in the territory covered by the T. V. A. was over, after he had returned to Washington, and as late as April of last year, did what a great many patriotic and civic-minded people did, he purchased some securities, or made a contribution, in other words, so that the people of that community might have a journalistic vehicle in which to carry their side of the questions then at issue. It was only as a result of his deep and abiding sympathy for the masses of the people, after his work was completed, that out of the goodness of his heart he made an effort, as did many others, to see to it that the people had some agency there to speak for them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has known Mr. Biddle for some time?

Mr. MEAD. I have.

Mr. McKELLAR. He is from the Senator's State?

Mr. MEAD. No; he is from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did the Senator see much or little of him during the time he helped conduct the investigation for the committee referred to?

Mr. MEAD. I was with him constantly, insofar as the investigations of our committee were concerned.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did the Senator note anything about the action or conduct or words of Mr. Biddle which in any way reflected upon him?

Mr. MEAD. Oh, no. Quite the contrary; the conduct of Mr. Biddle won the applause not only of everyone who was on his side or our side or the committee's side of the question, but won the applause of those who were taking a position in opposition to the position of our committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was he at all times fair and just?

Mr. MEAD. He was at all times fair, and his conduct was salutary. It met the highest ethical standards. He made a tremendous sacrifice to be with us, and he served with characteristic vigor, to the edification of the committee, and to the great credit of himself as a man and as a lawyer.

NATIONAL-DEFENSE HOUSING

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10412) to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CONNALLY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. TRUMAN, and Mr. HALE conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF SUGAR ACT OF 1937

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9654) to extend, for an additional year, the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937 and the taxes with respect to sugar.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I had not intended to say anything about the bill, but I have been impelled by some of the remarks of my good friend the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] to make a suggestion or two.

We are confronted with opposing economic and political theories. The Senator from Florida has gone down both avenues. In this country, as the Senator has said—and I am in entire accord with his statement—there are certain essential things which our Nation must have available to it in its time of need. One of these essential things is sugar. As the Senator pointed out, if war comes, we need bullets first, wheat second, and then sugar.

I agree absolutely with the Senator that we should, so far as possible, stimulate the production of sugar within the continental boundaries of the United States, but the Senator then argues that we should repeal the Sugar Act of 1937, the result of which would be to undo the very thing he seeks to have done.

Florida in many ways is in an enviable position. We are told that Florida can produce sugar at 2 cents a pound. I trust that is true, and if it is true, Florida is making more profit per acre, twice over, than is made upon any other acreage in the United States, and should be very happy over its profits. Let us assume, however, that Florida has unused 30,000 acres which might be devoted to the raising of sugar. If those acres were used for that purpose, they might produce, I assume, a ton and one-half of sugar per acre, which would mean 45,000 tons extra, which added to the 60,000 tons now produced in Florida would mean something over 100,000 tons of sugar. If that could be done, it would be highly desirable, but certainly the Senate of the United States does not wish the production of an extra 45,000 tons of sugar to destroy the production of one and one-half million tons of sugar upon other acreage.

If the proposal which the Senator makes to strike down the Sugar Act of 1937 should prevail, beet sugar would cease to be produced in the United States, and instead of providing an adequate supply of domestic sugar, the United States would be limited to the sugar which can be produced in the enviable State of Florida. So from the standpoint of our wartime or our emergency necessities we would be far worse off.

I say that I am in entire accord with the Senator against the limitations which are placed upon the American farmer to produce for the American market, but the Sugar Act of 1937 was designed on the whole to stimulate production, to make it profitable. The profit to the sugar producer in the western States is today extremely small. I have the feeling that upon most acres producing sugar beets there is probably a genuine loss rather than a profit.

The Senator from Florida points out that by reason of the tariff and by reason of benefit payments, the American sugar consumer is paying perhaps $2 a year more for his sugar than he would be obliged to pay if we struck down all the bars, and the Senator says we could do much good with the $250,000,000, or $300,000,000, or $350,000,000 excess cost of sugar. As a matter of fact, under the tariff laws of this country, we have, I think, something like 2,500 items, every one of which adds to the cost paid by the American consumer. If we should repeal our tariff laws the cost of living would be greatly reduced; the only trouble is we would have nothing with which to pay even the reduced cost. We would simply put the American consumer in the position where he could not compete with the foreign cheap-labor production.

America has been placed upon a high standard of living. It has been our purpose to provide better living in this land than in other lands. But both purposes cannot be achieved at one and the same time. We cannot compete in the production of sugar with Cuba, the Philippine Islands, and the cheap-labor tropical islands, unless we have some form of legislative protection. If we should take the bars down, perhaps Florida could successfully compete, and I say that is fortunate, but there is no other section of the United States which could compete if the bars were taken down. Certainly there is not an acre that can produce beet sugar in competition with the cheap sugar of Cuba, the Philippines, and Puerto Rico.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. ADAMS. I shall if the Senator promises that the question will not be too hard to answer.

Mr. PEPPER. I cannot pose any question which would be too difficult for the able Senator from Colorado to answer.

I should like to ask the Senator if, in connection with his just claim for protection for the beet-growing States of the Nation because they are under some difficulties in the production of sugar at a low price, he would also claim that the quota system should be used as an artificial handicap to those sections of the country which nature has particularly fitted for the production of sugar?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that the State from which I come is the best fitted for the production of beet sugar of any State in the Union, which is demonstrated by the fact that it produces more beet sugar than any other State.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I shall yield to the Senator in a moment. We do not like the limitations that are put upon us. There are thousands of acres in our State upon which we could produce sugar beets. But in consideration of the limitation upon our production, the Government is giving to us a certain benefit payment, that is, we are being paid so much a ton in consideration of our self-restraint in the matter of production.

Prior to the passage of the 1937 Sugar Act, and its predecessor, the Costigan-Jones Act, there was no limitation, but we were confronted with the importation of tax-free sugars from the Philippines and other places that were literally destroying the beet-sugar industry. Colorado and the Western States were at the point of abandoning beet-sugar culture, because they could not meet the tropical cheap-labor production from the islands. So we were willing to submit to a limitation upon our unquestioned right to produce. We surrendered this right in consideration of payments made which would make possible the production of this product upon a moderately profitable basis.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. If the State of Colorado, with an estimated population in 1940 of 1,118,820, was dissatisfied with an actual production quota of 262,000 short tons in the year 1939, how does the Senator think the people of Florida feel, with a population of 1,800,000, having in the same year, 1939, a quota of only 70,000 short tons of sugar?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I do not think the consideration of an economic and political question such as is involved in sugar production, can be confined to State lines. The statement that Florida is not permitted to produce its own consumption, as made by the Senator just now, or as his colleague made it, seems very persuasive. But if we believe in limitations at all, when we take the United States as a whole, we must accept either one or the other theory—either wide open, unrestricted sugarcane and sugar-beet cultivation, or some restriction. If we are to impose restrictions we cannot absolutely tie them down as the Senator would have us do.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. Frankly I want to state that my position, when I address myself a little more to this question later, will not be that we should not have a quota system, or sugar regulatory legislation, but I propose as an alternative to the proposition the able Senator from Colorado has suggested of not having any quota at all, that we revise the quota system and its set-up, so that there will be certain basic principles which will be fair, which will cover the quota allocations, and which will give to every sugar-producing section in this country something like a fair share of the domestic market. On that theory I would not quarrel with the position of the Senator from Colorado that it is desirable to have sugar legislation, but I would respectfully suggest that the State of Colorado has not had its pro rata share of the allocable quota of such legislation.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not think the Senator and I differ in the matter of principle at all. We are confronted today with a very practical legislative problem. We would like to get the largest possible benefit-payment production, tariff-protected production, that we can get in the United States.

That is what we should like to get. At the same time we should like to protect the labor which is involved in refining sugar. So far as possible, we want American workmen, rather than unorganized cheap labor from the islands, to be employed in refining sugar.

Today we are confronted with a problem. Our present sugar legislation, which is unsatisfactory to the Senator from Florida and unsatisfactory to me, is better than no legislation; and if we should attempt to amend the bill today so that Florida and Colorado would receive extra quotas, we should jeopardize the possibility of any sugar legislation.

It is the old story that half of something is better than all of nothing. Our people are different from the sugar producers of Florida. We cannot produce in competition with the islands. The Senator's colleague says Florida can. We cannot. So it is absolutely essential to our sugar-beet producers that there be some form of legislative protection, in the form of either a tariff or benefit payments, or a combination, such as now exists.

We are dissatisfied with the administration of the Sugar Act. We cannot cure that situation today. We want a sugar act to go into effect so that we may come back at the next session of Congress, better the act, and improve the condition of the people of Florida and of Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, immediately after the enacting clause, it is proposed to insert the following:

That section 212 of the Sugar Act of 1937 (Public, No. 414, 75th Cong., ch. 898, 1st sess.), be, and the same is hereby, amended in the following respect: By striking out the period at the end of the section and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and following the semicolon the following words, to wit: "(5) any sugar or liquid sugar produced from sugar beets or sugarcane grown within the continental United States upon which no application is made for conditional payments under title 3 of the Sugar Act of 1937."

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, this amendment is confined to continental United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, immediately after the enacting clause, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the last sentence of subsection (a) of section 204 of the Sugar Act of 1937 is amended to read as follows: "If the Secretary finds that the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands will be unable to market the quota for such area for the calendar year then current, he shall increase the quota for the mainland cane area by an amount of sugar equal to the deficit so determined: Provided, however, That the quota for any domestic area, the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, or Cuba or other foreign countries, shall not be reduced by reason of any determination made pursuant to the provisions of this subsection."

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, this amendment would take effect in the event conditions should prevent the Philippine Islands from furnishing their portion of the sugar which has been allotted to them. I have tried to take care of that contingency. If that situation shall arise and shall not be taken care of, I shall bring up the matter again, because the condition is certainly facing us now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

The shares of the various areas in the total consumption in section 202 of the 1937 Sugar Act shall be so adjusted by the Secretary as to give the State of Florida an increased marketing quota of 50,000 tons.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, we have had a good many conferences from time to time and have had a considerable amount of discussion on the floor of the Senate as to what could be done to equalize the distribution of the allocable sugar quota among the States of the Union. As I intimated in what I said to the able Senator from Colorado, I do not propose to try to prevent the passage of legislation which might protect the growing and processing of sugar in the United States. But, as I indicated to the Senator from Colorado, I believe that anyone who examines the quota which has been allocated to Florida in the light of the ability of the State of Florida to produce sugar at an economical rate will come to the conclusion that Florida does not have a fair share of the domestic production.

We all know that the Jones-Costigan Act made certain provisions for the protection of producers of sugar in the United States. That act, becoming effective in 1934, was succeeded by the act of 1937. By the year 1937 the mainland cane area, in the very nature of things, was engaged in the production of a quantity of sugarcane which so appealed to the justice of the Congress that it voluntarily awarded 160,000 additional quota tons to that area from the offshore area and the domestic area of the United States.

The adjustment of the distribution of the quota available to the domestic area was attributable to recognition of the fact that Florida did not have a fair share of the quota. The beet area had not been able to produce its quota, and the offshore area was considered to be producing more than it might fairly be given the right to produce in view of the situation in the cane area. Louisiana had been engaged in the production of cane for more than a century. When the sugar quotas were first established it was under a physical impairment of its ability to produce on account of the presence of a disease. Everybody recognized that it was not fair to Louisiana to be held to a quota based upon what it was able to produce and was producing at a time when its industry was suffering from a disease. Therefore it was felt that consideration was due the State of Louisiana.

Everyone recognized also that the State of Florida was uniquely qualified for the production of sugarcane. Vast acres of rich muckland, level and accessible, were perhaps the ideal area of the country for the production of sugarcane at a low price. Enterprising producers had gone into that area and set up efficient machinery and an efficient system of production which made it possible for sugar to be produced in the Everglades of Florida more cheaply than in any other part of the United States, and at a rate even comparable to that of the offshore areas, which had a cheaper labor rate than the domestic area. So, out of a sense of fair play, it was recognized that that State was entitled to a larger quota than it had had, because it was a new State in the sugar business. So, as I say, 160,000 tons of sugar were taken from other areas, both offshore and domestic, and given to the mainland sugarcane area.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, section 202 (a) of the act provides:

(a) For domestic sugar-producing areas by prorating among such areas 55.59 percent of such amount of sugar (but not less than 3,715,000 short tons) on the following basis:

Sugar produced from the domestic sugar-producing areas must be apportioned as follows: To domestic beet-sugar producers, 41.72 percent; to mainland cane-sugar producers, 11.31 percent; to Hawaii, 25.25 percent; to Puerto Rico, 21.48 percent; and to the Virgin Islands .24 percent. In view of the fact that the percentages are fixed by the act itself, where does the Senator from Florida expect to obtain the 50,000 tons of sugar which he proposes to allocate to Florida?

Mr. PEPPER. The amendment clearly provides that it shall be the duty of the Secretary to discover from what other areas the additional 50,000 tons might best be obtained.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. I will answer in a moment. It would be up to the Secretary to determine the area or areas from which that amount of tonnage might be taken for the purpose of equalizing the deficiency which the State of Florida has in its quota.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I wish to say that I am in thorough sympathy with the Senator from Florida. I think that both his State and my State, as well as the States producing beet sugar, should have a larger marketing quota; but, as I have just pointed out, in view of the fact that of the entire amount of sugar consumed by continental United States a certain fixed percentage is distributed among the beet-growing interests, the domestic cane producers, and the island possessions, and the remaining percentage among the Commonwealth of the Philippines and Cuba, I am wondering if it would not be necessary, in order to conform to the pending amendment, to take the 50,000 tons from the 55.59 percent of our consumption requirements that I have heretofore referred to.

Mr. PEPPER. Legally, the amendment which the junior Senator from Florida has proposed, if adopted, as I construe its legal effect, would be to authorize the Secretary to diminish the percentage allocation to any of the areas mentioned in section 202 by such a number of tons as he thought that area's quantity might be diminished in order to meet the requirements of this amendment. By the way, I should have made it clear, but I did not think there was any doubt about it, that this amendment will operate only for 1 year, because it is appended to an amendment which itself will cease to be effective at the expiration of 1 year; so it is only a 1-year amendment.

If some area should have a deficiency in meeting its quota the Secretary would be authorized to allocate it, whether it were 10,000 tons or 5,000 tons or 3,000 tons, or 40,000 tons, to offset the deficiency to Florida for this one year. If he did not find any area that had any deficiency but the production of each area reached exactly its total quota, then, under the amendment, he would have to take away proportionately from such areas a total of 50,000 tons. But the quantity is so small that it could not possibly hurt anybody in any appreciable degree.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. I will yield in a moment. The advantage of that would be this: As we are going along now, even if the cane area gets an additional quota, deep as is the affection we have for our friends from Louisiana and our neighbors, we get but a relatively small part of that additional quota. I have fixed the figure at 50,000 tons because I thought that was the minimum; and a little later I will show why I think it is a minimum. If we could be pulled up just that much, I feel that in the future our relative position would be sufficiently equalized so that we would not have to talk so much about States as we would about areas.

I feel that such an adjustment must be made some time, that the justice of the Senate will some time give it to us, and I am hoping that we can start to restore to our State a relative ratio which I think is fair, along with the other States, so that we will not be so conspicuously the State which has not had a fair share of the allocable domestic quota.

Let me add that I believe that, as it will logically work out if this amendment were adopted, there would be, perhaps, a total of as much as 50,000 tons available from some area that had not produced up to its quota; so that no area would actually be cut in its intended production. I now yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. According to the argument of the Senator from Florida, if a certain area does not produce its quota, then, the Secretary shall use such deficit in order to make up the 50,000 tons?

Mr. PEPPER. It is not mandatory in the amendment itself, but I am confident the Secretary would exercise his authority so as to accomplish that end.

Mr. ELLENDER. Let us assume that all the areas would produce and would ship into this country the amount fixed by the Secretary; then, under those conditions, would not the Secretary be bound to give Florida the 50,000 tons?

Mr. PEPPER. As I said a moment ago, if in the theoretical view of each one of the areas producing exactly its quota as a minimum, then, in order to accomplish the purpose of this amendment, the Secretary would have to take the 50,000 tons from the whole number of areas, and the whole quota would be reduced proportionately with regard to each area.

Mr. ELLENDER. That area would include Louisiana, the beet-sugar producing States, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico.

Mr. PEPPER. Theoretically it would include all the areas that are engaged in the production of sugar, but out of the Secretary's——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I will yield in a moment. But out of the Secretary's vast knowledge on the subject, I am confident that none of that quota would be taken from the cane-growing State of Louisiana, although that would be legally possible under this amendment. I am confident, however, in view of what the Secretary has done in the past, in view of his knowledge of the subject, and in view of the fact that Louisiana is comparable to Florida in its entitlement to additional quota, that it would not actually work out that way. However, the only thing that I thought we could do fairly was to vest the discretion in the Secretary, with the consciousness and the confidence that the Secretary would use the authority so as not to do an injustice to anybody to try to equalize a rather bad local situation. I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, upon what fact does the Senator base his belief that there is a possibility that some of the outside points will not produce their quota?

Mr. PEPPER. The chief fact upon which I base it is that in times past there has been a freeze or a drought, or some other weather disturbance which has interfered with the natural processes of production, so as to cause one area or another to be short of its quota in its actual production.

Mr. ANDREWS. Such as dust storms.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes. For example, until 1937 or 1938 the entire beet area—and I think the Senator from Colorado will affirm my statement—was a little behind in its production.

Mr. ADAMS. We have a drought condition there from which we have not entirely recovered as yet.

Mr. PEPPER. While in Florida, reluctant as my colleague and I are to admit that the weather ever gets cold in our balmy and fair State, we actually had a cold spell in the year 1938 that was serious enough, if it had occurred in any other State, to have been a freeze.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. PEPPER. I will yield in a moment. Either one of those conditions may be repeated. Some of the offshore areas have been behind in the production of their quota on several different occasions; and I feel that there is a possibility that that condition will recur. I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I inquire at just what point in the thermometer does a freeze come in Florida? Is it different from other places?

Mr. PEPPER. The different chambers of commerce have different standards. When there is a freeze the weatherman is always sympathetic to us, so that seldom, if ever, as a historical fact is there an actual freeze in Florida, if I may reply technically to my able friend from Washington.

Mr. President, what are some of the facts that lead me to try to get a larger quota for the State of Florida?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I may say that the people of my State are, of course, extremely anxious to get a larger quota. We have in Montana a great deal of irrigated land, and practically the only profitable crop which, under ordinary circumstances, can be grown on that land is sugar beets, but we realize that in order to get this legislation through we cannot attempt at this particular time to get an amendment to the act providing for a larger quota for Montana.

As I understand—and I want to know if I am not correct—what it is proposed to do is to pass this bill at this time, and then come back at the next session of Congress with the idea of rewriting the whole sugar law.

It is extremely difficult for the people of Montana and the people of other western States to understand why the administration sets up quotas for Cuba and for other countries in order to protect them, when the people of the Western States themselves—our own people—are going hungry, and need to plant bigger crops in order to make a living. It is impossible to explain that course satisfactorily to the people of my State; and I am sure there is similar difficulty in Colorado and in Utah and in the other Western States. So we are just as anxious as is the Senator from Florida to have larger quotas for the territotry embraced in the United States itself.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I appreciate how the able Senator from Montana feels about the matter, and how the Senators from the other States feel about it; but I hope they will allow me to present these comparisons between other States engaged principally in beet-sugar production and the State of Florida.

First, under the Jones-Costigan Act the total benefit payments were as follows:

The mainland cane area, $11,967,000. Of that sum of money Louisiana got $10,573,000, and Florida $1,394,000. Domestic beet area, $31,650,000. Hawaii got $13,324,000; Puerto Rico, $14,573,000; or a total for all areas of $71,514,000.

Under the Sugar Act of 1937, through the 1939 crop, not including the 1940 crop, the benefit payments were as follows:

Mainland cane area, $17,215,000, of which Louisiana got $15,387,000 and Florida $1,828,000. Domestic beet area, $60,922,000. Hawaii got $21,743,000, and Puerto Rico $28,963,000.

Total to date under the Sugar Act of 1937, $128,843,000.

Mr. President, let me digress long enough to reiterate that out of total payments of $128,843,000 under the 1937 act, the State of Florida got $1,828,000.

Grand totals under both acts, mainland cane area, $29,182,000; Louisiana, $25,960,000; Florida, $3,222,000. Beet area, $92,572,000; Hawaii, $35,067,000; Puerto Rico, $43,536,000.

Grand total of benefit payments under both acts, $200,357,000.

Again let me particularize that out of total benefit payments of $200,357,000 since the Jones-Costigan Act became a law the State of Florida got $3,222,000.

Now let me make another comparison. This is by production instead of benefit payments.

The principal States of the Union engaged in the production of beet sugar are Ohio, Michigan, Nebraska, Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, and California. There are eight additional States which are generally grouped under one head.

Now let us make a comparison of the average number of short tons of refined sugar which have been produced in those States for the years 1928 to 1937, for the year 1938, for the year 1939, the population of each State, and the square miles of area in each State, and make the same comparisons including the State of Florida.

We find that the State of Ohio, engaged in beet production, average for 1928–37, 29,000 tons; 1938, 43,000 tons; 1939, 42,000 tons. Population, 6,889,623. Square miles, 40,740.

The State of Michigan: Average for 1928–37, 107,000 tons; 1938, 171,000 tons; 1939, 162,000 tons. Population, 5,245,012. Square miles of area, 57,480.

I will say that all this information is furnished by the Sugar Section of the Department of Agriculture except the square miles of area, and that is obtained from the World Almanac.

Nebraska: Average, 118,000 tons for the period 1928–37; 135,000 tons for 1938; 106,000 tons for 1939. Population, 1,313,468. These population estimates are from the Census Bureau and are the preliminary estimates of the 1940 census. Square miles, 76,808.

Montana: 1928–37 average, 89,000 tons; 1938, 142,000 tons; 1939, 140,000 tons. Population, 554,136. Area in square miles, 146,131.

Idaho: Average, 1928–37, 79,000 tons; 1938, 143,000 tons; 1939, 127,000 tons. Population, 523,440. Area in square miles, 83,354.

Wyoming: Average, 1928–37, 85,000 tons; 1938, 106,000 tons; 1939, 92,000 tons. Population, 246,763. Area in square miles, 97,548.

Colorado: 1928–37 average, 339,000 tons; 1938, 309,000 tons; 1939, 262,000 tons. Population, 1,118,820. Area in square miles, 103,658.

Utah: Average, 1928–37, 86,000 tons; 1938, 111,000 tons; 1939, 100,000 tons. Population, 548,393. Area in square miles, 82,184.

California: Average, 1928–37, 208,000 tons; 1938, 337,000 tons; 1939, 451,000 tons. I have not here the figures of the population, but I believe it is something over 6,000,000, according to the last census. I have the population according to the 1920 census. It was then 3,426,000. California's increase this time is 22 percent. In square miles, its area is 155,652.

The other eight States, considered as one unit: Average for the years 1928–37, 98,000 tons; 1938, 188,000 tons; 1939, 159,000 tons. I have not calculated the population and area of those States. If an average were struck, there would be some 20,000 tons per State for the eight States.

Louisiana for the year 1939 had 437,000 tons, and has a population of 2,360,661, and an area in square miles of 45,409.

Florida for the year 1934 had 28,000 tons; 1935, 42,000 tons; 1936, 51,000 tons; 1937, 57,000 tons; 1938, our peak year, 92,000 tons; 1939, 70,000 tons.

The population of Florida is 1,800,000, according to the preliminary estimate of the 1940 census, and its area is 54,861 miles.

Mr. President, it will be noticed from these comparisons, leaving out its peculiar fitness for the production of sugar, that neither on the basis of area nor population has the State of Florida received anything like the average the domestic producing States have received in the allocation of sugar quotas.

It is said that the reason why that is true is that Florida was somewhat late in coming into the business of sugar production. It was somewhat late, although the first successful sugar mill in the State on a large scale was functioning as early as 1929, and it has continued to grow in efficiency since that time and in quantity, as much, generally, as the law would allow.

Here is this vast acreage, adapted peculiarly—as no one will deny—I believe better than any other State in the Union, to the production of sugarcane, a crop which is not produced in sufficient quantity upon our domestic territory. Yet that State is permitted to grow a quantity far less than it should be permitted to grow, taking into consideration its area and population as compared with the other sugar-producing States of the Nation.

When is that wrong to be corrected? We raised the same point here in 1937, because the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] and I were both Members of the Senate at the time when the 1937 sugar law was passed. There was an additional quota allocated to the mainland area, but allocated in the proportion in which we and Louisiana, for example, had been producing sugar in the past.

I am not opposed to the principle of sugar legislation with a quota as a part of the system. Once we accept the principle of benefit payments, we have to have a quota system, or no government will pay benefit payments. So I realize that the first step is the benefit payment, and I am not opposed to that. I want to see the beet States add their productive power to the capacity of this Nation to produce sugar. I want to see the farmers—and most of them are small farmers, and I commend them most heartily—continue to grow sugar to meet the needs of this great and growing Nation. I want sugar to be one of the staple crops of our agriculture, and I want the farmers encouraged, instead of discouraged. But if we accept the premise of the benefit payment, and the corollary of the quota system, that in turn has made it necessary to adopt the quota system founded upon the historical base. The viciousness of the thing is not in the benefit payment principle and not in the quota system, but the overemphasis on the historic base, and that is the point about which we complain.

My position is today not one of complaining against the passage of the bill. I want to see it passed. I am not complaining against benefit payments. I want to see them continued, in order to benefit the whole economy of America. But the system as it is now fixed has simply frozen the productive power of the State of Florida into a cavity which is less than our deserts, and that is what I am complaining about.

If we came in and said, "We are not interested in the other States, we do not care whether they get any quota or not, we are thinking only of Florida," and anyone was able to point out that Florida had been already generously dealt with, that according to area and population and ability to produce sugar we had our fair share, I would not have the countenance to come here and ask the Senate to grant any such request as I am making; but I do not believe there is a Senator on this floor who would assert, if this matter were being handled de novo, and we were basing the allocation of quotas upon ability to produce, and area and population, and any other standard that is fair in the determination of such quotas, that Florida was not entitled to a larger quota than 70,000 tons for the year 1939, with its population of 1,800,000 and its land mileage area of over 55,000 miles.

I presume that the House would readily concur in such an amendment, because I have seen evidences myself that the House Members were friendly to Florida's situation. I believe, therefore, that fairness and justice, and the desire to adopt a fair principle would move the House to concur in such an amendment as this. If that is done, the representatives of Florida would not come here every time a sugar bill was mentioned, under the embarrassment of having to assert just Florida's claim. We want to come in with our sister State of Louisiana, and our neighboring States to the west, and say, "Let us get a larger quota for the domestic area of the United States, and let us consider this as a national problem, and not a local problem."

Someone says, "Let us wait until next year and we will do that." We did not do it in 1937 and it has not been done since, and 3 years have passed. And now they ask us to let another year pass, and say that they will take it up next year. We are in this situation: There are but two of us, the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] and I, and we have but two humble votes. There are some 12 or 15 States which are engaged in the production of beet sugar, and we have one fine neighbor State engaged in the production of cane sugar. So we have no power to coerce our colleagues into giving us fair consideration. We have nothing but the claim of justice and fairness upon which we may rely.

We do not come in making a demand upon anyone, and we are not going to try to delay the passage of the measure before us. We are not going to try to obstruct this proposal, or embarrass it by encumbering it. We are just asking that for the period of 1 year only; we may have something like parity.

If my amendment were adopted, we would have only about 120,000 tons, and that would be exceeded by Michigan, Montana, Wyoming, over doubled by Colorado, nearly equaled by Utah, four times exceeded by California, one and three-quarters times exceeded by the other very small States which are engaged in only a small way in the production of sugar.

Mr. President, that is how we stand. I believe that if we could once establish any such fair parity as we propose, it would thereafter be recognized that there was something like a fair ratio between what we were permitted to produce and what the other States were permitted to produce.

I have another amendment on a purely local matter, but without detaining the Senate further, and without adding anything more than these simple facts, addressed to the sense of fairness of the Senate, I sincerely hope that the amendment for this 1-year period will be agreed to.

NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER AND INVOLVEMENT OF THE UNITED STATES IN WAR

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate on another matter while it is considering the sugar bill, but a thing happened yesterday which seems to me of such importance, as setting a widespread precedent in connection with the educational system of the United States, that I do not think a day should be allowed to pass without its being called to the attention of the Senate and of the country.

Yesterday, according to the New York Herald Tribune of today, which I have before me, that famous reactionary, both in education and politics, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, called together what is described even in the New York Herald Tribune as an absolutely unprecedented general assembly of the university faculties, and there attempted, possibly with success, probably with success, but I hope without success, to coerce the members of the faculties of the great Columbia University into being willing to inculcate in the minds of the students his own ideas in favor of participation by the United States in the present war.

The Herald Tribune says:

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, speaking yesterday before an unprecedented general assembly of the university faculties said that there could be no doubt where the university stood in "the war between beasts and human beings," and warned that those whose convictions were in open conflict with the university's doctrines should, "in ordinary self-respect," resign their faculty positions.

Mr. President, I believe that never before in the long history of the struggle in the United States for academic freedom has so blatant, so outrageous, so arrogant a proposition ever been put to the faculty of any American college or university.

I ask that the whole article appearing in the Herald Tribune today to be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, as I wish to quote from it from time to time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. This is a naked proposition by the president of the university asserting in effect that, "In a war between foreign powers, on questions involving the foreign policy of the United States, it is I—I, Nicholas Murray Butler"—God save the mark!—"representing the donees, representing the contributors to the foundation of this university, who says to you that if you do not agree with me that the United States ought to get into this war, if you do not agree with me, representing the university, that the United States should become involved in this conflict, then I say to you that you ought to resign, because you will be fired anyway."

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. I want the Senator to know that he did not say that we would get into it. He said, "We are involved, and have been from the beginning." That is the direct quote from his remarks. In other words, he said, "We are in the war, and Columbia University has enlisted for the duration of the war."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thank the Senator for that suggestion.

The proposal now is, Mr. President, that if any of the instructors, or any of the associate professors, or any of the assistant professors, or any of the professors in this great institution, possibly the largest educational institution in the United States, are unwilling to follow Dr. Butler in his assumption that we are already in the war, and that we ought to get farther in, that in all decency and self-respect, as he says, they ought to resign.

Mr. President, that is an entirely new departure in American education. We have seen instances before of attempts being made to coerce the instructors or faculty members which have usually been denied by those who are accused of being guilty, but this is the first time in the history of American education, so far as I am advised, that the head of a great educational institution stands up and says, in effect, to his instructors, a multitude of instructors in that great institution, "Unless you try to create propaganda in the minds of your students for getting us into the war, or getting us further into the war, you will lose your jobs."

Mr. President, there has been a great struggle in this country over questions of much less importance than this by the Association for the Advancement of Academic Freedom, or whatever the correct name of the association is. They never had a question like this presented to them, and I suggest that this more nearly concerns the welfare of American education, more nearly concerns the violations of civil liberty which have been investigated by the committee under the very able chairmanship of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], than any question that has been presented in the lifetime of any of us. No such brazen, no such outrageous proposition has never been advanced to the faculty of any educational institution, great or small, as that which was advanced yesterday by this old, senile, reactionary president of Columbia University, who for many years disgraced that institution by mixing up the activities of the president of a great institution with the activities of a pot-house Republican politician.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. I want the Senator to know that it is not unexpected to have President Butler do that. I hold here in my hand the proceedings of the annual meeting of members of the Pilgrims at the Bankers Club of America, held in New York, at which the following occurred:

President BUTLER: Gentlemen, I offer the loyal toast of the Pilgrims to the President of the United States. * * * Toast to the President of the United States. * * *

President BUTLER: To his Majesty, the King. * * * Toast to the King of England. * * *

That was offered by President Butler at the Pilgrims' Club. I simply wish the Senator to know what he has just stated as having come from Dr. Butler is not unexpected, when he and other United States citizens, meeting in New York, sit down annually—at a banquet—and offer a toast to the King of England.

Mr. President, they have forgotten that we had a revolution in this country. I wanted the Senator to know that President Butler was an official of the Pilgrims' Club when the United States entered the war, and that club wired the Pilgrims' Club of London saying "At last the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes are nailed to the same staff" and then "The Pilgrims' dream of 15 years at length has come to pass." President Butler did not sign that message, but he was an official of the club which sent the cablegram at that time.

I simply wanted the Senator to know that President Butler is the arch British propagandist in the school system of America, and has been awarded a number of honorary degrees from English schools. I just happened to make note of a few of them, if the Senator does not mind my setting them forth, with some other data.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. HOLT. He has been trustee of the Carnegie Foundation since 1905; trustee of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, 1910, president since 1925; trustee Carnegie Corporation since 1925, chairman 1937; honorary doctor of literature, Oxford, 1905; honorary doctor of laws, Cambridge, St. Andrews, Manchester, and Glasgow. I also note these references: Vice president Pilgrims 1913–28, president since 1928; honorary member of the Worshipful Co. of Stationers and Newspaper Makers, London, 1934.

I do not know what that means—honorary member of the Worshipful Co. of Stationers and Newspaper Makers, London. I do not know what society that is. However, he is an honorary member of that society.

He is also a member of the British Institute of Philosophy, 1935.

I simply wanted the Senator to know something of Dr. Butler's background.

Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri does not object, I should like to place certain exhibits in the RECORD at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Missouri to show what this pro-British propagandist has done. I ask unanimous consent to place the matter to which I referred in the RECORD at the conclusion of the Senator's speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator, while we are speaking of propaganda, where his resolution to investigate propaganda is?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is still in statu quo. I do not know whether the Senator from West Virginia understands what statu quo means.

Mr. HOLT. No; I should like to have the Senator tell me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The old story was that during the Russo-Japanese War many years ago the newspapers came out with the statement that General Kuropatkin was in statu quo. A number of old fellows were sitting around in the village store reading the newspapers and they saw this reference to the general being in statu quo. They asked the village wise man—and there is always a wise man in every little town, as Senators know—"What does that mean?" Of course, he himself did not know, but he did not want the boys to know that he did not know, so he said, "Boys, statu quo means in a hell of a fix." [Laughter.]

So my resolution is in statu quo.

Mr. President, with reference to what the Senator from West Virginia said, let me say that I do not care three whoops from what English or Scottish universities Dr. Butler has received honorary degrees. I do not care whether he is an honorary member of the Stationers' and Newspaper Makers' Association, or whatever it is in England. Everyone has known Dr. Butler for many years as a professional propagandist in this country. Everyone has known him on the other side, as I said a moment ago, as a pot-house Republican politician, because he has combined both activities, and those activities are not new.

They are not of any importance to the American people. But I say, Mr. President, that when the president of possibly the largest American university gets up and makes a speech to the faculty assembled in unprecedented extraordinary session, and tells them to put into execution his ideas for American participation in a foreign war on peril of losing their jobs, and commands them to put out that sort of propaganda to the students entrusted in their care, it is a matter of very grave concern to the American people, because that means that we are polluting the American Nation at its very source. When university professors, university instructors, no matter what they may believe, are required to teach their students that we are already in a war, and that we should get further in, that means that the Americans Nation is being polluted at its very source. I say better men than Dr. Butler have been tried for treason and hung for treason.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, does not the Senator feel that this is just one of the early signs of war hysteria, which means the destruction of freedom and liberty in this country?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would not say it was a very early sign. I would say it was a comparatively late sign, if the Senator will permit me. Such a speech as Dr. Butler made yesterday, in absolute contravention of the Bill of Rights of the United States, is getting pretty far along toward destruction of freedom and liberty in this country.

Mr. HOLT. Will the Senator let me read what Sir Gilbert Parker said?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia should address the Chair.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield for me to read what Sir Gilbert Parker said?

Mr. CLARK or Missouri. I shall be very glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. HOLT. Sir Gilbert Parker said:

> We established association by personal correspondence with influential and eminent people of every profession in the United States, beginning with university and college presidents, professors, and scientific men and running through all ranges of population.

That was what Sir Gilbert Parker said was done preceding the World War; and that is what the William Allen White Committee is doing in the present instance, to involve us in this war.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I can say to the Senator from West Virginia that the disclosures after we had entered the war—what I might call the confessions—of Sir Gilbert Parker, who was the head of the propaganda agencies of the British Empire, as to what was done before we got into the last war, were the basis of the resolution to which the Senator referred a moment ago, for investigating all propaganda. As I say, the resolution was unanimously favorably reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and has now been stifled in the committee on Audit and Control for 5 or 6 months.

Mr. HOLT. Does the Senator's information check with mine, that Nicholas Murray Butler was the man who made an appointment for Sir George Paish to see the President of the United States?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have no information about that.

Mr. HOLT. I think the record will so show.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am not in the confidence of either Sir George or Dr. Butler.

Mr. President, I renew my request that the entire Herald Tribune article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DR. BUTLER TELLS COLUMBIA STAFF TO ACCEPT WAR POLICY OR RESIGN—PRESIDENT WARNS UNPRECEDENTED CONVOCATION: "LET THERE BE NO DOUBT WHERE UNIVERSITY STANDS IN WAR BETWEEN BEASTS AND HUMAN BEINGS"

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, speaking yesterday before an unprecedented general assembly of the university faculties, said that there could be no doubt where the university stood in "the war between beasts and human beings," and warned that those whose convictions were in open conflict with the university's doctrines should, "in ordinary self-respect," resign their faculty positions.

Declaring that academic freedom could apply only to "accomplished scholars," Dr. Butler said it was the duty of these scholars to guide public opinion "into paths of reason, of reflection, and of understanding."

He warned that the Nation was confronted by emotional outbursts "which are quite hysterical in character and which lead to acts of utmost cruelty and violence."

"It is the very essence of our national defense," he said, "that our people as a whole shall understand what it is which they are defending, and that they have this presented to them with calmness, good judgment, and full knowledge. In this regard the responsibility of each one of us is very great. We must not ourselves be misled by phrases and formulas, and we must do our best to keep others from being so misled."

The present war, he continued, was not merely a conflict of political and economic doctrines.

"Underneath and behind the war of lust for gain and for domination over one's fellow men there lies the war between beasts and human beings, brutal force and kindly helpfulness, between the spirit of gain at any cost and the spirit of service built upon common sense and moral principle. Let there be no doubt where Columbia University stands in this war."

Dr. Butler's discussion of academic freedom was outlined in the identical words of his 1935 report to the trustees. To this he added his warning to members of the faculty whose ideas might conflict with the university's:

"Those whose convictions are of such a character as to bring their conduct in open conflict with the university's freedom to go its way toward its lofty aim should, in ordinary self-respect, withdraw of their own accord from university membership in order that their conduct may be freed from the limitations which university membership naturally and necessarily puts upon it," he said.

"No reasonable person would insist upon remaining a member of a church, for instance, who spent his time in publicly denouncing its principles and doctrines."

The reaction to the speech was one of caution. Professors long identified as defenders of academic freedom said they wanted more time to study Dr. Butler's remarks.

Some were "disturbed" by Dr. Butler's assertion that academic freedom, which he defined as freedom of thought and inquiry and of teaching, could apply only to accomplished scholars. They wondered just what "accomplished scholar" meant.

QUESTION "UNIVERSITY FREEDOM"

Another point that jarred some of the faculty was Dr. Butler's insistence that "university freedom is as important as academic freedom." They insisted that the freedom of the individual student and teacher was a good deal more important than university prestige.

Particularly significant, in the opinion of faculty members, were these paragraphs which Dr. Butler drew from his 1935 report:

"Of course, academic freedom has never meant and could not possibly mean in any land the privilege—much less the right—to use prestige, the authority, and the influence of a university relationship to undermine or tear down the foundations of principle and of practice upon which alone that university itself can rest.

"Before and above academic freedom of any kind or sort comes this university freedom which is the right and obligation of the university itself to pursue its high ideals unhampered and unembarrassed by conduct on the part of any of its members which tends to damage its reputation, to lessen its influence or to lower its authority as a center of sound learning and of moral teaching."

DEANS PRAISE STAND

The deans praised Dr. Butler's speech.

Dr. Virginia C. Gildersleeve, dean of Barnard College, thought that the president's remarks were "safe, sound, true, and interesting."

Dr. Herbert E. Hawkes, dean of Columbia College, said "I think the talk was very appropriate in informing the faculty of Columbia's relation to national defense plans."

Dr. George B. Pegram, dean of the Graduate Faculties, said he "had no misgivings" over the application of Dr. Butler's views.

The assembly was the first of its kind ever held at Columbia at which attendance was restricted to members of the faculties.

Dr. Butler prefaced his views on academic freedom with a review of Columbia's cooperation in national defense activities. His purpose in calling the assembly was to suggest ways to further this cooperation, he said.

Recalling the creation last July of a university committee on national defense, Dr. Butler reported that this committee had already submitted its first report.

It was fortunate, he said, that the Government planned the least possible disturbance of the teaching and research work of the colleges and universities in pushing its defense program.

For those called into full military service the trustees and faculties are prepared to be generous and abundant in understanding in regard to their individual problems, Dr. Butler said.

It will be the policy of the university to grant leave of absence without salary to university officers who are called, he revealed.

Dr. Butler said he would recommend to the trustees that in order to protect the retiring allowances of officers called to service the university should meet the 5 percent contributions called for in their contracts with the Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association.

Students conscripted under the draft law will be granted a leave of absence and will incur no loss of tuition fees, Dr. Butler said.

He announced again an academic holiday on Wednesday, October 16, so that the 3,000 to 4,000 students of draft age would have an opportunity to register for selective service.

REVIEWS DEFENSE COURSES

Dr. Butler reviewed the special courses arranged at Columbia by the committee on national defense. These courses include a unit for the training of air pilots under the Civil Aeronautics Board and a course in military engineering.

In addition, Dr. Butler said he hoped that a Marine Corps Reserve training unit would soon be organized, involving one night a week during the academic year and training at Camp Columbia, Lake Bantam, Conn., for two periods of 6 weeks each after the sophomore and junior years. It was also likely that Naval Reserve courses would be created at Columbia by the Navy Department, he added.

Dr. Butler urged the faculty members to maintain their faith in a program of world reconstruction.

"It will not do," he said, "to sit helplessly by and content ourselves with saying that no reconstruction is possible, that civilization is on its way to death and that the world as we and our ancestors have known it can never be restored.

"The temptation to that point of view and that attitude is certainly very great, but it is a temptation to which we simply must not yield. It would not be characteristic of us as American scholars to lose our faith, our hope, and our confidence in the ability of mankind to bring ultimate victory to moral principle and the spirit of service over the mad and cruel lust for gain and for power; for that is the essential struggle underneath and behind the economic war."

NINETEEN HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN REPORT RECALLED

Dr. Butler's remarks on academic freedom recalled his annual report of December 1917 in which he warned against the menace of "academic Bolsheviki." At that time he said:

"When a teacher accepts an invitation to become a member of an academic society he thereupon loses some of the freedom that he formerly possessed. He remains, as before, subject to the restrictions and punishments of the law; but in addition he has voluntarily accepted the restrictions put upon him by the traditions, the organization, and the purposes of the institution with which he has been associated."

The campus had seethed with controversy 2 months earlier when two professors, James McKeen Cattel and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana were dismissed from the faculty because their attitude toward war plans was doing "grave injustice" to the institution.

A week after the dismissal action, Dr. Charles A. Beard, dean of America's historians, resigned from the Columbia faculty, calling the university trustees "reactionary and visionless in politics" and "narrow and medieval in religion." In his letter of resignation to Dr. Butler he wrote of professors who held their positions "literally by the day" and who were liable to dismissal "without a hearing, without the judgment of their colleagues who are their real peers."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri subsequently said: Mr. President, inasmuch as I included in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks a short time ago a newspaper account of President Butler's remarks, I now ask unanimous consent to include also at the same place in the RECORD the verbatim account of President Butler's remarks as printed in the New York Times of today, so that there may be no dispute as to what President Butler said.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of October 4, 1940]

DR. BUTLER'S ADDRESS TO THE COLUMBIA FACULTIES

Following is the text of the address by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, on Columbia University in This World Crisis, given yesterday before an assembly of the Columbia faculties:

"At the opening of this new academic year it is of high importance that we examine and reflect upon the problems which face Columbia University in view of the world crisis which is shaking our historic civilization to its foundations. Our university, founded nearly 200 years ago as a simple American college, has become with the passing years a powerful public servant in the field of liberty. It has responded to the opportunities and ideals of historic university development, and its place in the intellectual life of the world and in the shaping of public policies, national and international, is now well established.

"Because of the present World War, primarily economic but now violently and brutally military as well, this institution at work in the field of liberty is called upon to cooperate with government. The purpose of this cooperation is to strengthen the defenses of our American system of economic, social, and political liberty, and to defend them and the republican form of government built upon them from attack having its origin either without or within our own country.

"This cooperation with government is a service which Columbia has always been willing and quick to offer. The greatest names on its roll became famous through leadership and service in this field of action. Today, as Columbia approaches the end of its second century of corporate life, it will not be found wanting in this endeavor.

"WE ARE INVOLVED

"The appalling war which has now in its grasp practically the whole of Europe and a great part of Asia and of Africa as well has brought the United States of America face to face with an emergency such as it has never hitherto known. We hope and pray that it may not be our lot to have to take part in the military struggle which is going on, but we are involved and have been from the beginning, in the economic aspects of that struggle and in the war of ideas and ideals which it represents and reflects.

"At such a time it is a direct responsibility of the Federal Government, under the leadership of the President of the United States, to plan quickly and thoroughly for the defense of the Nation. Already the President and the Congress have taken far-reaching action on behalf of all of us in order to enable the American people and their Government to protect and to defend themselves.

"At such a time every citizen and every institution of public service built in the field of liberty have a direct responsibility to bear. My purpose in inviting this general assembly of all the faculties of the university was briefly to indicate to them in what way the activities of our university can be used in cooperation with the Government to strengthen the Nation's defense.

"One who reads carefully the history of Europe during the past half century will recognize that military preparedness, highly important though it be, is but one part of national defense. It is of still higher importance that the people as a whole and their representative institutions understand what it is which they are called upon to defend, and to plan with thoroughness and skill for their part in that defense.

"DEFENSE COMMITTEE NAMED

"In order that careful and systematic study might be made of this problem, I appointed on July 5 last a university committee on national defense composed of the following members of the university in addition to the president of the university; Carl W. Ackerman, dean of the faculty of journalism; Charles W. Ballard, dean of the College of Pharmacy; Joseph W. Barker, dean of the faculty of engineering; Frederick Coykendall, chairman of the trustees; Condict W. Cutler, Jr., trustee of the university; Leslie C. Dunn, professor of zoology; Frank D. Fackenthal, provost of the university; Virginia C. Gildersleeve, dean of Barnard College; Robert M. Haig, McVickar professor of political economy; Herbert E. Hawkes, dean of Columbia College; George B. Pegram, dean of the graduate faculties; Edmund A. Prentis, trustee of the university; Willard C. Rappleye, dean of the College of Physicians and Surgeons; Lindsay Rogers, Burgess professor of public law; William F. Russell, dean of Teachers College; J. Enrique Zanetti, director of chemical laboratories.

"This representative committee has been at work for 3 months upon its problem and has already submitted the first of a series of helpful reports.

"UNIVERSITY FUNCTION SET FORTH

"It is fortunate that we shall have no difficulty and no difference of opinion among us in recognizing the true function of a university in this cooperation with government. The aim of a university, of course, is the conservation and extension of knowledge. Therefore, that conservation and extension of knowledge must be undertaken with redoubled vigor in respect to the analysis and understanding of the economic, social, and political problems which are involved in this World War and which are creating for the United States the problem which confronts it.

"It is fortunate, also, that the Government of the United States in its plans for national defense appreciates this university function. The Government plans the least possible disturbance of the teaching and research work of colleges and universities, and the least possible disturbance of university scholars and students. Indeed, the President of the United States in a public statement has called upon students of all kinds to return to their studies. The acts recently passed by the Congress recognize this attitude and this policy in very considerable degree.

"Inasmuch as we are confronted in this country and in every other country by emotional outbursts which are quite hysterical in their character and which lead to acts of the utmost cruelty and violence, we must make sure that the scholar uses his opportunity, which is as unique as it is tremendous, to guide public opinion into paths of reason, of reflection, and of understanding. It is of the very essence of our national defense that our people as a whole shall understand what it is that they are defending, and that they have this presented to them with calmness, good judgment, and full knowledge.

"In this regard the responsibility of each one of us is very great. We must not ourselves be misled by phrases or by formulas, and we must do our best to keep others from being so misled.

"ACADEMIC FREEDOM DEFINED

"We shall no doubt hear much throughout the country in the immediate future in respect to academic freedom. That subject is one which has been discussed many times in my annual reports as president of the university, and I need not repeat here what I have recorded so emphatically in these reports, particularly in those for the years 1918 and 1935. The policy of Columbia University in this respect has long been well and thoroughly established.

"As I pointed out in my report for 1935, for those who are in statu pupillari the phrase 'academic freedom' has no meaning whatsoever. That phrase relates solely to freedom of thought and inquiry and to freedom of teaching on the part of accomplished scholars.

"We all know the history of academic freedom from the time of its first establishment some two centuries ago at Halle and Goettingen. The purpose of academic freedom is to make sure that scholarship and scientific inquiry may advance without being hampered by particular and specific religious or political tenets. Of course, academic freedom has never meant and could not possibly mean in any land the privilege—much less the right—to use the prestige, the authority, and the influence of a university relationship to undermine or to tear down the foundations of principle and of practice upon which alone that university itself can rest.

"University freedom, as I have often pointed out, is as important as academic freedom. Indeed, before and above academic freedom of any kind or sort comes this university freedom which is the right and obligation of the university itself to pursue its high ideals unhampered and unembarrassed by conduct on the part of any of its members which tends to damage its reputation, to lessen its influence, or to lower its authority as a center of sound learning and of moral teaching.

"Those whose convictions are of such a character as to bring their conduct in open conflict with the university's freedom to go its way toward its lofty aim should, in ordinary self-respect, withdraw of their own accord from university membership in order that their conduct may be freed from the limitations which university membership naturally and necessarily puts upon it. No reasonable person would insist upon remaining a member of a church, for instance, who spent his time in publicly denying and denouncing its principles and doctrines.

"PREPARATIONS FOR DRAFT

"It may be taken for granted that the trustees and the faculties are prepared to be generous and abundant in understanding in regard to the problems of individual members of the staff or of the student body who are called into full military service.

"It will be the policy of the university to grant leave of absence without salary to university officers who are called, and I shall recommend to the trustees that in order to protect the ultimate retiring allowances of such officers the university itself should assume in the case of those who have already undertaken teachers insurance and annuity association contracts, to meet both of the 5 percent contributions called for by those contracts during the period of military service.

"Students called to the colors will likewise be given leave of absence and no student in good standing will incur loss of tuition fees through entrance into full-time military service during the academic year. The proper officers of the university will make an equitable arrangement of credit to such students.

"Wednesday, October 16, will be an academic holiday in order that both officers and students affected by the provisions of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 may have ample opportunity to register. Their number is estimated at between 3,000 and 4,000.

"MILITARY COURSES ORGANIZED

"Already the university committee on national defense has organized activities of military usefulness for the voluntary participation of students and has still others in prospect for the academic year 1941–42. That committee will welcome suggestions from any member of the university, whether teacher or student, in relation to matters which fall under its jurisdiction. The special courses and programs which have already been arranged include:

"1. A unit for the training of air pilots under the Civil Aeronautics Administration.

"2. An orientation course under the direction of the department of civil engineering, making use of the facilities both at Morningside Heights and at Camp Columbia. This course in military engineering will be given academic credit in Columbia College and in the school of engineering.

"3. In addition, it is hoped that there will shortly be organized a Marine Corps Reserve Training unit which, if established, will lead to a commission as second lieutenant in the Marine Corps Reserves and will involve 1 night a week during the academic year, and training at Camp Columbia for two periods of 6 weeks each, following the sophomore and junior years.

"Attention of students is also to be called to the opportunity quite likely to be offered in the immediate future by the Navy Department for training through courses of Naval Reserve Midshipmen leading to commission as ensign in the volunteer Naval Reserve.

"Undoubtedly still other opportunities will be arranged in the not distant future.

"RESUMPTION OF PEACE EFFORTS

"It is of the highest importance that we all bear in mind the need which will be most pressing when armed hostilities come to an end, to undertake once more the task of laying the foundation for a system of international organization and cooperation for the protection of the world's prosperity and the world's peace. We must not be disheartened because of the failure of the attempts toward this high end which had already been made. We must resume those attempts with undiminished vigor and armed with the new knowledge which the experience of the last quarter century has brought us.

"Fortunately, we have a statement of ideals and of the program by which those ideals may be best achieved in the noteworthy plan agreed upon by the members of the conference held at Chatham House, London, in March 1935. At that conference 62 of the most distinguished statesmen and men of affairs in the world, coming from 10 countries, including Germany and Italy, agreed unanimously upon a series of recommendations which were subsequently endorsed by the unanimous vote of the International Chamber of Commerce.

"These recommendations constitute a convincing program for world reconstruction. It is upon this world reconstruction that our eyes must be fixed. It will not do to sit helplessly by and content ourselves with saying that no reconstruction is possible, that civilization is on its way to death and that the world as we and our ancestors have known it can never be restored. The temptation to that point of view and that attitude is certainly very great, but it is a temptation to which we simply must not yield.

"It would not be characteristic of us as American scholars to lose our faith, our hope, and our confidence in the ability of mankind to bring ultimate victory to moral principle and the spirit of service over the mad and cruel lust for gain and for power; for that is the essential struggle underneath and behind the economic and the military war.

"Behind the war of conflicting political doctrines, underneath and behind the war of lust for gain and for domination over one's fellowmen, there lies the war between beasts and human beings, between brutal force and kindly helpfulness, between the spirit of gain at any cost and the spirit of service built upon common sense and moral principle. Let there be no doubt where Columbia University stands in that war.

"I thank you for your presence and your kindly attention."

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri does not object, I should like to place certain exhibits in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent to place the matter to which I referred in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DR. NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler's speech, in which he tells the professors of Columbia University to get behind his policy or resign, is in sharp contrast with a speech he made in January 1933. We must realize that the 1933 speech was delivered long before the war hysteria had developed and long before the propaganda to get in war had become so intense. Dr. Butler's statement, as quoted in the New York Times, follows:

"A DEFINITION OF LIBERTY

"Liberty is the assurance that every man may do what he believes is his duty in spite of majorities or customs and opinions. Liberty involves the right to be wrong. Liberty is attested always and everywhere by the treatment of minorities. The reason that minorities are such a problem in half a dozen lands is that it is liberty struggling to find expression against the dominant forces of compulsion.

"If we are to protect liberty, if we are to give a satisfactory accounting of our stewardship of liberty, we must see that we so use it as to answer its critics and its enemies."

Compare that with the 1940 edict, which said:

"Those members of the faculty whose convictions were in open conflict with the university's doctrine (determined by Dr. Butler) should 'in ordinary self-respect' resign their faculty positions."

AND SO TO WAR

Dr. Hubert Herring, in his excellent book, And So to War, has a special section dealing with Nicholas Murray Butler's activities in the promotion of English interest in this country. Dr. Herring comments, as follows:

"Mr. Butler, in his personal activities and in the spending of Andrew Carnegie's millions, lends himself to the cause of Anglo-American solidarity. In fact, no task is more sympathetic to him than moving swiftly across the North Atlantic, to breakfast with the Prime Minister, lunch with the archbishop, tea with the King, and dine with the Cabinet. He accepts the honors which universities at home and abroad thrust upon him (the list now numbers more than 30 assorted doctorates) with the humility becoming a man who is one of the living symbols of the unity of the English-speaking peoples. And if he confuses the issues of peace with the necessity for preserving the British Empire, it is a confusion which is part and parcel of his own character."

In a report of the investigation of pro-British history textbooks in use in the public schools of New York City, we find this statement:

"The present reception to President Butler, of Columbia University, throughout England, where he is being feasted, toasted, and exalted for his pro-British propaganda is a striking confirmation."

Speaking before the Pilgrims of the United States in 1936, the Times quotes Dr. Butler as follows:

"We are met in the shadow of a great sorrow. Tens of millions living on every continent and under every clime who owe allegiance to the British Commonwealth are stricken with sadness and a sense of loss at the death of their sovereign."

He also refers to the monarch as "the fortunate symbol." He also says of the King and Kipling, "They represent that great and splendid tradition which is ours."

Throughout his writings and speeches, one finds his worship of England, its systems, and its rulers.

REPETITION OF 1917

In 1917, Nicholas Murray Butler issued the edict of support for war or get out of the faculty. He was also an ardent advocate of the work of the National Security League, the exposed agency against which a committee of the House of Representatives recommended criminal action for their activities in 1916, 1917, and 1918. His definition of liberty then was as it is in 1940—agree with me and speak; disagree and lose your job.

CARNEGIE FOUNDATION

In my remarks I referred to Dr. Butler's position with the Carnegie Foundation. Horace Coon, in his book Money to Burn, discusses the foundation in these words:

"AN ENDOWMENT FOR WAR

"Of course, Dr. Butler was enthusiastic about President Roosevelt's Chicago speech calling for a 'quarantine' on aggressor nations. 'Isolation,' declared the head of the endowment, 'is a folly only exceeded by its immorality.' He seems determined that the United States shall go to the aid of France and Britain should either need our help. Through the International Relations Clubs this sort of propaganda is encouraged. The endowment tells Americans about international problems and urges us to do something about them. It appeals to the idealism and high-mindedness of youth and advocates a foreign policy which would mean that the American Navy would be used as an international police force. It encourages British and French propaganda. The Carnegie endowment might be considered an expensive luxury which we, as a rich nation, can afford, since it supports a number of people doing work of possible academic value, but it becomes a menace to our peace and to the peace of the world when it agitates for international agreements demanding that we go to war for the sake of the peace of the world. If the nations of Europe should start a holy war against fascism or communism, it is easy to imagine the Carnegie endowment crying for another crusade to make the world safe for democracy. Just as the endowment helped in building sentiment favorable to France and England from 1914 to 1917, so it is building up the same sentiment today. Of course, the endowment believes that international questions should be solved by judicial discussion. But if a nation refuses that means, then, according to Dr. Butler, we are immoral if we remain neutral.

"No one can read the endowment reports or yearbooks without a disheartening sense of complete futility and utter ineffectuality. It has done nothing toward taking the profits out of war; it has never attacked the bases of economic imperialism; it has made no attempt to show the populations of warlike countries today how their leaders are driving them into war. It might investigate the world-wide struggle for oil and its connection with foreign policies. It might look into the influence of international bankers on diplomacy. It might investigate the international ramifications of the steel industry, the scrap-iron industry, the shipping industry, and the part these play in making inevitable another war. It might inquire into the role of newspapers and newspaper proprietors, or into the active foreign propaganda in this country. It has done none of these things, for it believes in war under certain circumstances, under the very circumstances in which it is most likely to come. It diverts the energies of those anxious for peace into futile and ineffective channels; it encourages earnest people to imagine that by joining clubs and reading pamphlets they are preventing the next war. It dares make no effort to combat the psychological build-up created by statesmen and journalists. Indeed, it actively contributes to it. The most richly endowed institution dedicated to the promotion of peace is thus turned into an aggressive agent for the promotion of war."

Mr. Coon also discusses the activities of Dr. Butler and the foundation preceding and during the World War of 1914–18:

"Dr. Butler was president of a university several of whose trustees were munitions makers. It is not to be wondered, therefore, that the sentiments of these men, at first perhaps confused, soon clarified into a conviction that peace could be achieved only by a victory of the Allies.

"So, as the war fever mounted in this country, the endowment strove to be on the side of prevailing public opinion. Within a few years of its establishment the association for international peace met the first crisis in its career by crying for a relentless prosecution of the war as loudly as any jingoist. No sooner had the United States entered the conflict than the trustees resolved, April 18, 1917, that 'the most effective means of promoting durable international peace is to prosecute the war against the Imperial German Government to the final victory of democracy.' Leading the stampede, noisiest in his demand, most arbitrary in his insistence on the regimentation of minds in his own university, was Nicholas Murray Butler, director of the department of intercourse and education, and later chosen president of the endowment. The income from $10,000,000, which to some people might seem to encourage independence of opinion, had the very opposite effect. The pacifists in charge of the association could not resist the frenzy of the mass mind. Indeed, they contributed to it. Apparently they did not seriously believe in their own propaganda. Whether they realized it or not they had been paving the way to war. Associated, as they were, with big business identified with allied success, their investments made them less rather than more independent than those less richly endowed. No more than the average man in the street, who was soon to be drafted, could they resist the pressure of the very propaganda they professed to oppose.

"The enthusiasm of the trustees for war was so great, in fact, that they repeated their resolution at their meeting of November 1, 1917. The division of international law, which has been collecting data on all known examples of international arbitration under the supervision of Dr. John Bassett Moore, was turned over to the State Department and its staff, paid by the endowment, prepared large number of volumes to be shipped to France for the enlightenment of the peace conference. Dr. James Brown Scott accompanied this material as official technical advisor, but like the other experts, he was ignored. Meanwhile, Dr. Butler was beating the drums and shouting for universal military service."

The book also states:

"Unwilling to expose the profits of the munitions makers, those in charge of the endowment imagine that what they are doing has some relevance to the modern world. Its activities and methods have been so innocuous that radicals have raised the question of its sincerity."

BUTLER AND CLARK EICHELBERGER

The book then discusses Dr. Butler and Clark Eichelberger, the director of the William Allen White committee. It will be noted that Eichelberger and Butler were prime movers in the White "war" committee. The book reads as follows:

"More closely associated with the endowment is the very active League of Nations Association directed by Clark M. Eichelberger, one of the endowment's busiest lecturers in the field. It stands frankly for 'a universal League of Nations functioning effectively to promote international cooperation and to achieve international peace and security.' Through its offices in Geneva, Washington, and New York it tries to influence the foreign policy of the United States and, by means of publications, lectures, and radio broadcasts, to arouse the American people to demand a foreign policy which will promote 'the development of the world community centered in Geneva.' The endowment contributes substantial amounts annually to this organization. Dr. Butler said of Mr. Eichelberger in his 1936 report: 'He has been the outstanding speaker upon whom the field workers counted for assistance in addressing a great variety of audiences. The director is happy to record his appreciation of this able cooperation in the work of the endowment.'"

A STATEMENT OF CARNEGIE

A statement of Andrew Carnegie is quite interesting when it is considered with the above notations. It is:

"Time may dispel many pleasing illusions and destroy many noble dreams, but it shall never shake my belief that the wound caused by the wholly unlooked for and undesired separation of the mother from her child is not to bleed forever. Let men say what they will, therefore I say that as surely as the sun in the heavens once shone upon Britain and America united, so surely is it one morning to rise, shine upon, and greet the reunited state—the British-American union."

CARLETON BEALS' COMMENT

Carleton Beals, in his book Glass Houses, also has some interesting information on the endowment. In his book we find these words:

"It is a very equivocal organization, careful never to air any of the root causes of war in any way to endanger vested interests or profit making, and is always pro-British. Every so often it sends a good-will representative through Latin America. It also gives assistance to the Pan American Society, for years little more than a closed corporation of powerful American interests having investments in Latin America. As might be expected, the good-will envoys selected have been utterly incapable of promoting good will, have actually been persons who have definitely promoted American aggression toward Latin America. * * * In 1938 it sent David P. Barrows, of the political-science department of the University of California, my own alma mater. Barrows has always been a big-stick imperialist. It just so happened I was in Central America when Barrows went through there. As I was just one jump ahead of Barrows, I gave the reporters his complete record. In this I was also helped by a clipping my mother had sent me by chance, in which Barrows made the statement that the United States was privileged to intervene militarily anywhere, any time, in Latin America. The reporters all quoted this gleefully when Barrows went through. * * * Time and again he had come out in support of the grossest aggressive measures toward Latin America. Such was the first Carnegie Peace Foundation good-will emissary. * * * More recently the foundation has chosen Dana Munro * * * a consistent apologist * * * for the old-style armed intervention policy, for everything of the worst imperialistic odor in our relations with that part of the world."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5053) for the relief of Verdie Barker and Fred Walter.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9972) authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. GAVAGAN, Mr. PARSONS, Mr. CARTER, and Mr. DONDERO were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10539) making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, and that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 11, 23, 24, 34, 37, 43, 48, and 59 to the bill, and concurred therein.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9980) to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 162. An act to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes;

S. 3778. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide better facilities for the enforcement of the customs and immigration laws," approved June 26, 1930;

S. 4316. An act to repeal sections 4588 and 4591 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

S. 4341. An act to expedite national defense by suspending, during the national emergency, provisions of law that prohibit more than 8 hours' labor in any one day of persons engaged upon work covered by contracts of the United States Maritime Commission, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 295. Joint resolution authorizing the participation of the United States in the celebration of a Pan American Aviation Day, to be observed on December 17, of each year, the anniversary of the first successful flight of a heavier-than-air machine.

RIVER AND HARBOR DEFENSE IMPROVEMENTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9972) authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. BAILEY, Mr. SHEPPARD, and Mr. JOHNSON of California conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF SUGAR ACT OF 1937

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9654) to extend, for an additional year, the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937 and the taxes with respect to sugar.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, what is the pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. HARRISON. If there be no further speeches, may we have a vote on the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to detain the Senate but for a few minutes. The so-called sugar bill has been the subject of serious consideration by persons in all parts of the United States, who are engaged in the production of sugar. It has received serious attention by the sugar-beet growers as well as by those who grow cane in Florida and Louisiana. For a number of months in both branches of Congress the so-called sugar question has been under consideration. Many suggestions have been made as to the form of the measure which should be enacted into law, and many objections have been urged to a continuation of the present law. However, as the time approached under which the present so-called Sugar Act would expire, there has been a growing feeling that perhaps the wisest course to pursue was to continue the present act. Though various suggestions have been made to amend the act, they have, upon analysis, been rejected. By that I do not mean to say that all Representatives and Senators have been satisfied with the present act, or have been persuaded that efforts should not be made to modify and materially change the existing law. However, as indicated, the conclusion was finally reached by Members of the House to continue the present act, and the Senate, after hearing a number of witnesses, interested in the production of sugar, concluded that the action of the House should be approved.

Undoubtedly the fact that Congress will soon adjourn and that the present act will expire by limitation within a few weeks, has influenced the course pursued by the House and by the Finance Committee of the Senate.

May I say that I am not entirely satisfied with the existing law. I have upon many occasions insisted that there should be a larger production of sugar in continental United States; that the beet-sugar growers should have a larger quota, and that the States of Florida and Louisiana should have a greater quota. Sugar is an important agricultural product; it is an essential food product and in my opinion the best interests of the American people require a greater production in continental United States and its Territorial possessions, of this important food product.

Accordingly, I have as indicated frequently urged that there should be an increase in the production of sugar in continental United States and in Hawaii and Puerto Rico. We must not forget that Hawaii and Puerto Rico are a part of the United States; they are not stepchildren, and Congress must take cognizance of their situation and their relation to continental United States and to our industrial and economic life.

As Senators know, Hawaii but a few years ago was an independent nation. It had its own government and its own economic and industrial policies. It voluntarily became a part of the United States. I had the honor to introduce in 1897 the first resolution for the annexation of Hawaii, and since it has become a part of the United States it has, in every way, discharged every responsibility resting upon it and upon its citizens. The residents of Hawaii have made important contributions to the growth and development of our country and they have, as indicated, loyally and patriotically, met every requirement. They are entitled to all the rights and privileges of American citizens, and in national legislation there should be no discrimination against the Territory of Hawaii. As a matter of fact I have stated upon several occasions that the Territory was entitled to statehood.

It is obvious that Hawaii is a most important part of this Republic. It is an outpost in the Pacific—a faithful and important guardian of the mainland.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does the Senator know that Hawaii, with a population of only 368,336, has an allotment under the bill of 943,967 tons, whereas the continental producers, representing a population of 20,072,653, have an allotment of only 1,982,000 tons?

Mr. KING. I am familiar with the figures to which the Senator refers, and if time permitted and the occasion warranted, would submit figures showing the important financial contributions which have been made by Hawaii and her residents to our country. Only a short time ago, as the Senator may recall, a special joint committee was appointed to study the situation in Hawaii and to report as to the future position of the Territory. That report indicates that the resources of the Territory and the progress which it has made culturally, educationally, financially, and otherwise, give it high rank among the political units of the Republic; and as many believe, and I am among that number, entitle the Territory in the immediate future to be admitted into the Union as a sovereign State.

As I stated, Hawaii merged her identity with this Republic; she sacrificed her independence to become a part of the United States. We must, therefore, in enacting legislation which affects the industries of Hawaii, consider that the Territory is a part of this Republic, and that residents of the Territory are American citizens entitled to all the rights of other American citizens.

I was about to invite attention to the fact that in my opinion there was a provision in the bill which discriminates against the Territory. The sugar bill contains a discriminatory provision, not only against Hawaii but also against Puerto Rico. The discrimination to which I am now referring is found in the provisions of the bill which deny to Puerto Rico and to Hawaii the right to refine sugar produced in their respective territories. I have never been able to perceive the reason why the sugar producers of these territories should not be permitted to refine the raw sugar produced in their respective areas. The reason for the discrimination grows out of the fact that there is a powerful sugar organization or trust in continental United States, which is opposed and still opposes the producers of sugar in the territories referred to, refining their own sugar. The organization referred to has insisted that the raw sugar produced in Hawaii be transported to the mainland, there to be refined; and that the raw sugar produced in Puerto Rico be shipped to the Atlantic seaboard, there to be refined by the large sugar-refining units.

I believe this to be unfair; the people of Puerto Rico are encountering many economic and industrial difficulties; there are hundreds of thousands of people without employment, and the National Government is required to make important contributions to aid the unemployment situation. Several thousand persons could find employment in Puerto Rico if the producers of sugar were permitted to have their product refined in Puerto Rico. The people of Puerto Rico are under the flag; they are entitled to the rights of American citizens, and it is, in my opinion, a grave injustice to deny them the right to refine the sugar produced in their own home territory.

Our country in its dealings with its island possessions must be just and fair. It must not discriminate against these Territories or those residing therein. The people of Puerto Rico have not been entirely satisfied with the treatment accorded them by the parent government. They expect, and have a right to expect, just treatment and a due regard for the Territory and for its inhabitants.

As I have indicated, there is a large population in Puerto Rico, perhaps 1,800,000. Their resources are limited and the production of sugar is a most important industry in the island. It has been claimed that the needlework industry, which furnished employment to many hundreds of persons and a revenue of approximately $22,000,000 annually to the people of the island, has been crippled and materially injured by congressional legislation. I make no comment upon that legislation at the present time. I am alluding to it only for the purpose of indicating that the economic condition of Puerto Rico is not satisfactory; that there are obstacles to the economic and industrial growth of the island. Certainly Congress should, in all legislation dealing with Puerto Rico and its people, pursue a course that will be fair and just and command the confidence and indeed the affection of the people of Puerto Rico for the mainland. We must not be indifferent to Puerto Rico or Hawaii. There must be no discriminatory legislation; no measures enacted and no policies pursued which do not square with the principles of justice and equity and, I was about to add, righteousness.

Mr. President, I had hoped that the bill under consideration would carry a provision which would permit the refining of sugar in both Hawaii and Puerto Rico. When it was apparent that such an amendment to the bill would not prevail I urged that the report of the Committee on Finance would contain a statement substantially as follows:

> In recommending the passage of the bill without amendment, the committee does not wish to be understood as endorsing for permanent legislation the principle underlying sections 4 and 5. On the contrary, we regret that it has been found necessary to reimpose, even for a limited time, the discrimination against the refining in Hawaii and Puerto Rico of sugar for the continental American market, which discrimination, under the terms of the Sugar Act, had expired at the end of February of this year. Since it is clearly in the general public interest to provide as soon as possible for the extension of the sugar law for another year, we feel that it is necessary to avoid controversy over particular provisions of the bill which might prevent its enactment at this session.

I regret that my suggestion was not approved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of subsection (c) of section 302 it is proposed to insert the following:

> The proportionate share with respect to any farm or farms owned, operated, or controlled, directly or indirectly, by any individual partnership, association, or corporation in any one State of the mainland sugarcane area shall not be in excess of 50 percent of the total proportionate shares for that State, except and to the extent that the Secretary finds that there is no other person in that State who is qualified to receive the proportionate share with respect to any farm, or any part thereof, which may result from the foregoing restriction. In the distribution of any acreage which may be allocable on account of the above restriction, the Secretary shall give preference to the new producer.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senate first to the very clear language of this amendment, limiting its application to "a State in the mainland sugarcane area," so that in practical operation it could not affect any State outside the cane area. Only two States, Louisiana and Florida, are in the cane area, and the Senators from Louisiana will know from the facts whether or not any State other than Florida will be affected.

Senators will recall that subparagraph (b) of section 302 of the 1937 Sugar Act reads as follows:

> In determining the proportionate shares with respect to a farm, the Secretary may take into consideration the past production on the farm of sugar beets and sugarcane marketed (or processed) for the extraction of sugar or liquid sugar and the ability to produce such sugar beets or sugarcane, and the Secretary shall, insofar as practicable, protect the interests of new producers and small producers, and the interests of producers who are cash tenants, share tenants, adherent planters, or sharecroppers.

I am sure the able Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, will recall, and the Record will attest, that when hearings were being held before that committee in 1937 I went before the committee and made a certain declaration, which was that I did not favor monopoly in my State any more than in any other State. I advocated and urged the inclusion in the 1937 law of language which would protect the new producers of the State, so that the acreage that was allotted to any one State might be enjoyed by a large number of people in that State, and not principally by one big corporation.

I had no hesitancy, at that hearing, in advocating that principle and expressing my belief in it. Notwithstanding that act, the language of which clearly indicated the intent of the act that new producers should be given chief consideration, the act has been administered in my State so that in the year 1938 the United States Sugar Corporation had 22,555 acres; in 1939 it had 16,917 acres; and in 1940 it will have 20,469 acres under the allocation which has been made.

Another sugar producer in Florida, the Fellsmere Company, in 1938 had 3,509 acres; in 1939 it had 2,632 acres; and in 1940 it will have 3,184 acres.

Twenty-three independent growers in the State—that means everybody else in Florida engaged in growing sugarcane—had 1,552 acres in 1938, 1,539 acres in 1939, and 1,032 acres in 1940 allocated to them as a quota.

That meant that the total acreage for the State of Florida for 1940 is 24,686 acres. To that is to be added about 4,000 acres under the Ellender amendment, nearly all of which will go to the United States Sugar Corporation; but out of an allocated acreage of 24,000, one corporation has 20,000 acres, another corporation 3,000 acres, and 23 independent growers 1,000 acres.

Mr. President, I stood on this floor in 1937, and at different times since, and contended for a larger quota for my State, saying that I thought the State was entitled to a larger quota from the hands of the other States of the Union. I want to be consistent. I believe in the principle of fair distribution, not only outside my State but inside my State. To attest it, I have offered this amendment, which simply says that no one person, firm, or corporation in any one State may have more than 50 percent, one-half, of the total acreage in that State awarded to it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course we are all familiar with the Senator's position, and how consistent and persistent he has been respecting this matter. He has fought for Florida on the question he now presents.

As has been explained here, if the committee had had time to go into the details of the matter which is now presented, it could have done so; but it is impossible under the present circumstances. Next year, when the matter will come up, as it must do—because this is an extension of the act for only a year—I assure the Senator that his views will be considered by the committee, and I am sure sympathetically considered.

The Senator will remember that another member of the committee, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], has been very persistent with reference to these subsidy payments. Unfortunately, he is not here today. His wife is not well and he could not be here. He intended to make a speech on this question; but I assure the Senator from Florida that his view as expressed in this amendment will receive consideration next year, when the question comes up of a further extension of this act, or a further study of the whole question.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I very much appreciate the statement of my friend the able chairman of the committee. I know it is late in the session, and that certain parliamentary difficulties come to the minds of Senators who want to see this sugar law continued in effect which make them afraid that if we should adopt any amendment here we should not be able to secure at this session the passage of the resolution continuing the sugar law for 1 year.

As I said awhile ago, I am not trying to prevent the enactment of the continuing resolution for 1 year. I am merely trying to get justice, as I see it in my humble way, for my State, and not only for my State but for the people of the State, because as long as I am here I shall try to represent the State as a whole. I do not want to have it thrown in my teeth, every time I talk about sugar, that all I am doing is representing a big corporation which receives several hundred thousand dollars of benefit payments, and that I am its spokesman here, trying to get for it a larger part of a public franchise to produce an agricultural commodity. I am glad to see the big company grow, but I want to see the sugar business distributed all over my State wherever it is possible for the people of the State to grow sugar. I want the actual farmers who live in Florida, who make their homes there and rear their children there, to grow sugarcane as an adjunct to an agricultural crop, which is their chief business; and that cannot be done so long as the present system continues as it is imbedded in this law. If we should receive any additional quota, this one corporation would get the greater part of it. I want to cut down its proportion first at least to not more than 50 percent of the State's quota and then let whatever quota is left be distributed as widely as possible among the farmers.

So I submit the amendment. I felt that it was my duty to the Senate to be as consistent in my argument and in the assertion of principles with regard to Florida as I was with regard to other States.

I submit the amendment to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, before the bill is voted upon I desire simply to express my view in favor of the legislation.

The sugar-refining industry in New York State is the largest in the Union, and the port of New York is the largest refining center in the world. This legislation provided in this bill is absolutely necessary for the preservation of that industry and the employment of its workers. It is a very efficient industry, it pays high wages, and its destruction would be a serious matter to the people of New York. The employees affected have presented the problem to me earnestly and persuasively, and I have been most anxious that nothing be done to impair their livelihood or the prosperity of the industry. I am, therefore, delighted to see that the necessary legislation will be enacted to protect the industry and its workers and to promote the welfare of the Nation as a whole.

As part of my remarks, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Brooklyn Eagle and a number of letters, beginning with letters from the Honorable Herbert H. Lehman, Governor of our State, and from the borough president of Brooklyn, the Honorable John Cashmore, in favor of the legislation in its present form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial and letters are as follows:

[From the Brooklyn Eagle of August 12, 1940]

FIGHT TO SAVE SUGAR INDUSTRY MUST BE PRESSED IN SENATE

Brooklyn business and civic organizations should not in any way relax their efforts on behalf of a new sugar act, so framed as to insure the preservation of the industry in Brooklyn.

It is true that the measure has been passed by the House in the form for which the united interests of this community, headed by Borough President Cashmore, were fighting all spring. But now it is in the Senate, and it is feared that the same fight will be reenacted in the Upper Chamber on behalf of the Puerto Rican and Hawaiian refiners.

Over the years the sugar industry here has received many blows from Washington, but today all that is sought is to maintain the status quo—continue the existing quotas on imports of the offshore refined sugar.

Because of the low wages paid on these islands—as little as 70 cents a day—it is obvious that the sugar refined here under American standards would be under a fatal handicap if the bars were let down, and a flood of cheap tropical sugar be permitted to glut the market.

It is well to remember what the sugar industry means to Brooklyn. Over 2,500 men and women are employed in it, and they share an annual pay roll of approximately $4,500,000. The industry pays local taxes and water fees amounting roughly to $500,000 and buys supplies from local merchants running into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

In the light of these facts it is easy to understand why Brooklyn has fought so unitedly for a sugar bill which would at least assure the continuance of present conditions.

Borough President Cashmore and many of the groups interested in the campaign have already urged upon Senators MEAD and WAGNER the importance of adopting the bill in the form in which it passed the House.

But the matter should not rest there. Brooklyn's sugar industry and its friends should be represented at committee hearings and should get their story personally before as many Senators as possible.

The measure means too much to Brooklyn for its advocates to fail to take every step possible to bring about its passage without crippling amendments.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Albany, August 12, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
The Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of a letter from Charles Milbauer, vice chairman of the Employees' Committee to Maintain Brooklyn's Cane Sugar Refining Industry.

Since this letter very clearly and forcefully presents the interests of the refining industry in our State, I am sending you a copy.

In my opinion the Congress should not pass legislation which will reduce the quota of the home refining industry. As you will see from Mr. Milbauer's letter, New York has already lost a substantial portion of its sugar-refining industry, and many hundreds have been thrown out of employment.

May I ask your assistance and cooperation in protecting the interests of New York State in this very vital matter.

Very sincerely yours,

HERBERT H. LEHMAN.

EMPLOYEES' COMMITTEES TO MAINTAIN
BROOKLYN'S CANE SUGAR REFINING INDUSTRY,
49 South Second Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Hon. HERBERT H. LEHMAN,
State House, Albany, N. Y.

SIR: The members of the Employees' Committee to Maintain Brooklyn's Cane Sugar Refining Industry, of which I am vice chairman, wish to present to you the facts regarding the difficulties which confront the New York cane-sugar refining industry.

New York is the largest cane-sugar refining State in the Union and refining has taken place here for over 250 years. In the port of New York the industry normally gives employment to some 5,000 men but in recent years this figure has decreased considerably. The men and women now working in the New York refineries work only 3 or 4 days a week and it is impossible for them to give their families a decent American standard of living under these conditions.

Labor conditions in the New York refineries are excellent. Unionization is 100 percent, and all of the great unions—the A. F. of L., the C. I. O., the I. L. A., and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen—are represented. Hour wage rates are higher than those found in other industries and vacations with pay and long established pension systems are in operation.

Since 1925, New York has lost approximately 40 percent of its sugar-refining industry. This decrease in business has not only cut employment in the refineries but it has also meant that jobs have been lost at the water front in the unloading of raw sugar from ocean vessels. In short, this drastic reduction in refining has affected sailors, stevedores, lightermen, weighers, checkers, refinery workers, etc., in the great port of New York, and this has happened in overseas sugar which is the second most important commodity in the port of New York, both as measured by weight and value.

New York's cane-sugar-refining industry has declined for two reasons: First, because after 1925 refining by cheap labor on the sugar plantations in the Tropics began in Cuba, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines; secondly, in recent years the beet-sugar industry has grown rapidly in the making of refined sugar to displace our product.

As you know, the refineries in the Tropics have been a recent development and they employ low-paid unorganized labor. For example, in Puerto Rico the Governor reports that the wages prevailing there are generally around 10 to 12 cents an hour. Tropical refiners are sugar producers, and as raw-sugar producers they have received substantial subsidies from the consumers in this country and the United States Treasury.

The beet-sugar industry only exists in the United States because it is highly subsidized. In fact, it would wholly disappear if the present subsidies were reduced.

In 1934 Congress wrote a Sugar Act, which was rewritten in 1936 and 1937. That act divided the American market among the offshore tropical refiners, the beet industry, and the home refiners in accordance with a certain quota formula. The quota assigned to the refiners in New York and other States is not sufficient to give adequate employment to those in the industry. But regardless of this fact, the tropical refiners and the beet-sugar factories have been making a wide attempt to decrease still further the quotas of the home refining industry.

On June 20 of this year the House of Representatives decided to extend the Sugar Act for 1 year and by an overwhelming vote (134 to 20) decided that there should be no increase in the quotas assigned to the tropical refiners. It also decided that there should be no increase in quotas for beet-sugar refiners. It is in the interest of the New York cane-sugar-refining industry and the workers in it that there be no expansion of the quotas for the tropical refiners or the beet-sugar industry.

We employees do not advocate a quota system for sugar, but if there is to be a quota system we request that we be given a "break" in it.

New York consumers pay $26,000,000 a year more for their sugar than is necessary in order to give protection to the sugar producers in continental United States, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico. Not one penny of this subsidy goes to benefit New York's sugar industry or its employees.

Since 1925 New York has been unaware of the dangers to employment in the sugar problems; and men and women in public life, until recently, have had no understanding of the problem whatsoever. New York cannot afford to lose more industry whether it be in sugar refining or in any other business. This year the people of New York have become informed regarding this issue and they have taken a very active part in our campaign to save our industry.

First, look at labor: The New York bodies of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, the American Federation of Labor, the International Longshoremen's Association and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen are on record as 100 percent opposed to any further decrease in New York's sugar-refining industry.

Secondly, look at the maritime interests of New York: We find the Port of New York Authority, the Maritime Association of the Port of New York, the Harbor Carriers of the Port of New York are on record in our favor.

The chambers of commerce, including those from Brooklyn, Queens, and Yonkers are on our side.

Business organizations such as the New York Board of Trade, the Merchants Association of New York, have also joined with us.

Women, as citizens and consumers, have an interest in this problem. We find such well known organizations as the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs, the Long Island Federation of Women's Clubs, and the civic groups, the community councils of the city of New York behind us.

There are a considerable number of colored workers in our plants and many colored organizations in New York who have taken a deep interest in this problem.

Finally, I wish to point out to you that the New York Legislature, on March 30, 1940, passed a formal resolution to defend our industry, as did the New York City Council on April 18.

The Senate is now considering the sugar problem and when the bill, H. R. 9654, recently passed by the House does come before the Senate, we are certain that there will be demands to reduce our quotas and to increase the quotas for beet sugar and tropical refined sugar. We sincerely hope that you will support us.

The Governors of Massachusetts, New Jersey, and of the other great refining States, have made statements in support of the home refining industry. The State of New York, being the leading refining State, should not be caught off guard.

With great respect, we are,

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES MILBAUER,
Vice Chairman.

PRESIDENT OF THE BOROUGH OF BROOKLYN,
New York, June 29, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senator, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I can well appreciate that your time and attention are devoted in these critical days to the formulation of an adequate defense for our country. Under the depressing circumstances now existing in the world, this concentration on defense is inevitable. But it is clear to me that a strong national defense requires a strong national economic structure. More than ever we need to encourage business and employment at home.

It is with these facts in mind that I call to your attention that the people of Brooklyn, and New York generally, are vitally concerned over the future of one of our most important industries—the receipt and refining of raw cane sugar. The fate of this New York industry will be determined, in a large measure, by the action taken by the Senate in the near future upon the Cummings sugar bill which was passed by the House last week.

May I summarize for you the interests of Brooklyn in this legislation? In 1934 Congress enacted comprehensive sugar legislation known as the quota system. By direct and indirect taxes placed upon sugar consumers, a guaranteed protection was given to the beet and cane growers of continental United States and to the plantation owners of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines. Another feature of the Sugar Act was that it provided a protection for the continental cane-sugar-refining industry by means of quotas limiting the amount of refined sugar which could enter the United States each year from the tropical refineries in Cuba, Puerto Rico, the Philippines, and Hawaii. Quota limitations were also placed upon the beet-sugar industry.

The general quota plan, as I have described in brief above, was extended for 1 year by Congress in 1936. Congress again extended the plan without substantial modification in the Sugar Act of 1937 which expires at the end of 1940. Early this spring Congressman WILLIAM BARRY, of Queens, introduced a bill which would have extended for 1 year the Sugar Act of 1937 in its original form. The Barry bill would have extended the quotas on raw sugar for the protection of sugar growers and the quotas on tropical refined sugar for the protection of refinery workmen. Surprisingly enough, however, a concerted attempt was made by the spokesmen for the highly subsidized Hawaiian and Puerto Rican sugar industries to defeat the Barry bill because it would continue limitations upon their refining. On May 7, 1940, the House Committee on Agriculture shelved the Barry bill and reported out the Cummings bill, H. R. 9654, which would extend the Sugar Act for 1 year, but which would not continue the limitations upon the refining of sugar in Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

Last week the Cummings bill came to the floor of the House for debate, and practically every Representative of the refining States opposed the measure because it would not restore the previous limitations upon tropical refining. After 6 hours of debate, valiantly led by Representatives of Brooklyn, Queens, and Manhattan, the House restored the previously existing limitations upon Hawaiian and Puerto Rican refining by the overwhelming vote of 135 to 20. After the Cummings bill was so amended, it was passed by the House and went to the Senate.

It is reported that the spokesmen for the American Tropics will make a concerted attempt to have the Cummings bill amended in the Senate to permit unlimited refining down on the plantations in the Tropics. Under the quotas established by law, if tropical refining expands, it means an immediate reduction of refining operations in New York and other refining States. The workers and consumers of the Borough of Brooklyn and the other refining cities of New York rightfully support the proposition that no sugar legislation should be enacted in 1940 or at any time which would create unemployment in refineries at home.

In behalf of thousands of New York sugar-refinery workmen, I urge you to support sugar legislation which will protect Brooklyn jobs by limiting refining in the Tropics. This means that the Cummings sugar bill should only be enacted if it continues to provide limitations on refining in Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

Any amendment to the sugar bill in the Senate which would provide for a further expansion of the quotas of the subsidized beet-sugar industry should be opposed because, other things being equal, an increase in the quota for beet sugar will bring a decrease in refining in Brooklyn, just as would an increase in the quotas for tropical-refined sugar.

New York is the largest cane-sugar-refining State in the Union—the port of New York is the largest refining center in the world, and Brooklyn is the heart of that local industry. Your support on the sugar legislation will, therefore, be in the interests not only of the people of this borough but also of the 17,000,000 people who live in and around the great port of New York.

Very truly yours,

JOHN CASHMORE.

NEW YORK, September 25, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WAGNER: This association has been much interested in the sugar industry of this area and is anxious that the community continue to receive the benefits resulting from this industry. As you know, the value of cane-sugar products refined in New York City totals about $86,000,000 annually, which represents approximately 20 percent of the total refined-sugar production of the United States, and provides a correspondingly large amount of employment.

The relationships between employers and employees of this industry have been excellent in the New York area for many years. The association, therefore, urges that you give favorable consideration to the Cummings bill, H. R. 9654, and that you support this bill when it comes up for consideration. We are convinced that this bill will greatly help to maintain the substantial sugar business and employment in the industry for the city of New York.

The board of directors of the association has adopted the following resolution, namely, "that the Merchants' Association of New York urge that the Congress enact no sugar legislation in 1940 which would tend to decrease further the volume of cane sugar which is received and refined in the port of New York."

The association believes the Sugar Act of 1937, which terminates this year, and which undoubtedly will be replaced by similar legislation, has served an excellent purpose, and has been of much benefit to the community. The present volume, based on existing quotas, has been satisfactory for a number of years. The industry, as well as other related businesses, would experience much difficulty and confusion if a change in existing quotas were attempted at the present time. We believe that the Cummings bill, H. R. 9654, would avoid these difficulties and we urge, therefore, that it be adopted.

Yours very sincerely,

THE MERCHANTS ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK,
By S. C. MEAD, Secretary.

EMPLOYEES' COMMITTEE TO MAINTAIN BROOKLYN'S
CANE SUGAR REFINING INDUSTRY,
Brooklyn, N. Y., July 15, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Honorable SIR: The Senate will shortly have before it for consideration the sugar bill of 1940 (H. R. 9654). As this bill affords a large measure of protection against loss of jobs to over 2,000 men and women employees of Brooklyn's cane-sugar refining industry, their committee, of which I am chairman, respectfully urges you to vote for and work for the passage of this bill, without amendments or other changes. This bill continues the Sugar Act of 1937 for 1 year, or until December 31, 1941.

The House, on June 20 of this year, by the overpowering vote of 134 to 20, adopted the McCormack amendment to the Cummings bill. This amendment reenacts quotas on refined sugar made by cheap plantation labor in the Tropics. This action by the House was the same as it took in 1934, 1936, and 1937, and each time the Senate, in its consideration of sugar legislation, came to the same conclusion as the House.

It is of tremendous importance to us, American men and women workers in Brooklyn refineries, that there be no changes in the sugar quotas as passed by the House as any increase in the quotas for beet sugar or tropical refined sugar would most assuredly increase unemployment in Brooklyn refineries.

The undersigned has been employed in a Brooklyn sugar refinery for 29½ years, and among his 1,000 associate workers in this one plant are 650 persons with from 5 to 25 years of service, and 110 with from 25 to 50 years' service. Most of us have grown up in the sugar industry, and although skilled in our present jobs, are now past the desirable age for employment in other industries.

Our hope is legislation like H. R. 9654, which will continue our jobs and at the same time does not take anything away from the various other sugar groups. It is our earnest belief that you will help us, and we trust that you will justify this sincere and unfailing faith.

Very respectfully yours,

WILLIAM P. COSTER.

BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN,
EAST RIVER LODGE NO. 829,
The Bronx, N. Y., August 6, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The enclosed copy of our letter today, addressed to Mr. Whitney, president of our organization, which is self-explanatory, explains the interest of the men employed by this terminal in H. R. 9654, which is now before the Senate.

We earnestly hope that you will do everything possible toward having this bill passed by the Senate.

Yours very truly,

JOHN MCDONOUGH,
Chairman, Jay Street Terminal General Committee.

BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN, LODGE NO. 829,
August 6, 1940.

Mr. A. F. WHITNEY,
President, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen,
820 Superior Avenue West, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: The accompanying memorandum pertaining to H. R. 9654, which is self-explanatory, has reference to your letter February 14, reference 829–A. F. W.–H. B.–H.

For the reasons expressed in our letter February 11, our membership is most desirous of having this bill passed by the Senate, preferably in its present form.

At present the cane-sugar refinery served by the rails of this railroad is closed down and there appears to be little prospect of its resuming operations, unless legislation favorable to cane-sugar refiners in the United States is passed. To give you an idea of the importance of sugar tonnage in our carryings, we cite the following comparison: during the month of March 1937, when the refinery was operating and when sugar shipments were moving freely, 576 cars were shipped against 57 cars in March 1940, a decrease of 519 cars. The volume of business at present being handled by this terminal is very low. It seems impossible to secure additional business to even partially offset the loss of sugar tonnage, hence the concern of our membership about the situation particularly the distinct possibility of a reduction in forces.

May we ask that you again take up the matter vigorously with the view to rendering whatever aid may be possible toward the passage of this bill by the Senate? Please reply.

Fraternally yours,

JOHN MCDONOUGH,
Chairman, Jay Street Terminal General Committee.

THE SENATE SHOULD FINISH THE JOB AND PRESERVE EMPLOYMENT IN THE SUGAR-REFINING INDUSTRY IN THE STATE OF NEW YORK

The United States Senate in the near future will vote upon the sugar bill of 1940, H. R. 9654, which was passed by the House of Representatives on June 20. It is of vital importance to New York, the largest sugar-refining State in the Union, that the Senate maintain the quota limitations upon the imports of tropical refined sugar which are now provided for in the bill.

On three separate occasions in the last 6 years the Senate has decided with the House that the sugar-quota law should protect American workmen in the home cane sugar refining industry as well as American beet and cane growers in continental United States and in the American Tropics. The House decided on June 20 that the maintenance of this principle of equal protection for all branches of the sugar industry was just as important today as it was in 1934, 1936, and 1937.

The Sugar Act of 1937, which by quotas divided the total American sugar market among the home cane-sugar refiners, the beet-sugar factories, and the tropical refiners, expires at the end of 1940. While it was agreed in the House this spring to extend the act for 1 year, it was suggested that the law be changed to give a larger share of the American sugar market to the beet-sugar factories. After considerable debate, the House Agriculture Committee decided that an increase in the beet-sugar quota, or share, was not in order. A concerted attempt was also made by the plantation refiners in Puerto Rico and Hawaii to obtain an unlimited quota. But the House on June 20, by an overwhelming vote of 134 to 20, decided to continue the previous quotas on refined sugar from these tropical islands. After this vote, the House passed the sugar bill which would continue the Sugar Act for 1 year.

New York consumers pay about $26,000,000 a year in direct sugar taxes and indirect subsidies which go to benefit sugar producers, including those in Hawaii and Puerto Rico. Refiners in those islands, as sugar producers, receive handsome cash benefits from American consumers. No subsidies of any kind accrue to the New York refining industry. If consumers are to be called upon to pay sugar subsidies, the sugar bill at least should safeguard the jobs of thousands of persons working in the New York refining industry.

It is highly probable that amendments will be offered in the Senate to permit increased refining in the Tropics. Any increase in tropical refining, under a quota system, will bring about a loss of jobs for well-organized American sugar-refinery workmen in New York and other sugar-refining States. The Senate should pass the sugar bill with limitations upon Hawaiian and Puerto Rican refined sugar, or it should not pass the bill at all.

EMPLOYEES' COMMITTEE TO MAINTAIN BROOKLYN'S
CANE SUGAR REFINING INDUSTRY,
Brooklyn, N. Y., August 7, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: On June 20 the House of Representatives passed by an overwhelming vote of 134 to 20 the sugar bill H. R. 9654, 1940. This bill provides that quota limitations upon imports of tropical refined sugar will be maintained. As New York is the largest refining State in the country it is of utmost importance to labor and industry that this bill be passed by the United States Senate. Over a period of 6 years the United States Senate on three different occasions has decided with the House that the sugar-quota law should protect the home cane-sugar industries, American beet and cane growers in continental United States and in the American Tropics.

This bill of 1940 is a reaffirmation of the principle of equal protection for all branches of the sugar industry, which is just as important today as it was in the years from 1934 to 1937. In the sugar quota bill of 1937, which expires at the end of 1940, the total American sugar market quota was divided among the cane-sugar refineries, the beet-sugar factories, and the tropical refineries. The House agreed this past spring to extend this quota 1 year. The beet sugar people attempted to increase their quota and the plantation refineries in Puerto Rico and Hawaii tried to obtain unlimited quotas. It was the House Agriculture Committee that decided that an increase in the beet quota or share was not in order. The House then decided by a large majority to continue the previous quotas on refined sugar from the tropical islands.

The consumer of New York State pays huge sugar taxes and indirect sugar subsidies which are only beneficial to the sugar producers in Hawaii and Puerto Rico. If the consumer is made to pay all these taxes without any subsidy to the New York refining industry the sugar bill should at least help keep the jobs of thousands working in the New York refineries. The refinery workmen of New York are well organized and receive the best wages the industry offers in the world. The refining industry of the Tropics does not practice our well-known collective bargaining. Therefore, any increase in the tropical refined sugar under a quota system will bring a loss of jobs over here and a probable migration of industry out of New York State. Unless the Senate passes the bill with limitations upon Hawaii and Puerto Rico it should not be passed at all.

Very respectfully yours,

THADDEUS KAMIENOWSKI.

WESTCHESTER COMMITTEE TO DEFEND THE HOME
CANE SUGAR REFINING INDUSTRY,
Yonkers, N. Y., August 5, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The Finance Committee of the United States Senate has under consideration H. R. 9654, a bill to extend the life of the Sugar Act of 1937 for an additional year. This bill was passed by the House of Representatives on June 20, 1940, after being amended to reinstate the quotas on refined sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

It is the contention of this committee, composed of employees of the New York metropolitan area cane-sugar industry, that this bill should be concurred in by the Senate and enacted into law at the earliest opportunity. No alterations in the quotas for tropical refined sugar or beet sugar should be permitted. This contention has found widespread endorsement by industrial, commercial, and civil groups in New York and a large number of other States.

Aware of the keen interest you have always taken in the development and preservation of industry in New York, we have no doubt that you will do everything in your power to expedite the enactment of H. R. 9654 in its present form. The sugar-refining industry in this State has played an important part for over 250 years in the economic life of the State. Its expenditures through pay rolls, purchase of supplies, and for transportation have helped to make New York what it is today—one of the great industrial States in the Union.

The tropical refineries and the beet producers are highly subsidized by the United States Government while the continental cane refineries receive not one cent of this money nor do they ask for it. We feel that the tropical and beet-sugar refineries, which have gained a large share of the market through the aid of the subsidies, should not be allowed to increase their markets further to the detriment of the continental cane-refinery worker and, therefore, should be kept within the quotas set forth in H. R. 9654.

We respectfully request that you will give the views contained in this letter your most careful consideration.

Very truly yours,

O. V. BURLINGAME,
Secretary.

BROTHERHOOD OF RAILWAY AND STEAMSHIP CLERKS, FREIGHT
HANDLERS' EXPRESS AND STATION EMPLOYEES, LODGE NO. 773,
Brooklyn, N. Y., August 9, 1940.

The Honorable ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The freight terminal by which the members of this lodge are employed has in the past derived a large proportion of its revenues from the cane-sugar refining industry, its rails directly serving a large cane-sugar refinery, operations at which are, at the present time, unfortunately suspended.

Our membership is, therefore, vitally interested in the passage of the Sugar Act of 1940 (H. R. 9654), as legislation favorable to the continental cane-sugar refineries is obviously the only means of obtaining a resumption of operations.

The quota limitations imposed by this bill on the tropical sugar refineries, and on the beet-sugar industry, should be maintained irrespective of any amendments which may be proposed when this bill comes before the Senate for their consideration.

We trust, therefore, sir, that you will vigorously use your influence to further the passage of this bill.

I am, sir,

Yours respectfully,

JOHN B. MULLIN,
President.

KINGS COUNTY CHAPTER OF THE TAXPAYERS' FEDERATION, INC.,
Brooklyn, N. Y., August 12, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WAGNER: The wage and hour legislation should be maintained. At the same time, private industry must not be crucified by the uncontrolled importation of products from other shores which are manufactured under standards of employment which are lower than those enforced against our own industry.

I refer particularly to the sugar industry of Brooklyn, and on behalf of 73 taxpayer organizations in Kings County I urge that you not only vote in favor of the restrictive quotas pertaining to "off-shore sugar" but also take a most prominent and aggressive action to see that present legislation now before your honorable body is forthwith enacted. This legislation has now been before your body for several months after successful passage in the House of Representatives. Turn the dark cloud of worry for the 2,500 Brooklynites employed in the local sugar industry into a silver lining by immediate action on this legislation which is so important to these thousands of loyal citizens.

Yours very truly,

SUMNER A. SIRTL, Chairman.

LONG ISLAND FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS, INC.,

MY DEAR MR. WAGNER: Enclosed please find copy of resolution on the Federal Sugar Act, which was passed by this federation at their last convention.

Yours very truly,

MABEL E. PERSELL,
Corresponding Secretary.

[Enclosure]

LONG ISLAND FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS, INC.

Resolution

Whereas Brooklyn is a large cane-sugar refining center giving work to over 1,800 men and women; and

Whereas this industry and these jobs are threatened by the possibility of an unlimited inflow of tropical refined sugar from Cuba, and from the American islands of Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines, since the Federal Sugar Act, which now limits this inflow, expires this year; and

Whereas under the Sugar Act these tropical producer-refiners receive price benefits and cash subsidies from the Treasury, paid for by the American consumer, in part through a sugar sales tax, whereas our home refining industry receives no subsidies of any kind; and

Whereas the home refinery workers cannot compete with the tropical refiners who base their operations on cheap tropical labor; and

Whereas proper protection for the home refining industry does not result in higher prices to the consumer, nor does the consumer make any saving on the tropical refined sugar: Therefore be it

Resolved, That when Congress formulates new sugar legislation this year it carry over into the new Sugar Act the present limitation on the importation of tropical refined sugar (sec. 207, H. R. 7667), or that it provide for a similar limitation in the new act in order that our home refining industry have some protection against subsidized competition; and be it

Resolved, That the Long Island Federation of Women's Clubs, in passing this resolution, endorses this method of maintaining home industry and home employment; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Congressional Representatives from Brooklyn, to the two Senators from New York State, and to the Secretaries of Agriculture, Interior, State, and Commerce, respectively, in Washington, D. C.

Proposed by Brooklyn Woman's Club.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The members of this post urge you to vote in favor of the sugar bill of 1940—H. R. 9654.

As you know this bill would mean a lot to the citizens of Brooklyn who have positions at these sugar plants. We will be most grateful to you by your help and cooperation by voting in favor of this bill.

Respectfully yours,

JAMES A. BURNS, Adjutant.

DINING CAR EMPLOYEES UNION, LOCAL NO. 370,
New York City, August 6, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your attention is called to the sugar bill of 1940—H. R. 9654—which would extend the Sugar Act of 1937 for 1 year. This bill, as you know, was recently passed by the House of Representatives. The membership of our organization is appealing to you to support that bill without any amendments that would increase the tonnage of refined sugar.

At the present time, the employees in this industry are on a 3- or 4-day weekly basis. This being so, their incomes are insufficient to maintain decent conditions for their families. If an increase in tonnage of refined sugar is permitted, many of those employees will be unemployed and further curtailment of time will be the result to those who are still able to work.

Our American standard of living is far and above the islands of Cuba, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines, and those who are in control of the industry have and will attempt to bring into our country sugar already refined at a cost not comparable with our cost of production. Since employees in this industry are also the consumers of that product, they should not be deprived of their means of livelihood.

May we urge you to vote to maintain the existing quota limit of tropically refined sugar so as to keep Americans at work.

Respectfully yours,

CLAUDE H. MASON,
Financial Secretary-Treasurer.

EMPLOYEES' COMMITTEE TO MAINTAIN
BROOKLYN'S CANE SUGAR REFINING INDUSTRY,
Brooklyn, N. Y., July 31, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: The United States Senate will soon vote upon the sugar bill of 1940—H. R. 9654—which was passed by the House of Representatives on June 20. New York being the largest sugar-refining State in the Union, is vitally concerned that the Senate maintain the quota limiting the imports of the tropical refined sugar which is now provided in the bill.

On several occasions in the past year the Senate and the House agreed that the sugar quota should protect Americans in the home cane sugar refining industry and also the American beet and cane growers in continental United States and in the American Tropics. The House recognized the importance of equal protection for all branches of the sugar industry today, just as it did in 1934, 1936, and 1937.

The Sugar Act of 1937, which divided the total American sugar market among the home cane-sugar factories, the beet factories, and the tropical refiners expires at the end of 1940. The House agreed to extend this act for 1 year, which it was suggested that the law be changed to give a larger share of the American sugar market to the beet-sugar factories. After considerable debate the House Agricultural Committee decided that an increase in the beet-sugar quota was not in order. A concerted attempt was also made by the plantation owners in Puerto Rico and Hawaii to obtain an unlimited quota. This was met with the House by an overwhelming vote of 134 to 20 to continue the previous quotas on refined sugar from the tropical islands.

New York consumers pay about $26,000,000 annually in direct sugar taxes and indirect sugar subsidies which benefit sugar growers, including those in Puerto Rico and Hawaii. Refiners and sugar producers in those islands receive cash benefits from American consumers. Since the New York refiners receive no subsidies, the sugar bill, at least, should safeguard the jobs of thousands of persons working in the New York refining industry.

It is highly probable that amendments will be offered in the Senate permitting increased refining in the Tropics. An increase in the tropical refining, under the quota system, will bring about a loss of jobs for organized American sugar-refinery workers in New York and in other refining States.

Respectfully yours,

HAMP RUTH.

LOCAL NO. 186,
AMALGAMATED CLOTHING WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Kingston, N. Y., August 6, 1940.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER,
Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: On behalf of the thousands of American workers in the sugar-refining industry, we ask that you vote in the affirmative when the bill, House bill 9654, comes to a vote in the Senate.

This bill, which would regulate the importation of refined sugar, will preserve the jobs of those thousands of workers and should be passed.

Very truly yours,

JAMES GEARY,
President, Local No. 186, A. C. W. A.

EMPLOYEES' COMMITTEE TO MAINTAIN
BROOKLYN'S CANE SUGAR REFINING INDUSTRY,
Brooklyn, N. Y., August 9, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: I respectfully urge you to do all possible for the enactment of H. R. 9654, the 1940 sugar bill. This bill at present is before the Senate Finance Committee and it is most important to me and my associates that it be favorably reported without amendments.

The writer is shop steward for Auto Truck Chauffeurs' Local 282 of I. U. C. T. & H. of the A. F. of L. As the continuation of ours and the jobs of thousands of others in Brooklyn sugar refineries depends on this sugar legislation I again urge you to work and vote for its enactment.

Respectfully yours,

FRANK HAYES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 9654) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table Mr. HARRISON's motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, it was my intention to make a few remarks during the debate on the sugar bill in order to give to the Senate some data which might be of interest. In order not to delay the passage of the bill I awaited asking the Chair for recognition until this moment. I dislike discussing the sugar bill now that it has passed the Senate, but I find it incumbent upon me to say a few words on the subject. It is not my purpose to detain the Senate very long.

Mr. President, like some of my colleagues, I am not entirely satisfied with a mere extension of the Sugar Act. I believe that the Senate Finance Committee should investigate the sugar problem from all angles. Because of lack of time, that could not be done at this session of Congress, but we have been assured that the question will receive the close scrutiny of the committee in the early part of next year.

I did all in my power, in and out of the Senate Finance Committee, to have an amendment adopted providing for a larger quota for Louisiana and Florida. I felt confident that unless such an amendment would obtain the blessing of the committee and of the Sugar Division of the United States Department of Agriculture, my efforts on the floor of the Senate would be futile. That proposition was thoroughly demonstrated this afternoon by the scant vote received by the distinguished Senators from Florida [Messrs. ANDREWS and PEPPER] with respect to the amendments proposed by them, one of which had as its object an increased quota along the lines suggested by me to members of the Finance Committee. On the other hand, since an increased quota would not help the growers of cane sugar for next year, because sugarcane must be planted in the fall for harvest the following year, and quotas for 1941 have already been established by those in authority, it was pointed out to me that every effort would be made early next year to increase our quotas in time for planting the 1942 crop. I felt that it would be more beneficial to my constituents who grow cane to extend the act now, rather than delay the bill's passage in a futile attempt to amend it so as to obtain a larger quota, especially in view of the fact that the time for planting is already upon us and a determination of the acreage for planting for next year must be made without further delay. Furthermore, as I pointed out to the Senate earlier in the day, unless the Sugar Act is extended, vast stores of offshore sugars will be dumped in this country, and sugar prices would be much depressed. In this connection, let me say that figures from the Department of Commerce show that the normal sugar exports on the part of the Latin American countries, including Cuba, amount to approximately 4,700,000 tons annually. This includes 2,000,000 tons which Cuba ships into the United States under its quota agreement. Of the balance, amounting to 2,700,000 tons, about 2,250,000 tons are exported to countries outside of the Western Hemisphere. Should the war now raging in Europe spread, this enormous amount of sugar would probably be left in the Western Hemisphere, presenting a distinct threat to the United States sugar producers. Besides that amount of sugar, the figures show surpluses in Puerto Rico and Hawaii of about 250,000 tons. It can readily be seen that continental sugar producers would be placed at a decided disadvantage if the quota system should not be in effect next year. Prices would be so low that it would no doubt bankrupt an already crippled industry.

Mr. President, with such serious conditions threatening our industry, I had no alternative but to support the resolution adopted a few minutes ago.

I have confidence in the members of the Finance Committee of the Senate, and I feel certain that they will give us relief early next year.

Why should we not increase the quotas of continental producers? There is no logical argument that can be advanced against it. I firmly believe that continental growers should be permitted to produce at least 40 percent of our sugar requirements, and I will not stop until that goal is reached.

Does it seem fair and just to permit Hawaii, with a population of only 368,336, to be allotted a quota of 943,967 short tons of sugar when only 1,982,518 short tons are allotted to beet- and cane-sugar producers in 330 sugar-producing counties in the United States, whose population is 20,072,653? I ask the same question with respect to Puerto Rico, with an allotment of 803,026 tons and a population of 1,543,913; and Cuba, with an allotment of 1,923,680 tons and a population of 3,763,376. That does not seem fair and just.

Listen to these interesting figures, Senators:

	Year	Sugar counties	Total United States	Percent of United States
Population	1920	15,242,798	105,710,620	14.22
Do	1930	20,072,653	122,775,046	16.35
Number of employees	1935	3,459,551	17,603,219	19.65
Wages paid	1935	$4,319,040,000	$20,424,969,000	21.15
Retail sales	1932	$9,996,770,000	$49,482,880,000	20.20
Do	1933	$4,777,700,000	$20,576,623,000	23.22
Do	1938	$6,096,460,000	$33,161,280,000	19.71
Residential phones	1929	2,417,118	11,288,880	21.41
Do	1930	2,759,878	13,177,885	20.94
Do	1935	2,235,808	10,718,626	20.86
Automobiles	1930	4,560,096	19,780,000	23.05
Do	1936	4,923,006	22,295,072	22.08

I have no comparative figures for other producing areas under the quota system. I present some with respect to Cuba, and I ask your attention to the following:

In 1937 and 1938 the Louisiana sugar interests purchased $7,060,000 of sugar-mill machinery in this country, and the beet area for the same period purchased $17,800,000, or a total of $24,860,000, as against Cuba for the same period, $719,000. Mr. President, that seems incredible and yet it is true.

Now, if the people of Cuba would be directly benefited by virtue of such a large quota, in comparison to ours, it might be passable, but listen to these figures from a table showing the actual production of sugar in Cuba for 1937–38, 1938–39 and the production allotments for 1940:

Country of owners	1937–38 production	Percent of production	1938–39 production	Percent of production	1940 production allotments	Percent of production
	Pounds		Pounds		Pounds
United States	3,715,811,125	55.75	3,320,971,875	56.81	3,902,471,595	57.77
Cuban	1,479,616,775	22.20	1,239,636,125	21.20	1,554,915,695	23.02
Spanish	981,249,425	14.72	828,500,975	14.17	1,029,369,205	15.24
Other foreign [1]	488,994,025	7.33	441,778,025	7.82	268,010,520	3.97
Total	6,665,671,350	100.00	5,830,887,000	100.00	6,754,767,015	100.00

[1] Includes 10 Canadian mills, 4 English mills, 3 French mills, and 2 Dutch mills.

Think of it, Senators. Of the entire sugar production in Cuba, over 55 percent of it is owned and controlled by United States investors. I am informed that this 55 percent is owned by a few banks and bankers in New York. That is absolutely and positively unfair to mainland producers. That system must be corrected.

The sad part of it all is that labor in Cuba is supposed to benefit because of the existing law, that the wages are fixed by law at 80 cents per day, but only 50 cents per day is actually paid.

Another thing, it is said that wheat producers of the Middle West benefit greatly because Cuba buys all of its flour requirements from us. Listen to this, Senators: For the years 1932 to 1938, both inclusive, the total exports of flour to Cuba were 6,564,561 barrels. Of that amount, 4,447,574 barrels were produced from Canadian wheat, which was imported in this country for grinding in bond. The remainder of flour, or a paltry 2,116,987 barrels, was made from American wheat and exported to Cuba.

Mr. President, that is the picture, and I am confident that when the truth is known very little benefit comes to Americans in comparison to the enormous benefits which flow to Cuba.

Of the 42 sugar factories in the Philippines, only 12, with a production of 811,000,000 pounds of sugar annually, belong to Filipinos, and the remaining 30, with an annual production of 1,013,000,000 pounds of sugar, belong to Spanish, American, and British interests.

Mr. President, I have more facts that I would like to present, but I do not desire further to detain the Senate. If the sugar problem is thoroughly explored from every angle, it will become apparent that continental producers are being treated like stepchildren, and the Senate should take steps early next year to remedy this unjust and unfair condition.

I desire to take this opportunity of thanking the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], chairman of the Finance Committee, for his many courtesies. He is thoroughly conversant with our situation, and I look forward to much help from him when we again take up legislation to settle this vexing sugar problem.

Mr. O'MAHONEY obtained the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me to submit a conference report on the supplemental appropriation bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator. Before doing so let me say that I desire to make an acknowledgment to the chairman of the Committee on Finance and to others who have cooperated in the passage of the measure which has just been passed. I say that because I want the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to know that I shall open the few remarks I intend to make with that acknowledgment, because he might be called from the floor.

I shall be glad now to yield to the Senator from Colorado.

SUPPLEMENTAL CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS, 1941—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10539) making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 13, 22, 33, 40, 44, 45, 46, and 49.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 32, 36, 38, 39, 42, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 60, 61, 62, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, and 70; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For an amount required to increase the compensation of the clerk of the Finance Committee of the Senate at the rate of $1,000 per annum so long as the position is held by the present incumbent, $750."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$1,400"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In the first line of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: "(a)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$83,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ": Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the National Labor Relations Board from obligating any part of such appropriation for carrying on any of the functions or duties specifically conferred upon it by the National Labor Relations Act or to repeal any provision of such Act"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment to read as follows:

"Development of landing areas: For the construction, improvement, and repair of not to exceed two hundred and fifty public airports and other public landing areas in the United States and its territories and possessions, determined by the Administrator, with the approval of a Board composed of the Secretary of War, Secretary of the Navy and Secretary of Commerce, to be necessary for national defense, including areas essential for safe approaches and including the acquisition of land, $40,000,000, of which $2,000,000 shall be available for general administrative expenses, including the objects specified in section 204 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 and including engineering services and supervision of construction: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be construed as precluding the use of other appropriations available for any of the purposes for which this appropriation is made."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Construction and repair: For an additional amount for the construction, repair, or rehabilitation of school, agency, hospital, or other buildings and utilities, including the purchase of furniture, furnishings, and equipment as follows:"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$225,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 51: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,250"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$22,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$197,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: After the sum of $412.50" in line 10 of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ", together with such additional sum as may be necessary to pay costs and interest as specified in such judgment"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 11, 23, 24, 34, 37, 43, 48, and 59.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the report be agreed to. In connection with one of the items in the bill over which there was so much discussion, the matter of the airport allocations, I wish to insert a letter which was sent to the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations by the Honorable Jesse Jones, Secretary of Commerce, and which in part led to the ultimate result arrived at.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE,
Washington, October 4, 1940.

Hon. CARTER GLASS,
Chairman, Appropriations Committee, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR GLASS: With reference to our talk last night about the appropriation for the construction, improvement, and repair of airports, I am advised that the President has never seen the prospectus showing an ultimate of 4,000 landing fields and am sure that he does not expect Congress to approve that plan even in principle.

I am convinced, and I believe the President will be, that sufficient landing areas can be constructed with the $80,000,000 allocation and such additional W. P. A. help as may be available. This should provide between two and three hundred landing areas, and this number is undoubtedly needed, or will be as soon as the delivery of planes and training of pilots get under way.

Sincerely,

JESSE H. JONES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF SUGAR ACT OF 1937

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, this is the third time the able and distinguished senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has presided over the deliberations of the Committee on Finance while it has had under consideration the very complicated and technical problems connected with sugar legislation. Three times he has brought a sugar bill into this Chamber, and three times his leadership has been acknowledged by the Senate in the passage of the measure which he presented.

I feel that I would be amiss if I did not take this opportunity, as one of those who represent the beet-sugar area, to express my appreciation of the very efficient and able and tactful manner in which the Senator from Mississippi has conducted these proceedings ever since 1934. I make this statement particularly because so much has been said today in criticism of certain supposed defects in the legislation, that one who reads the RECORD might readily overlook the great benefits of the Sugar Act. The truth of the matter is that those of us who represent the sugar-growing States in continental United States, whether our product is the sugar beet or sugarcane, with the possible exception of those who represent the State of Florida, have been hoping and working for its enactment, because sugar producers everywhere have made it clear to us that they want this law.

Throughout this session those who have been interested in the sugar industry have been urging the enactment of this legislation. The Senators representing every beet-growing State from California as far east as Ohio have heard from their constituents that the Sugar Act of 1937 should be continued. Of course, we have all wanted amendments. We are all able to point out possible improvements, but without exception we all wanted the law and it would have been a great disappointment to all of us if the bill had not been enacted.

There has been no partisan division in the effort to secure enactment. Democrats and Republicans alike have joined in the effort which has culminated here today, and the sugar industry as a whole will rejoice that the measure is on its way to the White House, because everyone interested in growing or processing sugar knows that this law is the salvation of the sugar industry.

We have just passed the measure as it came to us from the House of Representatives. That very fact is eloquent testimony to the practical unanimity of opinion which supports the measure. It was the desire of most, if not all, of the Senators who represent sugar-producing States that there should be no amendment, so that the necessity for a conference between the two Houses might be avoided.

I think it is appropriate to recall that the quota system, has not been imposed upon the industry but rather that it was suggested by the industry. A stabilization agreement was worked out in 1933 by the leaders of the industry and its approval by the Department of Agriculture was sought. That stabilization agreement, the work largely of the sugar processors, was presented to the Secretary of Agriculture, but was disapproved because the then Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Henry Wallace, did not believe that it sufficiently protected the interests of the farmer.

In February 1934, Secretary Wallace appeared before the Finance Committee in support of the original Jones-Costigan Act, because that measure was designed to benefit the growers of sugar beets and sugarcane, by giving them the benefit payments provided in the law. The purpose of these payments was to give the farmer a larger share of the proceeds of the sugar business.

It is appropriate to remark that the reason sugar legislation is before Congress perennially is that the world production is so great, and the market for sugar in continental United States is so rich, that all of the producers of sugar throughout the world would like to sell their products in our market.

Efforts were made over a long period of years to build up the domestic industry, to stimulate the growing of sugar beets, to stimulate the growing of sugarcane in the United States, by increasing the tariff on imports. Although the tariff was raised again and again and again, it was not possible to raise it high enough to prevent sugar from offshore areas flooding our market, with the result that the price dwindled, and producers could not operate at a profit.

No tariff could keep out sugar from Hawaii, Puerto Rico, or the Philippine Islands, because they were not foreign countries. They were under the flag. The higher the tariff was placed the more it stimulated the growing of sugarcane in the Philippine Islands, so that the output of that area increased from 485,000 tons in 1925 to 1,248,500 tons in 1933. During the latter year Philippine sugar constituted 19.58 percent of the sugar consumed in continental United States.

Even the Cuban contribution was not materially affected by the tariff. In 1929 Cuba sent in 3,613,000 tons, or 51.88 percent of the continental supply. In 1931, under a higher tariff, it still supplied 2,534,000 tons. Under the Sugar Act, the extension of which we have been considering, the Cuban proportion has been reduced to 27.4 percent of the total. The 1940 Cuban contribution is placed at 1,750,000 tons, as compared with more than 2,500,000 in 1931.

While we have been cutting down the share which Cuba has sent into the United States, we have been building up the share which is produced on the domestic cane area and on the domestic beet area.

In 1929 domestic cane amounted to only 2.71 percent of sugar consumption in the United States. Today it amounts to 6.49 percent, three times as much as before the sugar law was adopted.

With respect to the beet-sugar area, in 1929 we produced only 14.74 percent of the amount of sugar consumed in the United States. Today we produce 23.95 percent.

In other words, the underlying fact in connection with this legislation has been that it has increased the share which domestic producers of sugarcane and of sugar beets have had in the domestic market.

The quota system, by limiting the amount which can be brought in from other countries, by specific figures and specific percentages, is the only successful device yet developed to protect our beet farmers and those farmers who grow sugarcane.

Mr. President, in order to indicate that this legislation has been beneficial to the producers of beet sugar, I desire to call attention to the fact that during the 3 years from 1931 to 1933 about 869,000 acres on the average were planted to sugar beets in continental United States; that under the Sugar Act of 1937, which we have now extended, the average acreage for the period 1937–39 was increased to 932,000, and that the average production of sugar has been increased from 1,385,000 tons to 1,538,000 tons.

Mr. President, I have several tables here which demonstrate the success with which this law has operated, and I ask unanimous consent that I may insert them in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The first of these tables shows sugar-beet acreage production and growers' returns for the years 1931 to 1939. This table indicates that the growers' return of $5.94 per ton of beets in 1931 fell off to $5.26 in 1932 and that in 1934 with a Government-benefit payment of $1.75 the growers' return was $6.91 per ton. In 1936, because of the suspension of the benefit payments because the Agricultural Adjustment Act had been held unconstitutional, the growers' return fell to $6.05. With the resumption of benefit payments under the Sugar Act of 1937, the growers' total return was again increased. The table follows:

United States sugar-beet acreage, production, and growers' returns, crops 1931–39, with simple averages of 3-crop periods

Mr. President, I think it would be only proper, in the interest of fairness, in view of some of the remarks which have been made here today, to call the attention of the Senate and the country to a statement which was made by Hon. Henry A. Wallace, formerly Secretary of Agriculture, when he first came before the Senate Committee on Finance, in 1934, to urge the passage of this legislation.

It has been repeatedly stated that Mr. Wallace has been opposed to the beet-sugar industry. The fact is that he urged the Sugar Act to protect beet growers. Testifying before the Finance Committee in February 1934 Mr. Wallace said this:

I was going to say from the standpoint of the immediate social situation we have an industry which has become a backbone of the Mountain States; that is, of certain of the Mountain States. I have forgotten just how many farmers—we will say 60,000 farmers, are dependent upon this industry. The industry does represent a very vital part of the Mountain States economy. That is a fact which you have to recognize.

It was in recognition of this fact and of his desire to defend the grower of sugar beets that the Secretary of Agriculture at that time threw his support behind this legislation, legislation which while it has not been as effective as many of us would like to have had it, nevertheless, has prevented severe disaster to producers of sugar beets and of sugarcane.

Although Secretary Wallace has not always seen eye to eye with me, although he has not supported all of my requests, nevertheless I cannot forget that when the Sugar Act of 1937 faced a veto Mr. Wallace came to the defense of the industry and persuaded the President to sign the bill.

The anxiety of Members of the Senate to have this bill passed and enacted at this session was clearly demonstrated by what transpired in this Chamber only 2 or 3 days ago when the distinguished and able Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], sponsoring as he did a resolution for the relief of planters in Louisiana who might have been penalized by reason of overplanting, cooperated with the rest of us and secured agreement to that resolution without attaching it as an amendment to this bill in order that we might avoid a conference.

There was also attached to that measure an amendment which I offered myself, one which was designed to correct an ambiguity in the present law whereby the Secretary has been prevented from giving proper recognition to excess carry-overs. I am happy to say that that bill carrying those amendments has now passed both Houses and is on its way to the White House for signature.

Mr. President, in connection with that last amendment to the bill which passed 2 or 3 days ago, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD at this point a letter which I wrote to the Secretary of Agriculture last week, explaining the amendment which I offered at that time.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEPTEMBER 28, 1940.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I am transmitting herewith a copy of an amendment of section 201 of the Sugar Act of 1937 which, if it were adopted, I am confident would be received with a large measure of satisfaction by every sector of the sugar industry because it would remove an ambiguity in the present law which, in the opinion of the industry, has had the effect of causing excessively high estimates of consumption.

The language of this amendment would not change any purpose Congress and the Department had in mind when drafting the Sugar Act of 1937 but would merely clarify the intent of Congress and permit the Department to administer the law in accordance with that intent. It would also afford complete protection to consumers of sugar from any danger of unnecessarily low quotas. Section 201 is the key provision of the act by which the supply and quotas and therefore the price of sugar are determined. As you know, the act makes it the duty of the Secretary to determine for each calendar year the amount of sugar needed to meet the requirements of consumers in the continental United States. But, his discretion is controlled by a specific statistical formula which is set out in the law. To guard against unduly low estimates of consumption which might have the effect of penalizing consumers, Congress then provided that the Secretary "may make such additional allowances as he may deem necessary * * * so that the supply of sugar made available under this act shall not result in average prices to consumers in excess of those necessary to maintain the domestic sugar industry as a whole." To this provision is attached another clause which declares that "the amounts of such additional allowances shall be such that in no event will the amount of the total supply be less than the quantity of sugar required to give consumers of sugar * * * a per capita consumption equal to that of the average of the 2-year period 1935–36."

This latter clause has been interpreted to prevent the Secretary from taking into consideration any excess carry-over of sugar stocks in making an additional allowance when the section is called into operation. It has the effect therefore of requiring the Secretary to make his allowances without regard to the actual existence of such an excess carry-over.

The question of interpretation of section 201 first arose in March 1938 when it became apparent that the estimate of consumption made in the previous December, namely, 6,861,761 tons, was too high and would have to be revised downward. On June 9, 1938, it was cut to 6,780,566 tons, which was the actual per capita average of the 2-year period 1935–36. This was a reduction of 81,195 tons, but there was an actual excess carry-over of 141,000 tons, so that "to maintain the domestic sugar industry as a whole" the total reduction should have been 222,195 tons.

This reduction could have been made without injury to the consumer. The failure to make it, however, had a depressing effect upon the price of sugar and was, therefore, injurious to every branch of the sugar industry. If the law, as interpreted, had permitted the Secretary to take into account the excess carry-over the reduction would have been made and the adverse effect upon price would have been avoided.

The amendment which I propose would correct this defect. First, by making it possible to take the excess carry-over into consideration, and, second, by basing the per capita consumption standard upon the 2-year period 1937–38 rather than the 2-year period 1935–36. The average of 1935–36 was 104.23 and of 1937–38, 102.63.

The provision of section 201, the amendment of which I suggest, is not called into play unless the average prices to consumers are in excess of those necessary to maintain the domestic industry as a whole. In the present chaotic condition of the world market there is no possibility of any such excess prices but if the Department should see fit to approve and recommend the amendment here offered, it would have, when taken into consideration with the recent action of your predecessor in revising downward the current estimate, a stabilizing effect upon the domestic market. It would not be in the slightest degree injurious to consumers but would give much encouragement to all of the producers of sugar beets and sugarcane who supply the continental market.

Very sincerely yours,

JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY.

HON. CLAUDE R. WICKARD,
Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Proposed amendment to section 201 of the Sugar Act of 1937: "and in order that the regulation of commerce provided by this Act shall not result in excessive prices to consumers, the Secretary shall make such additional allowances as he may deem necessary in the amount of sugar determined to be needed to meet the requirements of consumers, so that the supply of sugar made available to consumers shall not result in average prices to consumers in excess of those necessary to maintain the domestic sugar industry as a whole. The amount of such additional allowances shall not be less than the amount required, after allowance for normal carry-over, to give consumers in the continental United States a per capita consumption equal to the average of the 2-year period 1937–38."

Mr. President, it ought to be added that the Sugar Act protects consumers. The provisions of section 201 even as amended by the language which Congress has approved contains a guaranty that the consumer shall not be exploited by fixing a level below which the estimate of consumption may not go. Producers of sugar beets and sugarcane do not seek to exploit the consumer. They ask only a fair price, and consequently they have agreed to this provision. They have supported, however, and will be very happy to have executive approval to, the modification I have proposed because it provides for a realistic computation of the amount of sugar on hand.

In addition to this, it should be pointed out that the Sugar Act supports itself. It is true that benefit payments are made to the growers of cane and of sugar beets, but it is also true that the processing tax which is collected and which is paid by producers, as well as by processors, more than covers the total amount of benefit payments.

There is written into the law a special provision by which larger payments are scaled down and, under this provision, the outlay under the Sugar Act of 1937 has been approximately $5,000,000 less than would have been paid out had large growers received the basic rate.

That the sugar industry and not the consumer bears the tax is demonstrated by the fact that the retail price of sugar is now almost at an all-time low.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there are two or three little matters that are necessary to be passed.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I should like to make a motion.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2045, House bill 10127. If the motion is agreed to, I propose to ask that further action upon the bill go over until Monday morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the bill will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. House bill 10127, to amend the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10127) to amend the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes.

USE OF REFRIGERATOR CARS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. BARKLEY. Last Monday when the calendar was called, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] I objected to the consideration of Calendar No. 1719, Senate bill 2753. The Senator from New Jersey has advised me that he has no further objection to that bill. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is interested in it. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2753) to amend part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, with respect to the use of refrigerator cars, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert the following:

That paragraph (11) of section 1 of part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: "Provided, That in the case of inability or refusal of any carrier by railroad to supply safe, adequate, and proper refrigerator cars to any shipper in interstate commerce of perishable food products or commodities, and which are suitable to protect the marketability of such shipments, such shipper shall have the right to supply to such carrier such refrigerator cars as the Commission approves as being safe, adequate, and proper for the transportation of such products and commodities: Provided further, That if any carrier by railroad is unable to, or refuses to, supply safe, adequate, and proper cars to a shipper in interstate commerce of perishable food products or commodities, and which are suitable to protect the marketability of such shipments, and (1) refuses to accept any refrigerator car so approved by the Commission and tendered to such carrier by such shipper for the transportation in interstate commerce of any such products or commodities, or (2) unjustly discriminates either between private-car companies supplying refrigerator cars to such shipper or between shippers owning refrigerator cars who have the right to supply cars to such carriers as herein provided, such refusal, or unjust discrimination, as the case may be, shall be deemed to be an unjust and unreasonable practice with respect to car service."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS WHETSTONE DIVERSION CHANNEL, MINNESOTA

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, on page 11 of the calendar, will be found Calendar No. 2312, House bill 10518. An identical Senate bill is on the calendar, Calendar No. 2311, Senate bill 4363. I ask unanimous consent that the House bill be considered at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I simply want to inquire of the majority leader if it is now proposed to have an informal call of the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it is not. The bill which was just passed is one that was called on the calendar on the last call, and I objected to it at the request of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS]. I thought we might dispose of that bill. There are one or two little bills, such as the bridge bill now in question, which seem to be matters of some emergency. I did not suppose anyone would object to them.

Mr. ADAMS. I would not object to that, but I would object to taking up really legislative matters at this late hour.

Mr. BARKLEY. When we take up legislative matters which are general I may aid the Senator in objecting.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. This is a bill which provides for building a bridge which must be started before cold weather sets in. In Minnesota we have an early winter, and the work must be begun before winter sets in. Otherwise I would not impose upon the Senate and ask for the present passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 10518) granting the consent of Congress to the Department of Highways and the county of Big Stone, State of Minnesota, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Whetstone Diversion Channel at or near Ortonville, Minn., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the identical Senate bill (S. 4363) will be indefinitely postponed.

WIDOWS OF THE LATE GEORGE A. MEFFAN AND JOHN GLENN

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 4249, Calendar No. 2313.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4249) for the relief of the widows of the late George A. Meffan and John Glenn, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$10,000 each, in full satisfaction of their claims against the United States", and to insert "$5,000 each", and at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the widow of George A. Meffan, late a United States marshal for the State of Idaho, and to the widow of John Glenn, late a United States deputy marshal for the State of Idaho, the sum of $5,000 each, on account of the death of their husbands who were killed on July 31, 1940, in the State of Idaho, while in the performance of their duty: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this Act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURVEY OF CARTER AND ADJOINING COUNTIES, TENN.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Resolution No. 302, which appears on page 16 of the calendar under the head of "Subjects on the table." The resolution simply requests the Secretary of War to make a survey of Carter and adjoining counties in Tennessee which were damaged by the flood there of August 13, 1940. It does not call for an appropriation or anything of that sort.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky, the majority leader [Mr. BARKLEY], if we are to proceed with the calendar in this manner? It does not seem to me to be fair to the Senate, because we are almost at the end of our rope today.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there are two or three little matters of this sort which seem to be emergent, to which I thought there would be no objection, especially as we are soon to take a recess and are not to have a session tomorrow. Of course, if any Senator wishes to object, he may do so. There is only one other such matter, and that is one which the Senator from Louisiana wishes to bring up.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not think we ought to go on in this manner. I have no doubt that every one of these measures is meritorious, but it is now 5:30, and probably if a call for a quorum should be had it would be difficult to obtain a quorum. I do not want to suggest the absence of a quorum. I should not want to carry on without a quorum.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment, until I can make a statement about the resolution?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. The resolution does not call for an appropriation, and even later an appropriation may not be called for. The Senator may remember, from reading the newspapers and from information from other sources, that in August of this year, in northeastern Tennessee, southern Virginia, and western Carolina there was a very severe flood due to a cloudburst. Tremendous damage was done in Carter County and in other counties in Tennessee, when bridges and highways were washed away. This resolution was introduced following that time. It merely asks the War Department to make a survey. Perhaps I am guilty of some dereliction of duty in not having called it to the attention of the Senate sooner.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have no special objection to this measure or to any other. I am merely speaking of the parliamentary procedure. I had the impression that we were merely accommodating one particular item on the calendar because of the special circumstances to which the leader called attention. It now appears that we pass from one item to another. Where will it end? Is that the proper way to legislate? I do not think it is.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no desire to violate the compunctions of Senators who seem to object to this procedure. There is nothing unusual about it. These measures are not of any great importance; but if some Senator raises a question about the procedure, we shall have to let the matter go over until Monday.

SHIPMENT AND DISCHARGE OF SEAMEN

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the observation I am about to make.

There is on the calendar a very important bill, No. 2281, House bill 9982. It passed the House, and an amendment was made by the Committee on Commerce. The bill provides for the Federal Government keeping track of seamen who have not been employed or discharged before a shipping commissioner. It is considered by the Department of Commerce to be a very important bill.

When the bill was reached on the call of the calendar the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] offered an amendment which was not germane to the bill, but was in the nature of a rider. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] objected to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana, and on that objection the bill went over.

The Senator from Indiana states that he is perfectly willing to withdraw his amendment; and the Senator from Montana, who is not present in the Chamber, has assured me that he has no objection to the enactment of the bill. The bill will have to go back to the House, and the House will have to concur in the amendment. I should like to dispose of the bill this afternoon.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I very much regret to disappoint the Senator from Louisiana if it is up to me to disappoint him.

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator is not disappointing me. He is disappointing the Department of Commerce.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am willing to come here tomorrow and serve as a Senator in the United States Senate, and attend to the call of the calendar, and give every Senator an equal opportunity to have both unimportant and important bills considered; but I think when we come to the hour of 5:35, after we have transacted the business we have done today, and many Senators have left the Chamber on the theory that we would not do what is now proposed, we ought not to proceed in this manner. It is not because I have any objection to a particular measure; but I must object to the procedure.

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely wish to say that we shall not have a session tomorrow. I do not know under what theory Senators leave before the Senate adjourns. They certainly were not given any assurance that as soon as the sugar bill was out of the way other matters might not be taken up. It is the custom, along about 5 o'clock, whether we have finished or not, for Senators to drift out. If any Senator wants to take up something to which some other Senator wishes to object, the threat is made that a quorum call will ensue, and therefore it is thought advisable not to take it up.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator.

REGISTRATION OF CERTAIN ORGANIZATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have a conference report which I wish to have disposed of on behalf of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. If I can have it disposed of, I think perhaps we will have an executive session, and then cease and desist for the day.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Is the conference report to which the Senator refers one which deals with House bill 10094, to require the registration of certain organizations such as the Bund, Communist organizations, and the like?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; it deals with that subject.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. For the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] I submit the conference report on House bill 10094.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10094) to require the registration of certain organizations carrying on activities within the United States, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15 and 17.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 7, 14, and 16, and agree to the same.

DISBURSEMENTS BY UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, comment has been made by Mr. Willkie with reference to the disbursements of the United States Government for matters of national defense. I have a compilation which gives the figures from 1929 down to 1940, in terms of dollars, percentage of total Government expenditures, and percentage of the national income, relating to expenditures for national defense. I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be printed in the RECORD following my present remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Expenditures on national defense

	Millions of dollars	Percent of total Government expenditures	Percent of national income
Fiscal years—
1929	680	20.6	0.8
1930	703	20.4	.9

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before we go into executive session, I wish to make a statement.

We must be in session Monday, and possibly Tuesday, in order to wind up some odds and ends of legislation, conference reports, and amendments to House and Senate bills. A number of Senators have made arrangements to leave the city. I hope that early in the week we may be able to arrive at an arrangement by which we may suspend business until some time in November, under one sort of arrangement or another which I cannot at the moment predict. Therefore, I hope Senators who are not required to leave the city will not do so until we shall have determined definitely what sort of arrangement we can make, because it may be necessary to have a quorum during the remainder of the session, until we can enter into some kind of an arrangement. Therefore, unless Senators are compelled to absent themselves from Washington, I hope they may remain here for 3 or 4 days longer.

I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nomination of Thomas E. Truelove to be postmaster at Inglewood, Calif., in place of C. A. Acton.

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Harvey M. Johnsen, of Nebraska, to be judge of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, to fill an existing vacancy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Ingram M. Stainback to be United States District Judge for the District of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frank S. Perkins to be postmaster at Fremont, Nebr., which had been heretofore passed over.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that this nomination be passed over until Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry other nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of the other postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the remaining nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, October 7, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our Lord, we thank Thee for life. Its highest reach is very simple and very grand. It declares the practice of a greatly gracious soul, seeking to be good and to do good, in magnificent daring for the sake of others. We pray Thee to endow us richly with the immortal graces of love and gratitude. Give wisdom that we may know how to use authority and discretion that the use of power may be restrained. Impress us that problems and difficulties should always yield to one solution and that is, a high sense of right. Almighty God, we love our country. What thoughts can exhaust our wonder, what words can express our gratitude for the countless numbers who have died for us. We break our alabasters of thanksgiving upon the memories of those who have made possible our Christian institutions. We pray that we may ever firmly resolve that we would rather die than to live in a world ground down by falsehood and brutality. Let the divine voice call out from the breast of humanity, pursuing all tyrannies to their lowest depths until they reach the margin of the world. In the name of our ever-living Saviour—the Man of Nazareth. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 10412. An act to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 960) entitled "An act extending the classified executive civil service of the United States."

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10094) entitled "An act to require the registration of certain organizations carrying on activities within the United States, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. BURKE, and Mr. DANAHER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 4341. An act to expedite national defense by suspending, during the national emergency, provisions of law that prohibit more than 8 hours' labor in any 1 day of persons engaged upon work covered by contracts of the United States Maritime Commission, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 5 to the bill (H. R. 10464) entitled "An act to assist in the national-defense program by amending sections 3477 and 3737 of the Revised Statutes to permit the assignment of claims under public contract."

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4107) entitled "An act to transfer the jurisdiction of the Arlington Farm, Virginia, to the jurisdictions of the War Department and the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. REYNOLDS, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. MINTON, Mr. AUSTIN, and Mr. GURNEY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2103) entitled "An act to exempt certain Indians and Indian tribes from the provisions of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), as amended," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. FRAZIER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

LETTER FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE TRANSMITTING MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, which was read:

OCTOBER 4, 1940.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Pursuant to the special order agreed to on October 3, 1940, the Clerk of the House received on that day the following message from the Senate:

That the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, the bill (H. R. 10539) entitled "An act making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the afore-mentioned bill; requests a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and appoints Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

Respectfully yours,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.
By H. NEWLIN MEGILL.

FOREIGN SHIPMENTS BY THE DU PONTS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, on September 24, I placed in the RECORD an article by Mr. Guy Richards, New York correspondent of the Chicago Tribune press service, and made some comments thereon.

The article charged that foreign agents in the Du Pont Powder Co. offices "guide war goods to Axis" to the extent of $10,000,000 monthly, and reads in part as follows:

AGENTS IN DU PONT OFFICES GUIDE WAR GOODS TO AXIS—UNITED STATES TRADE WITH GERMANY, ITALY PUT AT $10,000,000 MONTHLY

(By Guy Richards)

NEW YORK, September 23.—Despite the British blockade, American industrialists have found corkscrew routes for pouring into Germany and Italy about $10,000,000 worth of vital war materials every month.

Vast stores of oil, copper, machinery, and cotton are finding their way to Axis territory through Arctic Ocean ports, Spain, Portugal, Cuba, Mexico, and Russia.

BACKED BY BIG BUSINESS

At least five nations are lending their services to American businessmen who have found gold-lined routes for shipping blockade-barred goods into Germany.

These scattered suppliers, dealing through their New York headquarters, have established contacts with agents all over the world. The agents are sponsored in this country by amazingly influential business interests.

It was learned, for example, that the American representative of Juan March, financial backer of General Franco, Spanish dictator, has his desk in the offices of Francis I. du Pont Co., at 1 Wall Street. He receives a regular salary from the firm, which is engaged in the commodity and brokerage business.

BRANCH IN WILMINGTON

Three members of the famous Wilmington (Del.) clan that controls E. I. du Pont de Nemours are partners in this Wall Street firm, which also has a branch in Wilmington. The interest of its senior member, Francis I. du Pont, is secured with 2,000 shares of Hercules Powder common stock—an investment which was forced out of direct Du Pont control by a Sherman antitrust suit of 1912.

Another desk in the Francis I. du Pont office is occupied by Avelino Montes, Jr., the man whom German firms here know as the expert on how to get shipments through Mexico.

The two men—Jose M. Mayorga, Spanish emissary of Franco's Juan March, and Mexico's Avelino Montes—sit side by side in a comfortable suite in the Du Pont offices, on the ninth floor of the building. They are intimate friends and former classmates at the Harvard Business School. By manufacturers anxious to obtain deliveries in Germany they are known as exactly the right people to see.

Yesterday I received a telegram from W. S. Carpenter, Jr., president of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., taking exceptions to the article and my reference thereto which might indicate that the Du Ponts are being taken advantage of. Regardless of how much I may disagree with a person or an organization, my policy has always been to try to be fair. Therefore, I feel honor bound to give the Du Pont viewpoint the same publicity in the RECORD that I accorded to the article of the Chicago Tribune correspondent. I ask unanimous consent to present it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may say that it was given out last year that less than 3 percent of the volume of the Du Pont's business comprised war munitions, so that the people have the wrong idea with reference to the Du Ponts manufacturing and exportation of materials of war.

Mr. SABATH. I do not represent them; nevertheless, in justice to them, I feel they are entitled to have this telegram in the RECORD.

Mr. RICH. That is the reason I make the statement. It is in justice to the Du Ponts. I do not own any Du Pont stock. I wish I did.

Mr. SABATH. Neither do I.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. The telegram reads as follows:

WILMINGTON, DEL., October 2, 1940.

Hon. ADOLPH J. SABATH,
House of Representatives:

My attention was called only today to address you made in House of Representatives September 24 and news article on which you premised your statement. As president of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., I deny categorically all allegations with reference to this company. Reports to which you give credence that "the Du Ponts and their affiliates are monthly exporting $10,000,000 worth of war munitions that finally reach aggressor nations" are wholly untrue. Factually this company has made no munitions shipments whatsoever to any Axis Power directly or indirectly. Because of your interest permit me to advise you regarding our export sales of military powers. From 1933 through 1938 total gross export sales by this company amounted to $895,912. For same period Remington Arms, only affiliate of this company making military products, had gross sales from export of $2,044,634. In 1939 our gross sales from export totaled $475,964 and for Remington for same year $123,068, a combined monthly average of $49,919. For first 8 months of current year our gross sales from export amounted to $1,179,205, with bulk of these sales to Great Britain, China, Finland, and France. Remington sales for same 8 months, $1,341,856, mostly to Great Britain and France. Monthly average for both companies in this period is only $315,133. Not one pound of munitions has been sold by this company or Remington to Germany, Italy, or Japan. Nor do we have any reason to suspect that one pound eventually reaches the Axis Powers. How preposterous the charge we are exporting $10,000,000 worth munitions monthly that finally reach aggressor nations. We cannot but feel keenly when we read such unfounded allegations at a time when we are placing our facilities, our understanding in manufacture, our perseverance and determination to do everything that may be expected of us in serving this Nation and true democracy. I have every confidence foregoing will convince you grave injustice has been done Du Pont and American industry, and that in the interest of truth and accuracy you will want to read this telegram to the House and place it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

W. S. CARPENTER, Jr.,
President, E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.

Mr. SABATH. It will be noted that Mr. Carpenter does not answer many of the specific statements made by Mr. Richards, whose article appeared in various newspapers. It may be that the good intentions of the Du Pont firm have unsuspectingly been taken advantage of.

In any event, I have placed Mr. Carpenter's telegram in the RECORD, as he requested, and no doubt Mr. Richards, of the Chicago Tribune Press Service, will want to express his further views on the subject.

SIDNEY HILLMAN

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROUTZOHN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago Mr. Sidney Hillman, labor member of the National Defense Advisory Commission, asked the Attorney General of the United States for an opinion or a ruling that companies adjudged by the Labor Board to be in violation of the National Labor Relations Act should be barred from Government contracts.

In one of his justly famous messages the Attorney General has given the ruling required of him.

Even this pliable Attorney General could find no basis in law for this contribution to confusion. In fact, Congress refused to pass such a law last year and the year before. The Attorney General's informal opinion cited no law, no statute, no court decisions.

His message is a masterpiece of the kind of short-cut reasoning with which the National Socialists have confused logical and sensible people in giving to their lawless acts the disguise of legality.

Thus, without sanction of law, does he seek to turn our national-defense production over to the whims of this intriguing, Communist-infested agency of the administration, an agency that the record shows has gone out of its way to sabotage industry and create national disunity.

Now, I ask, What does this mean? What is really behind it? Is it just a slick political trick on the eve of election to make it appear that the workers and the management are quarreling, to throw them into apparent opposition upon a question manufactured for the purpose, in irresponsible disregard of the effect upon national defense and national unity? Or is it another of those overclever flank moves of the left-wingers toward national socialism and the political ownership of property?

Is it, in fact, the first move toward the confiscation of property under the cloak of national defense, using the argument that the unlawful acts of the management, as found by the Labor Board and the "yes, sir" Attorney General, make it necessary for the political tools to take over the plant?

Let us get this out in the open right now.

If we are going to do this thing, if we are going to bar the Government from contracting with producers who fall into disfavor with a Government agency, then let us do it honestly by law and not by a curbstone opinion of a pliable dispenser of easy short cuts around the law.

And let us not confine this to the Labor Board. Let us be consistent and say that any person who is in conflict with or who has been found in violation of any ruling by any Government agency shall be barred from Government contracts and participation in the national defense.

Why single out the Labor Board, which the record shows to be the most unreliable of all the Government agencies? If it is a sound principle in law, let us make it apply to all agencies of the Government. [Applause.]

My friend Judge Cox, of Georgia, hands me a list of companies who would be barred from participation in national defense, because they have pending appeals from National Labor Relations Board orders:

General Motors Corporation.
Swift & Co.
Phelps Dodge Corporation.
Wilson & Co.
John A. Roebling Sons Co.
Colorado Fuel & Iron Corporation.
Dow Chemical Co.
H. A. Heintz Co.
Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co.
Automotive Maintenance & Machinery Co.
Bethlehem Steel Co.
Vincennes Steel Co.
Alloy Cast Steel Co.
John Deere Tractor Co., Inc.
Owens-Illinois Glass Co.
E. I. du Pont de Nemours Co.
Ford Motor Co.
National Cash Register Co.
Combustion Engineering Co.
Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc.
United States Pipe & Foundry Co.
Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.
Standard Oil of Indiana.
The Texas Co.
The Nevada Consolidated Copper Corporation.
Phillips Petroleum Co.
P. Lorillard Co.
Valley Steel Products Co.
Maltrup Steel Products Co.
Florence Pipe Foundry & Machine Co.
Lincoln Engineering Co.
Solvay Process Co.
Illinois Tool Works.
McQuay-Norris Manufacturing Co.
Mathieson Alkali Works.
International Shoe Co.
Kirkham Engineering & Manufacturing Co.
Marlin-Rockwell Corporation.
Todd Shipyards Corporation.
Robins Drydock & Repair Corporation.
Acme Air Appliance Co., Inc.
Radburn Motors Co.
Chicago Apparatus Co.
Stornar Manufacturing Co.
Dain Manufacturing Co.
Arma Engineering Co.
Washougha Woolen Mills.
Windsor Manufacturing Co.
Bloomfield Manufacturing Co.

This shows how the National Labor Relations Board is being used to sabotage our national defenses and scuttle private industry.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

HOUSING IN CONNECTION WITH NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10412) to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. LANHAM, Mr. CROWE, and Mr. HOLMES.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter addressed to the editor of the New York Times on September 15.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan and Mr. CUMMINGS asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio address I delivered last night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I see that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HART] is on the floor, and I rise to ask him one question. Last winter there was a question of a fifth Federal judgeship in the State of New Jersey. I objected to it and said I did not think it was necessary. Up to now this fifth Federal judge has not been appointed. I wonder how come, if it was so necessary.

Mr. HART. I may say in reply to the gentleman from New Jersey that he will have to seek the information in some other quarter.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Monday, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

PEACE

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today at the conclusion of the legislative program I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes on the subject of peace.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to proceed at this time?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, peace is still the desire of an overwhelming majority of the American people; but while billions of dollars have been appropriated out of necessity to prepare for war, should it be forced upon us, no special funds have been appropriated to prepare for peace.

From a realistic viewpoint we know that we get what we prepare for. Is it not true?

If there is no adequate study and preparation for a just and lasting peace, we will never, never find such a peace, whether we go into or stay out of this war, whether we arm to the teeth or slide along. Peace, like anything else, must be prepared, must be purchased at a price.

That price is very low and very reasonable as compared to the costs of war. I have just asked the House Appropriations Committee what we have authorized and appropriated this year for war. The answer: Approximately $17,000,000,000.

I have today introduced a resolution asking for a very small appropriation, comparatively speaking, to be used to "prepare for peace." I am asking that we set aside only $50,000,000, and I hope speedy and favorable action will be taken on this very fundamental request.

My resolution is as follows:

PREPARE FOR PEACE

Whereas the Seventy-sixth Congress has appropriated or authorized about $17,000,000,000 for military preparedness; and

Whereas an important national election is now impending, when all peace-loving citizens will justly challenge on their record their former representatives: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this Congress promptly prove that we are not limiting preparation for defense to military means only, but are also attempting to prepare for defense and security by nonmilitary means, such as bona fide efforts for peace; and to this end be it further

Resolved, That the President be, and he hereby is, instructed to take immediate joint action with all possible like-minded governments of nations not at war in offering their services openly and publicly to the belligerents in the cause of peace; and be it further

Resolved, That in order to satisfy the longing for peace of all the peoples of the world a cessation of all hostilities under joint neutral supervision should be openly demanded, and at the same time the actual extension of the system of federation into a world union of nations should be offered and pledged to the belligerents by the joint neutrals as the only practical means of readjusting the status of newly conquered nations or long-held colonies and dominions, of under-privileged or over-privileged states, and permitting mankind to build a new and better civilization in safety, without fear of war and organized destruction: Therefore be it

Resolved, That in order to finance the above-described program of joint neutral efforts for the present and future of the world, the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring) hereby appropriates $50,000,000 as our safest and least costly defense.

This is made especially desirable and needful by reason of the recent alliance agreement of the axis powers, which makes Japan, Italy, and Germany into a powerful military alliance.

PACIFIC PROBLEMS

The outcome of the axis struggle for power is a very important matter because it presents to us a two-ocean peril. Manifestly it would be folly for the United States not to prepare in every way for the possible eventuality of a German-Italian victory, sudden or gradual.

I wonder if it is generally recognized that the peril in which we would then be placed extends to two oceans? Japan's position would be greatly enhanced by the inevitable weakening of British as well as the collapse of the French power and prestige in the Orient—exactly as I pointed out in my address in the House on February 22, 1939, entitled "Is Democracy in Guam?"

DIVISION OF AMERICAN SEA POWER

This would be accompanied in the United States by an immediate logical demand that a large part of the American Navy be transferred from the Pacific to the Atlantic. American naval forces would then be extended along two vast ocean fronts—responsible for the protection of two continents on both the east and the west. They would be faced by a combined sea power greater than their own, backed by superior shipbuilding facilities.

The Atlantic, inadequately defended except along our own coast line and in the Caribbean, might then be circumvented as was the Maginot line. In the Pacific the withdrawal of a large part of the American Navy would promptly remove the chief remaining obstacle to Japanese expansion, by stages, over Shanghai, Hong Kong, Indochina, the Dutch East Indies, Singapore, Australia, New Zealand, and eventually the Philippines. Successive steps in such a program, clearly contemplated by Japanese leaders, would reinvigorate Japan's morale, strengthen her position against China, provide needed sources of vital supplies, and make untenable the position of Burma and India. Thus, Asia, with one-half of the world's population, would come, like Europe, under the domination of an aggressive dictatorship.

Germany, to be sure, would probably seek to keep Japan within bounds in order to obtain as large a share in the expansion—especially at Singapore and the Dutch East Indies—as possible, and to maintain for herself a position of dominance in German-Japanese relations. This may account for current reports of friction between the two countries. But Hitler has shown his capacity, in dealing with Russia, to make sweeping, if temporary, compromises in order to concentrate his energies elsewhere. Japan's continued expansion, moreover, would offer a means toward checking further resistance from outlying parts of the British Empire; it would, at the same time, strengthen a potential ally against the United States. So long as the United States remained the chief obstacle to the revolutionary ambitions of both nations, it is as dangerous to assume that their realistic negotiators would be unable to get together as it was for the British to rely upon irreconcilable friction between Germany and Russia.

The United States, with its vast commitments in this hemisphere, would then be exposed to a gigantic squeeze play, with Germany and Italy dominating Europe and Africa on the one side and Japan largely dominating eastern Asia and the southern Pacific on the other. Under such circumstances the positions of Russia and the United States would be increasingly critical.

The question is thus whether we should not move, if we can do so swiftly and effectively, to prevent such a world-wide alinement of militant dictatorships against us. For clearly we are not prepared for an emergency of such magnitude, and it seems to me that the best way out is a move for a peace organization such as is suggested in the above resolution.

HIGH COST OF WAR

It cost about 75 cents to kill a man in Caesar's time. The price rose to about $3,000 per man during the Napoleonic wars, to $5,000 in our Civil War, and then to $21,000 per man in the World War. But estimates for the present war indicate that it may cost the warring nations not less than $50,000 for each man killed. In other words, shall we appropriate what it costs to kill 1,000 men and thus save millions of men, women, and children? At the price set in my resolution of $50,000,000 for a program to promote peace, if it were used for war, it would kill only 1,000 at present rates, but it might save millions, if spent for peace. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who just preceded me gave a very interesting talk and one that it seems to me should receive more consideration from the House of Representatives. And I shall extemporaneously comment on things pertaining to the subject of war, and so forth.

This country at this time, in my judgment, is in a very precarious condition. We as a Congress are going ahead with these great appropriations and preparation for war and if we continue as we have been doing for the last 30 days, I venture the assertion that within 6 months we will actually be in war, and nothing more detrimental could happen to the American Nation, American life, or American property, or American independence and freedom. As was stated by the gentleman, it is costing $50,000 to kill a man in warfare. Why, gracious goodness, we ought to be thinking of what we can do to save life instead of trying to destroy it, and that was the main point in what the gentleman from Minnesota brought out. He wants to save life and wants to protect American boys and not let anything that may happen in this country lead us into the war at such great cost of life, cost of happiness, cost in sorrow, and cost in misery.

You know the thing that impressed me this morning when we had the prayer by our beloved Chaplain, and it is something that impresses me every morning when the Chaplain gets up here and asks for divine guidance for the House of Representatives, for the Senate, and for the President, when there are not over 25 or 30 Members present at our prayer service—the thought was in my mind when the gentleman from Illinois, awhile ago, wanted to ask for a quorum, why can we not ask for a quorum just before the Chaplain of the House of Representatives leads us in prayer? If we could do that and the Members of the House would listen to the prayers that are being offered by the Chaplain of the House, it would probably be the best lesson and the best speech we could put before this House each day. It would help all and would not injure one person. If the membership would heed what is stated in asking for divine guidance, it might be the cause of turning the hearts of the Members of the Congress of the United States to the point where they would try in some manner, to a greater degree, to keep this country out of war. I believe that nothing better could be done than to invite the membership of the House to be present before the Chaplain offers his prayer. Let us hope our attendance at the opening exercise will be greater in number.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Does the gentleman feel that a majority of the American people are in favor of our keeping out of this war?

Mr. RICH. Well, I would have said 6 months ago there was not a man in the United States who wanted war, but when we see the propaganda that is going on today, it is certainly amazing what a change is taking place in the minds of our people. I was at the Translux Theater last night and if there was ever any propaganda for getting this country into war offered, it was brought out there. You can go to any theater or almost any public place now or read almost any of the papers and you will see that they are creating the sentiment that we ought to get into this war. I hope and pray that the Congress will not be so foolish and that the membership of this House will say that we are not going to vote for war.

I wrote a letter this morning to a person who wanted to know whether I was in favor of sending our boys abroad. I have said time after time that I do not believe that anything can happen, I do not believe that any act they might commit in Europe or in Asia could be bad enough to cause me to vote to send one boy over to Europe to be slaughtered, because I believe that is none of our business and we should not ever think of sending a man across the water again to fight to make the world safe for democracy; we tried it once and it failed, it failed terribly; just look at Europe today; and as far as I am concerned, I do not believe they will ever get me to vote to send a boy across either ocean; in fact, I am sure I will not do so; and if we will tell the President of the United States and Secretary Hull to do a little more toward minding their own business and staying over here and looking after America and the American people, I do not believe we will get into war.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE. I take it from what the gentleman says that nothing would induce him to vote for a declaration of war, the driving off of the seas of our ships or anything else.

Mr. RICH. If anybody comes over here and attacks us I will be the first one to protect this country, but I am talking about a war of aggression and I believe, honestly, Governor, that we are building up this great war machine and doing everything we can with the idea that we will ultimately get into this war. I honestly believe that. If a man came up to you and knocked your hat off, you would not shoot him. You would either have him arrested or try to convince him he was doing what he should not do, and by kindness win his affection.

Mr. PIERCE. Does the gentleman think that Great Britain is in this war voluntarily?

Mr. RICH. No; but it is not our business to kill American boys and girls to protect Great Britain, if you want to know my answer to that. [Applause.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ARNOLD. Does the gentleman know of one Member of the House who wants to join the war over there?

Mr. RICH. No; I do not know a Member of the House——

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 more minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Give him 5 more minutes.

Mr. RICH. If you will give me 5 minutes, I will say this: If you give Great Britain and the people who are putting forth the policy of urging us to sell overage ships, to sell overage tanks, which they are doing right now, and to sell overage guns, and call our Navy overage and call anything else overage, I believe within a short time they would get 150 Members to say that we would enter that war.

Mr. KELLER. Do what?

Mr. RICH. Get us into this war.

Mr. KELLER. Is the gentleman one of them?

Mr. RICH. No; I am telling you that I am not. But let Mr. Roosevelt tell you that he wants to go to war, and I would like to know what your answer would be.

Mr. KELLER. You know very well what it would be without my telling you.

Mr. RICH. You bet your life I think I know. I think you would vote right with him, because you have voted that way for the last 8 years.

Mr. KELLER. Now I want to answer that.

Mr. RICH. You have voted that way most every time for the last 8 years. I do not care who the man is who has followed this New Deal and voted for New Deal policies for the last 8 years, he is only trying to set up in this country a dictatorship. I do not care what man in the House tries to challenge me on what I say, because I am not trying to hurt anybody, but I am telling you that if we want to keep America safe, if we want to follow our Constitution, if we want freedom of the press, freedom of religion, and freedom of speech, you cannot do what we have done in the last 7 years, can you?

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Is the gentleman addressing me?

Mr. RICH. Certainly. You are about as sensible-looking person as I have ever seen. [Laughter.]

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Thank you. You know, when a man cannot say that a woman is good looking, the next best thing is to call her sensible. [Laughter and applause.] I think the gentleman is right and I think the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER] is right. I have every reason to think, from friends in Great Britain who are here for the duration, that not only the people of Great Britain but the people of Germany would like peace if they could have a just peace, but I think it is today as it was in 1917—neither nation wants to lose face. If either one could have a just peace, I am sure they would be glad to have it and take it without exhausting themselves. I think there is only one nation powerful enough today to offer such a peace; that is the United States; but I very much fear that we have placed ourselves in a position where they do not trust us. They fear we are going to try to be straight shooters instead of square shooters. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RICH. That is right. I thank the lady for that very intelligent statement. I agree with her 100 percent. I want to say that Great Britain does not want to fight. The people of Germany do not want to fight. The people of Spain are so sick that they do not want to get in it. I do not believe the Italian people want to fight. I think if we were in a position where we could have a man who could say to those nations, "Why don't you put these things aside, stop wrecking your cities, and stop killing your people," it would be the finest thing in the world. But where have we gotten ourselves? What is the position of our country now in being an arbitrator?

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. It seems to me that anything of that sort we might do before election would be apt to bear the imputation of having political motives, but that after election the Congress could very suitably pass some such resolution.

Mr. RICH. If we do that, I will say that you cannot have anyone who has said, "Mr. Mussolini stuck us in the back," and expect him to be an arbitrator. You know you could not have a man like that, so you have to find somebody else. The only logical man to find is a new President, a new man, who can take a position whereby the people of this world will have confidence in him and have faith in him. That is the kind of a man we will have. [Applause.]

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes; I will yield to you forever if you will get up here and take my place and condemn war and all its horrors.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I want to warn the gentleman that it is very dangerous to say "peace" nowadays, because you run the risk of being called an "appeaser."

Mr. RICH. If anybody says that I am a "fifth columnist" just because I want to talk peace, and I want to keep this Nation out of war, they had better look out and stay far enough away from me, because I am not going to take it. [Laughter.] I think the time is here when we have got to talk plain. I think the time is here, if we want to have a united America that will try to solve the problems of Europe and Asia and stop the war between China and Japan and stop the war in Germany and Italy and England and all of the other countries, we must have a man in America that the Americans have faith in; we must have a man in America that the foreign countries have faith in, or we are going to lose the very position that you would like to have us in—the position of respect we desire among all nations of the world.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Well, I do not trust any man too far, as you know [laughter and applause], but I think that after election the Congress chosen by the people of the United States might form a nonpartisan board for that purpose, appointed by whomever shall be President.

Mr. RICH. Well, I think that is a good suggestion. Whoever is elected in November, as much as I think about some people that might be elected, I will say that it is our duty to bite our lips, get together, both Democrats and Republicans, and say that we are Americans first, and do anything we can to protect our Constitution, our country, and our people.

However, we are coming to the time when there will be an election, and I say right here that I am not for one certain man for President.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. I want to know if the gentleman really knows what is going on in the world. I want to know if the gentleman has read Mein Kampf, Hitler's own book. Has he read what Hitler is doing; what Hitler is attempting to do; what he says he is going to do? Does the gentleman know anything about it? He does not talk as if he did.

Mr. RICH. I may say to the gentleman from Oregon that Mr. Hitler never took me into his confidence; he never told me what he was going to do, and I do not think he will ever do all he says he will do in his book. I do not think he can do it, if you mean he is coming over next to bottle us here in America.

Mr. PIERCE. The gentleman speaks as if he did not know what was going on in the world, or what Hitler has said.

Mr. RICH. I would not put any faith in that. I have no faith in any statement he makes. But I can tell the gentleman very positively I am never going to salute "heil Hitler," nor am I going to salute "heil Roosevelt." I will be shot first. [Applause.]

Mr. PIERCE. The gentleman just does not know what is going on in the world.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. McCORMACK]. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that over the radio this morning I heard a program of questions to Mr. Willkie and what Mr. Willkie had to say in answer concerning his attitude toward the war. That program went out over a national hook-up. Later in the day I shall ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including that statement, and may I ask the House——

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Not just now; may I ask the membership, if they did not hear that broadcast, to read the statement which I shall insert in the RECORD if permitted to do so?

Mr. RICH. I know Mr. Willkie is going to keep us out of war if he is elected President of the United States. I know he, if elected President of the United States, will use his every effort to bring about peace between nations. He will help all classes in this country, he will help the farmer, the laboring man, everybody in America, and spread abroad through this land the spirit of living under, abiding by, and living up to the Constitution of the United States. Mr. Willkie is going to be the man who will insure the continuance of freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and freedom of religion. And after the election we are all going to get together and help Mr. Willkie cement us together in the bonds of brotherly love so that we shall not only be able to help America but because of the position Mr. Willkie will have attained by that time he will be able to settle the differences of countries all over the world. Peace will come again to the nations on earth, happiness will abound everywhere, and the God of Heaven will reign eternally. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, of all the optimists of whom I have ever heard, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is entitled to the blue ribbon when he stands here on this floor and tells you that Wendell L. Willkie, if, when, and provided this country should ever experience the calamity of having him for President, would inspire confidence, spread prosperity, and promote the peace of mankind. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] said he would place in the RECORD later a statement his candidate made as to what he proposed to do—if elected. If he heard Mr. Willkie say anything about what he intended to do, I advise him to put it in the RECORD now, before Mr. Willkie changes his mind or reads another speech written by somebody else. [Applause.]

I have heard with amazement, and read with confusion, the speeches delivered by Mr. Willkie on his western swing. I do not believe I have read anything or heard anything to compare with it since Don Quixote, with his wooden sword and paper crown, marched across the plains of western Europe to fight the windmills and the funeral processions with which he came in contact. There has not been such a spectacle in a national campaign since Andrew Gump made his famous bid for the Presidency a few years ago. [Laughter.]

Like Andrew Gump, Mr. Willkie seems to be all things to all men. He went out West and told the farmers he was going to lower the taxes on their lands. If he was serious when he made, or read that speech, which must have been written in New York, because anybody outside of Wall Street would have known that the President of the United States could not have anything to do with the taxes on the farmers' lands. [Applause.] If he was serious when he made, or read, that statement, he showed his ignorance of the farmers' problems. If he was not serious, he showed contempt for the farmers' intelligence.

He talks about democracy, after having been connected with one of the greatest monopolies in the country—one that has been engaged in breaking down our democracy for the last 20 years.

He talks about freedom of the press, after the utility of which he was the head went down to Chattanooga, Tenn., and used the money wrung from the helpless users of electricity to destroy a local newspaper because it was appealing for justice for the power consumers in the Tennessee Valley area.

Freedom of the press. He is evidently for freedom of the utility-controlled press only.

He stood before the farmers of Indiana and waved a receipt for his electric light and power bill and said his bill was too high, that the Rural Electrification Administration was overcharging him. He was at that moment advertising to the people of Indiana the fact that they never would have had electricity on the farms of that State if it had not been for the Rural Electrification Administration created by the Roosevelt administration. [Applause.]

He tells you he is for rural electrification. When did he get that way? I am one man in this House who can give you some evidence of his activities with reference to rural electrification. In my opinion, he is rural electrification's public enemy No. 1. The Commonwealth & Southern, of which he was the head, owns the Mississippi Power Co. That company built one short rural power line in the county in which I live—Lee County, Miss.—and they charged the farmers $3.25 a month "line charge," whether they used any electricity at all or not, and then charged 5 cents a kilowatt-hour for the electricity used. That made 25 kilowatt-hours of electricity a month cost a farmer on that line $4.50.

Our cooperative power association bought that line and is now charging $1.00 for 25 kilowatt-hours a month, and 25 cents of that $1.00 goes to help pay for the line, making 25 kilowatt-hours of electricity a month cost him 75 cents instead of $4.50, the amount charged by the Willkie utility when these farmers had no way of protecting themselves.

Remember it is the same line, the same farmer, and the same power. At that time the Commonwealth & Southern was buying this power wholesale from the Government at Muscle Shoals at 2 mills a kilowatt-hour, under a contract made with the Republican administration, but when a farmer on this line got 25 kilowatt-hours of it he paid Mr. Willkie's company $4.50.

Now the cooperative power association is buying this same Muscle Shoals power wholesale from the T. V. A. at 5.5 mills a kilowatt-hour, and the same farmer on the same line gets 25 kilowatt-hours a month for 75 cents instead of $4.50—or just exactly one-sixth of what he paid the Willkie company for it.

And I might add that his companies tried to kill off rural electrification by building spite lines as interferences until the farmers in some sections took their shotguns and ran the men who were building those spite lines off their lands.

Mr. Willkie stood on the banks of the Columbia River a few days ago and tried to lead the people of Oregon and Washington to believe that he was in favor of public power, after trying all these years to destroy the T. V. A., the greatest weapon the American people have ever had for their protection against the extortionate overcharges the private power companies have been exacting for electric energy.

Mr. Willkie pretends that he reduced light and power rates in the T. V. A. area, when as a matter of fact his companies never reduced rates in that section until the competition of the T. V. A. compelled them to do so; and they never reduced them elsewhere until the publication of the T. V. A. yardstick rates showed the people what electricity was worth, and an aroused public opinion forced them to lower their rates to keep down competition.

Mr. Willkie talks about common honesty in his attacks on the Roosevelt administration. In his speech at Seattle, Wash., he said:

> Nowadays it is about as hard to start a new business as it is to rob a bank, and the risks of going to jail are about as great in both cases.

The only new business organized in recent years with which Mr. Willkie has been connected that I know anything about, was the superholding company known as the Commonwealth & Southern. Every man connected with the gigantic fraud that was committed when that company was organized probably ought to have gone to jail.

According to the report of the Federal Trade Commission, it was one of the most brazen acts of its kind every committed. Was Mr. Willkie one of the guilty parties? We will let the record speak.

The record of the Federal Trade Commission shows that in February 1930 the Commonwealth & Southern was formed by the merger of four small companies, the Allied Power & Light Corporation, the Penn-Ohio Edison Co., the Commonwealth Power Corporation, and the Southeastern Power & Light Co.

The day those corporations were merged into the new Commonwealth & Southern the ledger value of their securities amounted to $340,896,260.27. They were placed on the books of the new Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, that same day, at $872,101,832.19, or a write-up of $531,205,571.92.

What did that extra $531,205,571.92 represent? It represented wind, water, and Power Trust rascality!

Do not take my word concerning this diabolical transaction, but let the record speak. I quote from the report of the Federal Trade Commission, which investigated this proposition:

> A table showing the ledger value of securities owned by each of the merged companies at the date of merger, and ledger values of the same securities as shown by the records of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation on the same date, is presented below:

	Ledger value of securities owned as shown by books of—		Appreciation
	Merged companies	Commonwealth & Southern Corporation
1	2	3	4
Allied Power & Light Corporation	$3,573,997.65	$21,583,038.35	$18,009,040.70
Penn-Ohio Edison Co	47,301,400.22	107,341,619.23	60,040,219.01
Commonwealth Power Corporation	89,742,899.05	372,234,258.32	282,491,359.27
Southeastern Power & Light Co	200,277,963.35	370,942,916.29	170,664,952.94
Total	340,896,260.27	872,101,832.19	531,205,571.92

> The total difference shown in column 4 of the table, in the amount of $531,205,571.92, represents the appreciation in ledger values of the securities formerly owned by the four merged or consolidated companies as valued on the books of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation immediately after the merger.

With one stroke of the pen they inflated those values $531,205,571.92, and then proceeded to sell securities against those inflated valuations. That is what they call thievery within the law.

While Mr. Willkie and his cohorts are clamoring for law enforcement, why not enforce the law against using the mails to defraud? Every time an official, an attorney, an agent, or a representative of the Commonwealth & Southern wrote a letter, a circular, or a postal card to induce people to buy stock in the Commonwealth & Southern, or to invest in its securities in any way, with this $531,000,000 of water in its capital structure, and sent it through the mail, they violated the laws against using the mails to defraud.

The Attorney General of the United States should investigate this proposition thoroughly, and enforce the law just as rigorously against these utility racketeers as he would enforce it against the misguided individual who uses the mails to swindle his neighbor out of a few dollars.

Shall we continue the prosecution of Hopson for using the mails to defraud in connection with the misconduct of the Associated Gas & Electric Co. and at the same time permit the ones who perpetrated this gigantic steal to escape?

Our Government is being destroyed from within by these vast monopolies that disregard human rights, disregard the laws of the land in the perpetration of such misconduct, as well as by their wholesale robbery of the unprotected public.

Now let us look back of this Commonwealth & Southern and see what we find. As I said, the formation of the Commonwealth & Southern resulted from the consolidation of the four holding companies listed in the Federal Trade Commission's report. The Penn-Ohio Edison was a holding company incorporated in 1923 under the laws of Delaware. This holding company owned all the common stock of six operating companies and 99 percent of the common stock of the Northern Ohio Power & Light Co.

These operating companies then supplied power to 800,000 people in northeastern Ohio and western Pennsylvania, and included service to such principal cities as Akron, Youngstown, Salem, Ohio, and Sharon in Pennsylvania. The operation of these companies was contracted and placed under the supervision of the Allied Power & Light Corporation.

The Commonwealth Power Co. was also a holding company incorporated under the Maine laws in 1922. Its operating subsidiaries then served 621 communities, with an estimated population exceeding 2,360,000 located in Michigan, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Tennessee, and Georgia. The Michigan operations were conducted by two major operating companies, namely, the Consumers Power Co. and the Southern Michigan Light & Power, and covered about 345 cities and towns with a population exceeding 1,525,000.

The Illinois properties then consisted of three operating companies, namely, the Central Illinois Light, Illinois Power, and the Illinois Electric Power Co. The first two companies served 48 cities, with a population exceeding 250,000, and included such large cities as Peoria and Springfield. In Springfield, Mr. Willkie's company operates in competition with Springfield's municipal plant and has had to meet the competition of the public-plant rates. The Illinois Electric Power Co. was a generating company wholesaling to the Illinois properties and to foreign private companies. The Indiana operations of the Commonwealth were carried on by the Southern Indiana Operating Co., centering around Evansville and reaching a territory with population in excess of 125,000.

The Ohio operations of the Commonwealth Co. were conducted by the Ohio Edison Co., which served 45 communities with population exceeding 105,000, in and around Springfield.

The Commonwealth Power Co. in 1925 acquired the Tennessee Electric Power Co. Tennessee Electric Power Co. then served 139 communities in Tennessee and 5 in northern Georgia and wholesaled to other private companies servicing over 100 communities in eastern Tennessee. The population of the communities directly served by Tennessee Electric Power Co. exceeded 375,000. This original Commonwealth Co. formed the backbone of the property later sold to the T. V. A. In addition to these holding and operating companies, Commonwealth operated through the Utilities Coal Corporation coal mines in Illinois and Kentucky.

The Southeastern Power & Light was also a holding company formed in 1924 to acquire the Alabama Power Co., Southeastern Fuel Co., Georgia Power Co., South Carolina Power Co., Mississippi Power Co., the Gulf Power Co., and the Gulf Electric Co. These subsidiaries at the time of the merger served 868 communities and a population of approximately 5,000,000. The object of this organization was to get control of the power to be generated at Muscle Shoals.

The Allied Power & Light was a combined holding, engineering, construction, and supervising company. It was formed in 1928 by acquiring the business and contracts of Hodenpyl, Hardy & Co., and Stevens & Wood, and handled all the engineering, construction, and supervision for all the original Commonwealth properties and the Penn-Ohio Edison.

WILLKIE'S BACKGROUND

I trust that you have followed closely the dates of the above mergers so that we can compare Mr. Willkie's own statement of experience, as given in Who's Who. After a short tenure with the Firestone Rubber Co., in a subordinate legal position in 1919, Mr. Willkie joined the Akron law firm of Mather & Nesbit in 1919, which connection he continued until 1929. This firm were the attorneys for the Ohio Edison. In those early holding-company days, the principal work of the local attorneys was lobbying before legislatures and regulatory bodies, franchise renewals, and rate fixing.

In 1927 and 1928 Mr. Willkie was lobbying at the National Capital against the Walsh investigation resolution, and assisting Weadock, who represented the National Electric Light Association in opposing that resolution. One of the briefs filed before the Senate committee in opposition to the Walsh resolution was prepared by Mather, Nesbit & Willkie, attorneys for the Ohio utility. Remember this was the resolution under which the Federal Trade Commission was operating when it uncovered the rascality perpetrated in the organization of the Commonwealth & Southern in which more than $531,000,000 of water was poured into the capital structure.

In 1929 Mr. Willkie moved to New York to become associated with his old N. E. L. A. associate, Mr. Weadock, in the firm of Weadock and Willkie, general counsel of the Commonwealth & Southern. The records indicate that this firm's only client was Commonwealth & Southern. Mr. Willkie's New York firm continued in this capacity until Mr. Willkie was elected president of the Commonwealth & Southern in 1933.

The Commonwealth & Southern was a Morgan-Bonbright creation. The New York Times of May 24, 1933, shows that George H. Howard, one of the Commonwealth & Southern directors was a ground-floor participant in the stock-market cuts of J. P. Morgan & Co. It will be remembered that friends of J. P. Morgan were given blocks of stock below the market price. Anyone interested in this phase of manipulation can brush up by reading the long record of the 1933 Senate banking investigation.

Anyone with realistic information on corporate practice knows that all political, public policy, financial, and franchise matters are handled by a corporation's legal counsel. The corporation counsel in one of these useless holding companies is the assistant chief of staff, who is supposed to guide the financial big shots so that thievery within the law can be accomplished without interference.

From 1919 up to the Republican convention of 1940, Mr. Willkie's entire experience (except a short initial interval with Firestone) was with the legal staff of Commonwealth & Southern and predecessor companies. He was a part of this legal staff when all these mergers and manipulations took place. At no time was he connected directly with the actual operations, or the task of making the wheels go around. The actual operation of the properties with which Mr. Willkie was associated, were handled by Hodenpyl & Hardy, Stevens and Wood, and the Allied Power, and since the dissolution of the engineering adjuncts, this phase of Commonwealth & Southern business has been handled by the operating men in these two organizations and those who came over with the Commonwealth merger.

Mr. Willkie's entire utility background—and that is the sum total of his business experience—has been in the field of legal legerdemain. He was in the set-up as an assistant chief of staff and chief of staff, during all the manipulations of the Commonwealth & Southern and its predecessors for the last 20 years. In spite of General Johnson's assertion, Mr. Willkie was in the picture when Penn-Ohio Edison was formed in 1923, and when Penn-Ohio Edison was a component in the assembly of the Commonwealth & Southern in 1929.

WATERED SECURITIES

As I have pointed out, at the time the Commonwealth & Southern was formed, the ledger value—book property account—of the companies forming the combine was $340,896,260.19. This value, according to the Federal Trade Commission, had been previously written up in the 1922–23 and succeeding combinations. Prior write ups were found by the Federal Trade Commission, but the total prior write ups can only be reached by estimate. The "per customer ledger value" of the four holding companies going in the Commonwealth & Southern combination indicates a write up of around $38 per customer. The first full year's report of the Commonwealth & Southern shows 1,053,759 electric consumers. Therefore, by such an estimate the prior write up was at least $40,000,000. This is a conservative estimate as it neglects the gas, ice, transportation, and water properties.

In addition to these prior write ups an actual audit of the books of the Commonwealth & Southern by the Federal Trade Commission discloses another write up, as I said, of $531,205,572 in the formation of the giant holding company known as the Commonwealth & Southern, which serves, or is served by, a population of nearly 10,000,000. Against these write ups new securities were issued and sold. The 1930 report of the Commonwealth & Southern sets out the plant account as $1,032,252,068, and securities outstanding, plus current debt, as $1.005 per $1 of ledger value—the ledger securities outstanding and the plant value for balance-sheet purposes were practically the same.

Exclusive of the funded and current debt and preferred stock of the subsidiaries, the balance sheet shows the holding company issuing and selling $150,000,000 of $6 no par preferred stock, $51,900,000 of Commonwealth & Southern debt obligations, 33,673,328 shares of common stock and 17,588,956 common-stock option warrants.

As is known by those familiar with holding-company manipulations, the control of the common stock of the subsidiaries is the key step in the formation of a superholding company. Accordingly in the first half of 1929, with the panic in sight, the insiders of Morgan & Co. and Bonbright started the Commonwealth & Southern vehicle upon which the public was to take an inglorious ride. The gas which started this vehicle was $15,000,000 of Bonbright cash and $13,000,000 of Morgan cash, borrowed from two Morgan utilities. This and something like $15,000,000 other cash was used to buy up substantial amounts of the common stock of the three major underlying holding companies. This initial control stock was purchased by the insiders at $19 per share.

With the common stocks in their possession, the inside manipulators then commenced negotiations to trade the remaining common shares of the underlying holding companies for Commonwealth & Southern shares at a price which ranged from $24 to $24.40 per share. The next month Commonwealth & Southern shares were placed on the New York curb market and daily transactions ran into hundreds of thousands. Nine days after listing, trading in Commonwealth & Southern shares exceeded the million mark. The ride was on and the reluctant share owners of the subsidiaries rushed in to trade the remaining subsidiary shares for proposed Commonwealth & Southern common. This is how Commonwealth & Southern was formed and the public was coaxed for a ride. In 22 days the vehicle had been created, the insiders had a $15,000,000 profit on the original shares and the investing public had climbed aboard. By October 1929, Commonwealth & Southern common reached nearly $25 per share.

As bait, over 17,000,000 shares of option shares were issued at $30 per share. The traders advised that the shares would reach $50 by the end of the year. The shameful fraud of this stock-jobbing manipulation can be shown by a few simple figures.

The 33,673,328 common shares at, say, $25 a share represent $840,000,000. At $50 a share, anticipated, this common would represent $1,680,000,000. The 17,588,956 options at the issuing price represent $527,000,000. On top of these huge amounts were $916,000,000 of Commonwealth & Southern and subsidiary bonds, preferred stocks, and other obligations, such as customers' deposits, and so forth. Think of the fantasy of a paper value of $2,283,000,000 to $3,123,000,000 for a legitimate ledger value of only about $301,000,000—actual ledger value—of subsidiaries of the Commonwealth & Southern, less prior write ups, or $340,896,260.27 at the time the company was formed. I would like to ask Mr. Willkie what the rates would have to be to support such a capital structure which his inside friends and employers erected in 1929.

Did they use the mails to defraud in selling their watered stocks against these inflated values?

Today the options are worthless.

Mr. Willkie in his last balance sheet placed the common at $168,366,640, or $5 per share. The market value of the common share is now around $1.25, or $42,000,000. The paper stock and option write down amounted to one and three tenths billion dollars. The investors became victims. Weadock and Willkie were assistant chiefs of staff during the time of the transactions.

Even with the write down on 33,000,000 shares of common to $5, the electric book value per customer of the Commonwealth & Southern is $672 per customer. When Mr. Willkie took over the presidency of Commonwealth & Southern, the company had the second highest per-customer valuation in the country. The per-customer reduction from $833 in 1930 to $672 in 1938 arose not from any substantial lowering of capitalization but from taking on more customers.

Compare these figures with $303 for Insull's Commonwealth Edison, and $264 for all the public municipal plants in America. If Mr. Willkie's company had been efficiently operated financially, as the average public plant in America, it would have $550,000,000 less securities outstanding. Tacoma, Washington, has an outstanding debt of $123.50 per customer. The average American municipal plant has, through amortization, an outstanding debt of only $94 per customer. Mr. Willkie's company in spite of stock write downs, still has securities outstanding in excess of $670 per customer.

All the magazine talk of Mr. Willkie's rate-reducing policies is pure "hokum." The only way that he can reduce his company's rates to the T. V. A. yardstick level is by putting the Commonwealth & Southern through the wringer and squeezing the water out of its capital structure. Any intelligent person knows that it is impossible for Mr. Willkie's company to reach Tacoma rate levels with $670 per customer of securities outstanding, compared with $123.50 for Tacoma. To argue otherwise is willful deceit. But it can be done by squeezing the water out of the capital structure and eliminating the waste, graft, and extravagance.

WILLKIE'S OVERCHARGE

In the year 1938, before the T. V. A. sale, Willkie's companies overcharged their electric consumers $60,510,000 per year based on Tacoma rates. The details of these overcharges are given in the following table:

Overcharges of subsidiaries of Commonwealth & Southern for different classes of service, calendar year 1938, based on Tacoma's filed tariffs

Operating company	State	Residential overcharges	Commercial and industrial overcharges	Highway and street lights, etc.	Other utilities and railroads	Total
Alabama Power Co	Alabama	$2,190,000	$4,865,000	$218,000	[1] $243,000	$7,030,000
Georgia Power Co	Georgia	3,310,000	7,231,200	455,000	[1] 706,000	10,290,200
Tennessee Electric Power Co	Tennessee	2,325,000	3,810,100	159,000	368,000	6,662,100
Consumers Power Co	Michigan	5,635,000	8,763,500	561,000	220,100	15,179,600
Ohio Edison Co	Ohio	3,312,000	4,515,600	356,000	754,000	8,937,600
South Carolina Power Co	South Carolina	578,000	987,300	70,900	[1] 34,900	1,601,300
Central Illinois Light Co	Illinois	1,044,000	1,812,100	293,500	168,000	3,317,600
Gulf Power Co	Florida	379,000	498,200	35,050		912,250
Pennsylvania Power Co	Pennsylvania	854,000	1,171,800	120,800	74,200	2,220,800
Mississippi Power Co	Mississippi	650,000	1,900,000	316,500	91,400	2,957,900
Southern Indiana Gas & Electric	Indiana	589,000	768,000	69,800	[1] 26,150	1,400,650
Total		20,866,000	36,322,800	2,655,550	665,650	60,510,000

[1] Below Tacoma average rate +.

In spite of these rate overcharges, Mr. Willkie operated his companies from 1933 to date by reducing guaranteed dividends on preferred stocks. Up to the date of the Republican convention, Mr. Willkie's company was in arrears to his Commonwealth & Southern preferred stockholders $16.50 per share, or $24,800,000 on 1,500,000 shares. He was only able to keep his head above water by taking $24,800,000 from his preferred stockholders and writing down the common stock from the original sale price of $24 a share to less than $5 a share, or $19 a share on 33,673,328 shares, which represents a loss to them of $640,000, and it has now dropped to $1.25 a share, as the daily market reports show.

With this record of Mr. Willkie's, and the record of the forces with which he trains before us, I find it impossible to follow the optimistic gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] when he tells us that Mr. Willkie is the man to elect

President of the United States if we want to inspire confidence, spread prosperity, and restore the peace and happiness of mankind. [Applause.]

TRANSFERRING OF JURISDICTION OF ARLINGTON FARM TO WAR DEPARTMENT AND DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 4107, to transfer the jurisdiction of the Arlington Farm, Virginia, to the jurisdiction of the War Department and the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes, with House amendments, insist on the House amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what property does this bill transfer?

Mr. JONES of Texas. This involves the Arlington Farm over across the river.

Mr. RICH. You are transferring it where?

Mr. JONES of Texas. To the War Department.

Mr. RICH. Is that for the duration of the war?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No. They are using part of it now.

Mr. RICH. Is that where they are building the camp on this side of Arlington Cemetery?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I understand they have stationed some soldiers there.

Mr. RICH. We are taking that land which was formerly a farm experimental station and now building an Army camp on it?

Mr. JONES of Texas. They are going to use it for that purpose and for protection purposes for the bridge and for the city.

Mr. RICH. Is it going to cost the Federal Government anything to make that transfer?

Mr. JONES of Texas. It is going to cost the Federal Government nothing to make the transfer. There will be a provision and has been provision in a bill for the purchase of other areas for the work of the farm that is now being done there and for some adjacent land that will be purchased.

Mr. RICH. I understand we have between here and Baltimore great areas of land which are now used by these experimental stations. Why is it necessary to have additional land for that purpose? Especially near the District of Columbia line, where land is so expensive.

Mr. JONES of Texas. This particular organization tests the new plants and seeds that have been brought in here to see that no pests and no diseases are transmitted to various parts of the country. They do a very fine work in protecting the country against the importation of diseases that might affect plants. They have done a great deal of exceptionally good work. There is some work that has been done in various sections of the country that I might question the benefit of, but not the work of this organization.

Mr. RICH. I think the particular thing they are trying to do is fine, but I question very much, with the acreage that the Agriculture Department has in close proximity to Washington, whether we ought to go out now and buy additional land.

Mr. JONES of Texas. They claim they have no available land nearby, and this must be nearby for the particular purpose they use it. As a matter of fact, may I say to the gentleman, that the Department of Agriculture is not anxious to have this done. They prefer to keep it, but the Army thinks this is a desirable place to have men stationed for the protection of the bridge and for the protection of the city.

Mr. RICH. I am not interested in embarrassing the Army or the Department of Agriculture, but I think the Federal Government is going out and buying entirely too much land. It owns too much ground now. It is getting into business of all kinds. After a while there will not be an opportunity for the individuals of this country. We are just socializing the country, making it a communistic nation.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The greater part of this is not for the buying of the land, but for the moving of the equipment and the establishment of the necessary buildings and stations to do the work.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. Are they using this land to test the seed that is sent here by different States?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Plants and seeds brought in from different countries. Occasionally we must bring in seeds and plants from other countries, and they are brought in under the right to bring them in. They require them to be sent here and be tested so that diseases of plants will not scatter throughout the country. They also make tests to determine the suitability of plants for different sections of the country.

Mr. ENGEL. How many acres of land are they buying for this testing purpose?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not know.

Mr. ENGEL. How much an acre are they paying?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not believe they have actually located the land yet. This is just to make the fund available to duplicate their work and activities. I assume they will buy just such amount as will be necessary. I understand they have options on some land between Washington and Baltimore.

Mr. ENGEL. I imagine this land across the river here is worth $1,000 an acre.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes. They will not pay anything like the price that land would bring for the new land, so they assure me.

Mr. ENGEL. Why should they not go out a distance where they could get land more reasonably?

Mr. JONES of Texas. They are going to be some distance farther away, but it is necessary to have it near the city as a matter of saving expense of operation.

Mr. ENGEL. Could the gentleman obtain the information for the RECORD as to the number of acres and how much they are paying per acre for this land they expect to buy?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I understand they have an option on a 700-acre tract a few miles out of Washington—about 700 acres—at an average price of approximately $300 per acre. That is the substance of the information that I have been furnished. That is the land that will probably be procured.

Mr. ENGEL. How many acres did they say they wanted to buy?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not know that they have actually determined that. I believe they said they needed between 400 and 700 acres of land. Perhaps it would be necessary to purchase a small amount more in order to secure the proper type.

Mr. ENGEL. How much of an appropriation are they authorized to have for this purpose?

Mr. JONES of Texas. The total appropriation for the moving, the construction of the buildings, the purchase of the land, and the furnishing of the essential equipment is $3,000,000.

Mr. ENGEL. How much of that did they say in the hearings—there were hearings, I assume—was for the purchase of this 600 acres of land?

Mr. JONES of Texas. They did not give the exact figures, although it is my understanding that much less than a third of it will be used for the purchase of land. I am not qualified to give the gentleman any specific assurance on it except that they said the land was not by any means the chief element of cost.

Mr. ENGEL. Does the gentleman mean to say that a third of $3,000,000 is going to be used to buy 600 acres?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No. I do not have the information and I do not believe they have, because they do not know just what land they will ultimately secure. However, I think they will probably obtain the land on which they now have an option.

Mr. ENGEL. The reason I am asking is that one of the departments came before our committee with a proposal to spend $1,200 an acre for cemetery land. We turned it down, and they paid $800 an acre for it. I am afraid we are having the same proposition here.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That particular thing is not going to be done by this organization.

Mr. ENGEL. It will have to come before the Appropriations Committee for the money, and justify the appropriation?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Certainly, they will have to get the appropriation.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. This is a bill that was on the Consent Calendar last week?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; it was passed last week.

Mr. KEAN. Was there not a larger authorization than $3,000,000? It seems to me there were two authorizations, for $8,000,000, I believe.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman was asking only about the appropriation for the purchases of new properties and equipment, the new properties for the experiment farm and station. There is an additional authorization for the purchase of the adjacent properties over there which the War Department will need, including the old Washington-Hoover Airport, and which are also needed to prevent the erection of buildings which would interfere with the landing field at the new airport.

Mr. KEAN. So the total authorizations are about $8,000,000?

Mr. JONES of Texas. The total authorization for the purchase of land is $5,000,000 for the War Department.

Mr. KEAN. Can the gentleman tell me whether the Senate changed these figures?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No; the Senate left the figures as they are. They simply disagreed to the House amendments. The gentleman recalls that we took out the provision for the National Parks Service and put in the bill a provision that if enough of the land was not needed to enable the Department of Agriculture to continue there they should continue without purchasing the new land. It does not direct the purchase of the new land, but conditions it upon the need of the War Department for the present site. In other words, the House safeguarded the provision of the authorization by providing that they should use it only in the event the Army found it necessary to use so much of the land that it could not be continued for experimental purposes.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. Does the Department have authority either in this bill or in general law to take land through condemnation proceedings in case the owners ask more for the land than the land is worth?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I understand they can do that for any public purpose. They have general authority on that.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I wish to say here that there is no one in the House of whom I think more of than the gentleman from Texas, who has charge of agricultural legislation, but I want to ask the gentleman this question. If we are going to do this experimental work, why do we have to have a farm so close to the District of Columbia? Just 10 to 15 miles from here the Department of Agriculture has thousands of acres of land. Why could not that land be used?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Where do they have those thousands of acres near here?

Mr. RICH. Between here and Baltimore, about 10 or 15 miles out on the road to Baltimore.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I understand that the land they own anywhere near Washington is already being used. As I stated to the gentleman, I do not undertake to defend every particular type of experimentation that may be carried on throughout the country, but this particular work is national work and it is for the protection of the entire Nation.

Mr. RICH. We want the work to go on, but I say this now, let us get down to brass tacks. If the gentleman will use his influence to get the Department of Agriculture to put this experimental station on this land within 10 miles of the District line, we can save spending $2,500 an acre for ground over here that they may buy, and perhaps it will cost $5,000 an acre. This country cannot afford to buy land at that price as a farm and nobody knows it better than the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that we went over this very thoroughly and questioned them very closely about the necessity of acquiring the land and also urged upon them the necessity of going a little farther out and buying land on a much cheaper basis, and I want to assure the gentleman that I am in thorough accord with that sentiment. I do not want them to pay $1 more than is essential, but I do want this particular work, which protects the entire country, to be continued.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman will try his best with the Department of Agriculture I am sure he will see that within a year they will be using its experimental station on the Baltimore Pike, within 10 to 15 miles of the District, for this particular purpose, and we will not buy this ground at $2,500 an acre.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If they can use that land or a part of it I shall certainly be anxious for them to do it and I shall urge them to do it.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. Has the gentleman fully determined that this land is going to cost $2,500 an acre?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Oh, no; I do not believe the land they will purchase will cost anything like that amount. It is the extra land over here that the War Department wants that may cost a considerable sum, but that is for military purposes and for protection of the city of Washington and, certainly, in the light of modern warfare we do need some protection here.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Mr. JONES of Texas, Mr. FULMER, and Mr. HOPE.

TWO HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF THOMAS JEFFERSON

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution 100, Seventy-sixth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the United States Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of Thomas Jefferson the following Members of the House: Mr. SMITH of Virginia, Mr. BLOOM of New York, Mr. COX of Georgia, and Mr. CULKIN of New York.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a brief article from the Commercial Appeal, of Memphis, Tenn., which gives a very clear and concise statement with respect to the excess-profits-tax bill recently passed; and allow me to suggest that Members desiring a clear, concise, and brief statement on that measure will be interested in reading this article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

THE UNITED STATES AND THE EUROPEAN WAR

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, a remarkable interview with the new Japanese foreign minister, obtained by Larry Smith, International News Service correspondent, is carried in the Washington Times-Herald and other newspapers today.

In this interview the foreign minister, Matsuoka, asserts that Japan is ready to fight if the United States insists on the status quo in Asia, or if the United States enters the European war.

Many of us in this House have repeatedly warned that the "meddling" policies of President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull gravely endanger the peace of this Nation. The statements of the Japanese foreign minister are simply added evidence of the possible disastrous consequences of the war policy of the Roosevelt administration—a policy which has been marked by undiplomatic utterances, denunciation of powers with whom we are at peace, inviting war while we are totally unprepared.

I do not know that there is anything Congress can do about this unfortunate situation. Certainly in its present frame of mind it will never vote for a declaration of war; but, in common with many of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, I am apprehensive that the President and his Secretary of State will, by hook or crook, bring about an incident that will make America's entrance into the war inevitable.

I am as firmly convinced as I can possibly be of anything that if Mr. Roosevelt is reelected President of the United States we will assuredly go into this war as we went into the first World War following the election of Woodrow Wilson. Indeed, I am not so sure that this administration is not prepared to plunge the country into war before election if that becomes necessary for the success of the third term.

Politicians may prate about being opposed to war, but what credence can we place in any such pledges when they emanate from individuals who have repeatedly broken their solemn pledges? It is most disagreeable to have to make a statement like this concerning the Chief Executive of our country, but I am afraid that we are going to war, maybe before election. I am satisfied that we are going to get into it immediately following the election.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does not the gentleman think by reason of his long experience here in Congress, and the gentleman has served here as long and as honorably as any Member of Congress, that the sentiment in the country is overwhelmingly in favor of Congress remaining close to the Capitol?

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, absolutely.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does not the gentleman believe that the reason for that is that the people believe what the gentleman has said, that the President is certainly determined to carry the country into war?

Mr. KNUTSON. I think that sentiment is entertained by Democrats as well as by Republicans. Certainly, with the overwhelming Democratic majority in Congress, they could vote an adjournment any day they wanted to, but they do not want to do so, because they do not want to see the situation get out of hand.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, when a Member of Congress—and I respect the gentleman profoundly—makes a serious charge that has just been made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], that charge cannot go by unchallenged and unanswered. The gentleman has a right to his own opinion but when he makes the charge that any President, no matter who that President may be, and in the present case President Roosevelt, "would plunge the United States into war for the purpose of reelection," I label that as a statement which is unworthy of anyone who is possessed of a mind which entertains respect for any man who is President of the United States. [Applause.]

I am not going to characterize the statements made by my friend, because I do not want to enter into intolerant debate. These are serious days. These times are too serious for men who are Americans, whether they be Republicans or Democrats, as far as party politics are concerned, to make statements that will tend to unnecessarily and incorrectly alarm the American people.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] has made a speech, and in that speech he has made statements which have as their objective or as their result the unnecessary alarming of the American people. What are we going to do in America? Are we going to sit idly by and permit the dictator nations of the world to gang up on us? Are we going to run away, from fear, as other nations did, as the leaders of other democracies in the world did, until they could not run any farther, or are we going to look at it from a realistic angle and make those preparations which in our own hearts and in our own minds we know are necessary, not only for defense but for peace?

In these trying days, I submit, we are not confronted with normal considerations. We cannot think in normal terms. We must think in terms of reaction—what other nations intend to do, and we must act in terms of reaction. With the knowledge we have that decency among nations and justice among nations is ignored by powerful nations, with the knowledge of other independent people unprepared being destroyed, with that knowledge, as the greatest democracy in the world, what is our duty? Is it our duty to run, from fear, or is it our duty to prepare a defense which will, of necessity, instill fear into the minds of the aggressor nations of the world?

I resent as vigorously as I can the charge made by any Member of this Congress, or any person, that any President of the United States would deliberately plunge this country into war for the purpose of reelection, and that statement of mine applies to a Republican President as well as to a Democratic President. [Applause.]

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4270) entitled "An act to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. AUSTIN, and Mr. GURNEY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. VAN ZANDT addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein an editorial appearing in the Washington Star of last night by David Lawrence, having reference to a very unfortunate incident that occurred in my congressional district of Michigan this week.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include a brief newspaper article dated Cleveland, October 3, by Mr. John T. Flynn.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short radio questionnaire broadcast this morning over a national hook-up, wherein Mr. Willkie states his position on war.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent that I may have further time to extend the remarks I made on the conscription bill on September 4, the remarks to appear the same as if this extension had not been necessary.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by printing a short statement made by Bishop Leonard before the subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee on Monday, September 30, 1940.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

NEW DEAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a short letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take the time of the House to read this letter I have here through a newspaper in my district, but I call it to your attention, and I want both Democrats and Republicans to look into this and help me prepare an answer for this man who has been a Democrat all his life.

This letter directed to me is reported in the Kewaunee Enterprise, a Democratic paper of 65 years' standing. It was published on Friday, September 27, 1940. The reason it is so important is because practically everybody in the United States is asking similar questions to the one this Democrat is asking of a Republican to answer for him. I appeal to all Members of the House, Democrats and Republicans, to help me answer this question.

The article referred to follows:

JUST LOOKING AROUND

(By John Read Karel)

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: We don't like to bother you, because we know you are busy with the defense program, the National Budget, and other important matters, but we're in a quandary and you told us to write to you when we had a very special quandary we were in.

Some time ago we talked to Mr. Lendved, the manager of our local telephone exchange, about a new telephone number for our office. He said he thought it could be arranged, which it was, and he has informed us that the new number will be in the fall telephone directory out next Tuesday.

This all seems simple so far, your honor, but here is where the quandary we are in comes in. Dast we change our telephone number, just like that, or is there a law? We have been reading the war and football news so much lately that we haven't paid much attention to what the New Deal is doing, and we certainly don't want to run afoul of any changes in the Constitution or Bill of Rights pertaining to changing a phone number.

We wouldn't bother you, Congressman, at a crucial time like this, but you're a businessman, too, and you know how it is. We might go right ahead and change our phone number, like folks have done for years and years. Then some day, just when we are getting used to it, we'll get a letter from a third assistant to the second assistant secretary of the S. E. C. or the N. B. R. P., Bureau of Fisheries, asking by what authority did we change our phone number and did we file Form 3–A under section 84 of the Revised Statutes.

Of course, we can write back politely and tell him we didn't know a person had to file Form 3–A to change a phone number. That won't work, your honor, and pretty soon six young college graduates with spectacles and hook noses will be prowling through our income-tax statements and our coal bills, on the theory that anybody who will change a phone number without permission will betray his country and rob the Treasury. Then there will be a letter from Madam Perkins, a public hearing, a Supreme Court decision, and—well, you know how it is, and maybe we were foolish to change our phone number in the first place.

Being right there at Washington, you might think we have got ourselves into this quandary without cause. But we remember that Kenosa shoemaker who almost went to jail because he was insulted by a Government clerk, and once a West Kewaunee farmer had six investigators with brief cases on his premises because he moved two fence posts without permission on Form 6–B under the A. A. A. Soil Conservation Act.

So we wish you would look into this right away, Congressman, because we would like to have our new phone number next Tuesday if it can be done without violating any laws or disturbing the Government right at this time when it has so many other important things to worry about.

We have other things to worry about too, your honor, and we would sure like to get out of this quandary because, the way things are going, there will be other quandaries after election and we don't want to keep on wondering whether our phone number is legal.

Your constituent,

J. R. K.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS CIVIL RIGHTS' BILL OF 1940

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 4207) to protect and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. THOMASON, COSTELLO, ARENDS, and HARNESS.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein a plan submitted by me to the General Staff of the Army suggesting the establishment of a mountain military training center for the intensive training of a small highly specialized force of the United States Army in the technique of operations in high altitude or in heavy snow or in both. I think this extension will probably somewhat exceed the usual limit. I have not an exact estimate on the cost, but it will probably exceed somewhat the limit. I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding this I may be permitted to insert it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Buffalo Evening News.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House will stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair with the understanding that the bells will be rung 15 minutes previous to the reassembling of the House.

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 2:12 o'clock.

VERDIE BARKER

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5053) for the relief of Verdie Barker and Fred Walter, with Senate amendments thereto, and to concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,000".
Page 1, line 8, strike out "$500" and insert "$200".

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it, the Senate reduced the amount allowed by the House?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. And is the reduction satisfactory to the Member who introduced the bill in the House?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. It is. I am making this request at the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LEWIS].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STILL FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A still further message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9980) entitled "An act to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title: H. R. 9972, an act authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR SUPPORT OF GOVERNMENT, 1941

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia submitted the following conference report on the bill, H. R. 10539, making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10539) "making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 13, 22, 33, 40, 44, 45, 46, and 49.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 32, 36, 38, 39, 42, 54, 55, 56, 58, 60, 61, 62, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, and 70; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For an amount required to increase the compensation of the clerk of the Finance Committee of the Senate at the rate of $1,000 per annum so long as the position is held by the present incumbent, $750."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,400"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In the first line of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: "(a)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$83,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ": Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the National Labor Relations Board from obligating any part of such appropriation for carrying on any of the functions or duties specifically conferred upon it by the National Labor Relations Act or to repeal any provision of such Act."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment to read as follows:

"Development of landing areas: For the construction, improvement, and repair of not to exceed two hundred and fifty public airports and other public landing areas in the United States and its territories and possessions, determined by the Administrator, with the approval of a Board composed of the Secretary of War, Secretary of the Navy and Secretary of Commerce, to be necessary for national defense, including areas essential for safe approaches and including the acquisition of land, $40,000,000, of which $2,000,000 shall be available for general administrative expenses, including the objects specified in section 204 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 and including engineering services and supervision of construction: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be construed as precluding the use of other appropriations available for any of the purposes for which this appropriation is made."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Construction and repair: For an additional amount for the construction, repair, or rehabilitation of school, agency, hospital, or other buildings and utilities, including the purchase of furniture, furnishings, and equipment as follows:"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$225,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 51: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,250"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$22,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$197,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: After the sum of "$412.50" in line 10 of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ", together with such additional sum as may be necessary to pay costs and interest as specified in such judgment"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 11, 23, 24, 34, 37, 43, 48, and 59.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, under the unanimous-consent request granted yesterday, I call up the conference report and ask recognition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the conference report which comes up now under unanimous consent is the last deficiency bill. This bill as it left the House carried $207,475,727.02 in cash and carried contract authorizations of $60,258,001. As it comes to the House in this conference report it is $228,132,013.35 cash, an increase of approximately $21,000,000 of direct appropriations, and $10,258,001 in contract authorizations, a decrease of $50,000,000 in contract authorizations under the House amount.

The money increase in the bill as contained in the conference report is accounted for by the fact that between the time the bill passed the House and the time it was acted on in the Senate, additional Budget estimates were transmitted in connection with the defense program which were not considered in the House, but which were considered by the Senate committee. The additional items are supported by the regular Budget estimate. Those estimates were in many instances curtailed by the Senate. The gross amount of the bill would be considerably more had there not been those curtailments and some eliminations.

Mr. Speaker, there are 70 Senate amendments to this bill, very few of them of any purport or of any particular interest. I might mention two or three of them perhaps that I believe the membership would be interested in; then I shall respond to questions if there are any.

There was an amendment respecting the National Labor Relations Board wherein the House sought to carry out the previous action of the House in directing discontinuance of the functions of one of the divisions of that Board. The House language in this bill was changed by the Senate amendment. It is understood by the conferees that the revised Senate language, as now contained in the conference report, will discontinue the personnel and the functions of that division with the exception of two or three people who are necessary to work on reports to be sent to the Congress. Have I stated that correctly?

Mr. TABER. I think the amount left for them to make that report is $3,200, as I remember it, or something like that.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is the understanding that the functions of that division and its personnel are to be discontinued?

Mr. TABER. That is right.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It appears on page 19:

Provided, That not to exceed $3,200 may be expended in performing those functions necessary to keep records and to make a report to Congress and to the President thereon as required by section 3 (c) of the National Labor Relations Act.

There is also added to the Senate language the provision that the action taken by the House in this appropriation bill and in this conference report is not intended to repeal any of the provisions of the organic act.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Was there any discussion with reference to the employment of Mr. Saposs?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There were no personalities involved in this, so far as the House was concerned. The history, as shown by the record, was that the subcommittee handling this original appropriation deducted a certain amount of money upon the theory that the functions of this particular division would be discontinued.

Mr. ENGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. For the information of the gentleman from South Dakota, may I say that Dr. Saposs' name was not mentioned in the subcommittee, according to my recollection, when it discussed this particular question.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It was not mentioned in the deficiency subcommittee, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It was during the action by the House though.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It may have been during the action by the House.

Another matter in which the House will be interested is the provision of $30,000,000 and $50,000,000 in contract authorizations for the civil airport program.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. That amount was taken out by the Senate and is not in the bill as it is now; is that right?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I was just going to explain that, I may say to the gentleman. The provision remains in the bill with this change. We struck out of the language the $50,000,000 for contract authorizations and increased the amount of cash to $40,000,000. This reduces the program from an $80,000,000 program to a $40,000,000 program. We provide a limitation of not to exceed 250 projects. This answers the question of embarking upon this program of some 4,000 projects that has been the subject of much discussion on the floor and in the press. We provide that the projects must be public airports or public landing fields. We provide that they must be passed upon by a board composed of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Commerce, who must certify that they are necessary for defense purposes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. What page is that?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is on page 24 of the bill, but the gentleman will not find the changes I am going over now because it was just an hour or two ago that we decided upon them.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. Many of us will have to answer messages during the afternoon on this subject. Would the gentleman mind reading the exact language agreed on by the conferees so that we may have it in our minds as we go to our offices?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The exact language agreed upon by the conferees is this:

For the construction, improvement, and repair of not to exceed 250 public airports and other public landing areas in the United States and its Territories and possessions, determined by the Administrator with the approval of a board composed of the Secretary of War, Secretary of the Navy, and Secretary of Commerce to be necessary for national defense, including areas essential for safe approaches and including the acquisition of land, $40,000,000, of which $2,000,000 shall be available for general administrative expenses, including the objects specified in section 204 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, and including engineering services and supervision of construction: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be construed as precluding the use of other appropriations available for any of the purposes for which this appropriation is made.

This last provision is made necessary by the fact that under the W. P. A. program W. P. A. funds may be used for airport improvement. Without such a provision in the bill there might have been discontinued such airport development and improvement as is being carried on with W. P. A. funds.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. Is it contemplated by the Appropriations Committees of the two Houses that this is only the beginning of this thing, and that probably the program in order to be fully developed will require further study and there will probably be subsequent appropriations to carry out the airport program?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would not be able to say to the gentleman that the Appropriations Committees had any idea that there would be a further program. However, I think that matter would have to stand on its merits. I believe this speaks for itself. If the facts demonstrate that in connection with the airplane program and the defense program an enlargement or an expansion of this is necessary, the way would be wide open to consider it.

Mr. NICHOLS. A recent survey showed that throughout the country there is an inadequate supply of airports for the number of airplanes we are talking about, and airports are a very vital part of the program.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I quite agree with the gentleman. It was the unanimous opinion of the conferees that such a program would be sufficient to embark upon for the present. Let the future take care of itself.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. In the list of airports which would be eligible for participation in this program, filed with the committee, there were 3,981 airports, I believe. They were classified as defense projects and nondefense projects, to show those necessary for national defense. Did I correctly understand the gentleman to say that only those airports which had the approval of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Commerce as being necessary for national defense could participate in this program?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct. They have to have the O. K. of that board.

Mr. ENGEL. They must be necessary for defense?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. I could not quite understand the language the gentleman read, but do I correctly understand that this $40,000,000 is to be spent by contracting with contracting firms to build these airports, or is it to be used for the W. P. A.?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is not to be used for the W. P. A. However, there would be no objection to the use of W. P. A. labor on these projects. W. P. A. labor might be used, but there is nothing to require it.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is it the idea that this $40,000,000 is to be used through contracts negotiated with contractors to build or improve these airports?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is mainly correct.

Mr. HINSHAW. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. What is the gentleman's understanding of the term "public airport"?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Just what the term implies; that it is operated by some public agency such as the Federal Government, a State, city, or some political subdivision or agency thereof.

Mr. HAWKS. That would mean county airports and city airports?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. I presume this program is broad enough that it contemplates the construction of airports to be used, for instance, for C. A. A. student training and airports to be used for the program of Army training of civilian student pilots?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That portion of it was stricken out.

Mr. NICHOLS. This, then, is strictly military, and this appropriation will be used only for the Army and the Navy?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would not say they could not be used by other people. These funds could not be used to improve them, but I think the airport might be used; for instance, you might have a publicly operated airport in a community that the Army wished to develop as an emergency landing field for Army planes. If this board certified that that was necessary for national-defense purposes, funds could be used to develop that and it would not in any way interfere with whatever civil functions were being carried on there in the way of a training program, but they could not improve the field for the primary purpose of carrying on a training program.

Mr. NICHOLS. Neither for C. A. A. nor the Army?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Certainly not for the C. A. A.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. As I understand it, before the House Appropriation Subcommittee is this list of the Civil Aeronautics Authority of something like 4,000 locations for projects for airport improvements, and so forth, and under the justification heading there is found in many cases the letter "N," which means national defense as distinguished from air-school training and such.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is right.

Mr. CHURCH. That complete list amounts to something like $700,000,000. However, the designations "N" for national defense, of course, are much less in number. Now, the gentleman says that in the conference report there is authorized not to exceed 250 projects. Would the gentleman say that he is able to point to that list before his committee where the projects are labeled "N," meaning national defense under the heading "Justification," and that these 250 projects are taken from that list or would the gentleman say that those projects labeled "For National Defense," and maybe other locations as well, will still have to be submitted to this Board, consisting of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Commerce for its approval?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would not say either one.

Mr. CHURCH. In other words, where do you find any one of those projects that make up a list not to exceed 250?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If I may have the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], I would like to see whether the gentleman concurs in the construction I am going to give the gentleman from Illinois of this list that has been filed.

Mr. CHURCH. Where do we go to find the location of any of these 250 projects?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. So far as I know, I could not name a single airport that would be in the so-called 250 category. Here is the way it was arrived at. In the first place, the list filed with the Appropriations Committee was a survey made by the Civil Aeronautics Authority, a prospective list, just looking over the country as a whole to see what might be done if, when, and as Congress wished to embark upon such a program. Now, so far as this bill is concerned, that list is laid aside. We had a letter before the conferees from Mr. Jesse Jones, the Secretary of Commerce, urging the appropriation of these funds for airport development, and he said that in his opinion, with this $80,000,000 program, 200 to 300 needed projects could be carried on. He did not say what projects, and there was no list of locations. So the conferees, in order to get away from the idea that this was embarking upon a 4,000-airport project, adopted the suggestion of the Secretary of Commerce, that a limited number of airports would be considered for development or improvement when they had the sanction and the recommendation of this Board that is set up in the bill, but not over 250.

Mr. CHURCH. So it would be a fair statement to say that under the terms of the conference report projects not to exceed 250 would be selected by the Board, the Board to stay within the $40,000,000 appropriation, and also that this Board, composed of the Secretary of War, Secretary of the Navy, and Secretary of Commerce, can even ignore the 4,000-project list that is before your committee, which totals around $700,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There may be none of the 250 in that list or there may be one or many. It was my understanding that each one would stand on its own merits and each one would have to have the sanction of this Board.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. Do I understand that the selections are made by the Administrator or the C. A. A.?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. By the Administrator, with the approval of this Board, composed of the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. NICHOLS. When the gentleman says "with the approval," I presume that any of them might suggest, and then all of them would have to agree. The selection does not have to be made by the Administrator of the C. A. A. or by the Secretary of War or by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. NICHOLS. Any of them may do that?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman will yield, all three of them have to agree on it before it can be done.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. All of them have to concur before it is an approved project.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. In reference to vocational education, as I understand, the money that was requested by the National Youth Administration for vocational education is to be spent by the Office of Education and not by the Youth Administration.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The part of it that is for the training program is to be under the Office of Education. That part that is for the work projects is to be carried on by the National Youth Administration.

Mr. RICH. How do you define the difference?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The amounts are divided in the bill.

Mr. PACE. That was not changed?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There is some slight change made in the language.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. I have in my mind an airport in my district which is being improved under a W. P. A. project, municipally sponsored. Should that particular airport be selected as one vital to national defense by this Board and approved, can the gentleman tell us what arrangement will be made in such instance?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The Board would have the right to approve that for such additional improvements as it felt necessary.

Mr. CONNERY. But the project would continue on as municipally sponsored?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. This $40,000,000 will probably be used in much the same manner that the $25,000,000 that has already been granted to increase the Federal participation now in W. P. A.?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The $40,000,000 does not in any way interfere with the W. P. A. program. They can go along together.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. With reference to the W. P. A. amount, as I understand it, the W. P. A. amounts are available in addition to the $40,000,000 in this conference report. Are the W. P. A. amounts for airports placed by this conference report to be under this same Board?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No, it does not interfere with the W. P. A. program at all. That is the reason we put the proviso in there. But where a community has a W. P. A. project in progress it does not interfere with that at all. However, if this Board determined that that airport should have further improvement in order to permit the landing of large bombing planes, they might take some of this $40,000,000 to provide additional runways.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. But is not a penalty placed upon that municipality, inasmuch as the municipality is making a contribution under the W. P. A. project?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not think so. Many municipalities have had W. P. A. projects.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the gentleman have time to read the language put in by the Senate?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I just read it into the RECORD. Would the gentleman please take the conference report and look at it?

Now, Mr. Speaker, just one additional word before I reserve the balance of my time.

With the adoption of this conference report the work of the Appropriations Committee at this session of Congress, so far as I know, will be concluded. [Applause.] At least, I hope it will be.

In my 18 years of service in the House and 10 years of service on the Appropriations Commitee I have never encountered the amount of detailed work that has been laid on the doorstep of the Appropriations Committee. We have been in session almost continuously since right after Thanksgiving. Many times when the House was in recess and in vacation period, the Appropriations Committee and subcommittees were at work. My colleagues in the majority on the committee have had the primary responsibility for this work and have labored together in harmony and diligence and each Member deserves the thanks of the House and of the ccuntry for this painstaking and patriotic service. The clerks have worked with no vacations—day and night and Sundays and holidays.

I want also to pay my respects and express my appreciation to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and other minority members of the Appropriations Committee, the whole committee as well as this subcommittee.

In a large amount of work of this kind naturally there have been many places where there has been very marked differences of opinion about procedure and about the wisdom of this or that, but I can say that all of it has been handled in a spirit of good sportsmanship and with a desire, so far as I could tell, of trying to do the best thing for the country, trying to do the best thing for this defense program which has been so close to the hearts of all of us. We could not have carried through this defense program as expeditiously as we have carried it through had it not been for the splendid cooperation of the minority members of the Appropriations Committee. [Applause.] There have been many times and many places where there might have been dilatory tactics resorted to and technicalities and technical objections made that would have tied us up into knots, but almost without exception as far as the work of the Appropriations Committee is concerned, we have had the patriotic cooperation of the minority members.

I think it is only just and right that such a statement should be made upon the floor of this House, and I am very glad to make it. [Applause.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am very much interested, as are all Members from Massachusetts and New England in the appropriation for the drydock at Boston. Is that in the bill today? The appropriation should be made for the drydock to go ahead with it at once. It is strategically located, and there is an exceptionally skilled and large group of labor available.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That appropriation has not been made.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman very much for his information, but I regret deeply that no money has been appropriated. It is discrimination against Massachusetts.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time, and I yield 10 minutes now to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this bill represents about $228,000,000 in direct appropriations and about $10,250,000 of contract authorizations, in addition to funds that have been previously appropriated.

I am not going to dwell on the question of the Civil Aeronautics Authority money for airports. I never had any idea that the Civil Aeronautics expected in any way to build most of the 3,900 or 4,000 airports that were contained in the list that was made public. My understanding is that this study was made public by inadvertence in the C. A. A. offices and that that is what the C. A. A. first reported to Members of Congress, although now they state that the publication of it was the work of the Appropriations Committee. But that is a minor matter.

There could have been no excuse for funds of this size and magnitude unless the money was for national defense at this time. The limitation of that money to that particular purpose is undoubtedly proper and the determination of where it should be spent upon that basis is proper.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. Is the use of these moneys limited to national defense?

Mr. TABER. It must be determined by the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of Commerce that the airport is necessary for national defense in order for it to qualify for expenditure. On the list there were a large number of airports designated as qualifying for the purpose by the Civil Aeronautics Authority, probably two or three, and maybe four in each State. Those were the airports on which the Civil Aeronautics Authority Board had recommended large expenditures running anywhere from $300,000 to $700,000.

Mr. REED of New York. I am interested because when that report went out it stirred many of my communities and cities into action believing they were going to get an airport, hearing that their names were on the list; and I just wanted to know the facts. I assume from what the gentleman states that in order to get those airports it will be necessary for them to show that they are essential to national defense.

Mr. TABER. That is the understanding. I think I stated on the floor when the bill was up that very few of these places that were named in the list would receive airports out of this appropriation. I did not attempt to say it would be entirely limited to national defense, but that is the program the Secretary of Commerce recommended, and that the conferees adopted.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I have received similar requests from people in my district. Is that list available to the membership of the House?

Mr. TABER. Yes; it is available any time the gentleman wants to see it. I have a copy, and the gentleman can see a copy in the Appropriations Committee room.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Why not put it in the RECORD?

Mr. TABER. It is too big a document to put in the RECORD.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am interested in these huge expenditures which we are told are for airports for national defense. Only a few weeks ago I spent half a day talking to a personal friend of mine, a pilot who had just returned from Europe where he had flown as an active pilot for about 5 years. He stated that insofar as national defense is concerned an airport which does not have some underground camouflaged and hidden hangars and runways is about as worthless in time of war as old Civil War muzzle-loading guns would be to men going over the top to take a modern machine-gun nest. I call attention to these facts in the interest of national defense. The Congress should realize that the expansive and expensive Gravelly Point airport adjacent to the Nation's Capital and all other airports in the country do not have a single underground, hidden, or camouflaged runway or hangar although more than $14,000,000 of public funds have already been expended for the Gravelly Point airport.

I ask the gentleman if it is contemplated in the construction and improvement of airports with funds provided for in this large appropriation whether they will be built for national defense or whether they will only be political pork-barrel airports? Will they have hidden, underground, or camouflaged runways and hangars?

Mr. TABER. We can only hope that the airports will not be political footballs. The second matter has not been gone into by our committee. The question was not raised until after the bill was reported out.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman may have answered this question, but as I understand it there is practically nothing to that list of all these airports that were to be established that created such a stir several weeks ago.

Mr. TABER. No, not in legislation pending at the present time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Now let me ask the gentleman this question, and I assure him I do not expect to hold him to any definite facts, but can he tell us about what amount of money this Congress has appropriated for airports, definitely appropriated for airports?

Mr. TABER. We have not provided for any airports except the Army and Navy airports. I cannot give the figure. The only other airport money that would be available would be what would result from the bill now before us.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I may say that in conversation this afternoon with a gentleman who speaks for the Civil Aeronautics Authority it is my understanding that the interdepartmental committee that will be appointed after this bill becomes a law will make a survey of all proposed and existing airports. This survey will be conducted from the standpoint of national defense. Where the need for national defense exists this money will apply, but at no other place.

Mr. TABER. I think that is correct.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. THOMASON. Is there any airport that is now officially approved that comes under the provisions of this appropriation?

Mr. TABER. I do not know. I do not quite understand what the gentleman means by approved. There is no airport specifically named for which these funds are available. If by "approved" the gentleman means of an approved type, I think there are some airports of that character, but I would not undertake myself to supply the answer, because I lack the information.

Mr. THOMASON. I am sure certain types have been approved, and that specifications have been drawn for different types. But let me ask with reference to this list which has created so much confusion, there is not a single one of those airports that has been officially approved and the money specifically appropriated for it, is there?

Mr. TABER. Absolutely there is no allocation of any amount whatever, not a dollar of this $40,000,000 that is carried here in this conference report.

Mr. THOMASON. Then are we not safe in assuring our constituents who have become excited about that situation that none will be officially approved and the money specifically appropriated until the joint interdepartmental board has investigated and specifically given its approval. Is that right?

Mr. TABER. We might say that until and unless this joint committee that is going to be appointed picks out an airport as needed for national defense none of this $40,000,000 will be available for that airport.

Mr. THOMASON. Not to deceive the people in these communities mentioned in this list, we could tell them that they cannot rely upon that report because that money has not yet been appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. TABER. This money will have been appropriated as soon as the conference report is agreed to and the bill signed by the President, but none of it will be available for the construction or improvement of any airport or landing field until these three departments certify that the airport or landing field is necessary for national defense.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. As a practical matter, can we not answer our constituents in this way: That this money is appropriated for national defense to be used in such places for airport development as the experts who are responsible for our national defense tell us it should be used, and that we as Members of Congress have no business, and we have no right to insist on the location of any airport in our respective districts, simply because we want to get something from the Government for nothing? The publication of that list of prospective airports was most unfortunate.

Mr. TABER. That is correct.

Mr. McGREGOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McGREGOR. Will this interdepartmental committee have power to determine the location and the type of these airports or is it simply a matter of making a recommendation?

Mr. TABER. Absolutely. It must have their approval or it cannot be done.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. As I understand, this bill provides for either the construction or improvement of 250 airports?

Mr. TABER. Not to exceed 250.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Was not the $25,000,000 in the W. P. A. bill for the improvement of airports?

Mr. TABER. I cannot remember exactly, but I think that is correct.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. That is a total of $65,000,000 for not to exceed 250 airports?

Mr. TABER. The $25,000,000 is not limited to those 250 airports.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Your committee must have reviewed this matter pretty carefully. How many airports and how much money is involved in a national defense that has quadrupled our airplanes, not cutting down on the use of our commercial planes, and that will therefore give us need for about four times the number of airports we have now? What is the provision, before we leave here, for airports for national defense?

Mr. TABER. There is no provision that I know of except the regular appropriations in the Army and Navy bills for airports for national defense, with the exception of what is carried here and whatever might be used of the $25,000,000 carried in the W. P. A. bill. There are large appropriations for airplanes, and I may say there will be in the Army and Navy at least 10,000 training planes that will be flying around one place or another before the end of the present fiscal year, because those planes are easily and quickly built, and can be built by some of the smaller factories quite rapidly and made available for training purposes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to inquire about two other items in this bill. I refer to page 14, the National Youth Administration. Do I understand from this language now that the $30,500,000 provided there will be placed in the hands of the State office of education and that this training program will be taken out of the hands of the Federal Government?

Mr. TABER. The technical training will be in the hands of the educational authorities in the different States, although the so-called incidental employment that may be given to the National Youth beneficiaries will be under the National Youth Administration, but their training and schooling will be under the regular school authorities.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. On page 28, there is an item of $18,250 for some kind of improvement in the living quarters of the High Commissioner to the Philippines. Are these additions that we have made to the new palace we recently built over there?

Mr. TABER. I expect it is. I do not know. I do not like that item myself.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. I want the record to show that the $25,000,000 in the relief bill allotted to national-defense projects is not necessarily to be allotted to airport development. It may be used for other national-defense purposes.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MAHON. And it should not be assumed it is all for aviation.

Mr. TABER. That is right.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. On page 42, under the heading "Coast Guard" the House appropriation was increased to the extent of $812,000 by the Senate, which item is for the building of ship ways at the Curtis Bay depot. This was in accordance with the Budget recommendation and I expressed at the time the bill was being considered by the House my disappointment in the fact the committee did not see fit to include it in its recommendations. I am glad now to be advised by the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], that the conferees have agreed with the Senate amendment. The ship ways will therefore be built.

Mr. TABER. We are hoping it will work out all right.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is the provision still in the bill concerning the Bituminous Coal Commission, and I refer to the deficiency appropriation?

Mr. TABER. I do not think there is any Senate amendment with reference to that.

Mr. Speaker, with this bill we have appropriated in direct appropriations, including permanent appropriations, a total for this session of Congress of $20,107,000,000. The following table shows the appropriations and funds otherwise made available for expenditure at this session of congress, viz:

Direct appropriations	$15,768,339,250.12
Reappropriations	81,099,718.00
Permanent appropriations	3,965,049,289.00
Appropriations out of R. F. C. funds	277,000,000.00
Special funds	15,869,750.00
Total cash appropriations	20,107,358,007.12
Contract authorizations	3,596,699,511.00
R. F. C. loans:
To war industry	1,000,000,000.00
To South America	500,000,000.00
Total available in all ways	25,204,057,518.12

Of which about $13,800,000,000 is for alleged national defense.

On Monday I am going to give a break-down of all these items for each department of the Government so that everybody may see just what the money has been provided for.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABOR. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. Will the gentleman also put in the RECORD at that time the Treasury figures, if he has them, on the total estimated income of the Government during this fiscal year and the amount necessary to be borrowed, together with the estimated national debt after this amount has been spent?

Mr. TABER. I shall do that, and be glad to do it.

Mr. Speaker, there have been large appropriations for national defense. One thing happened yesterday that rather disturbed me. The Attorney General rendered an opinion which declares it illegal for contracts to be let, and makes invalid, I understand, all the contracts that have been let for national defense to a very large number of industries, any industries which have an order of any kind against them by the National Labor Relations Board, even if it is under appeal, under the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act. This will stop the contracts that are outstanding by probably 30 percent. In my opinion, this ruling of the Attorney General is not good law. To satisfy people that it is not good law, it is hardly necessary to do much more than cite the fact that an attempt was made to confine contracts to those who had had no ruling made against them. They would not have tried that if the law now provided for it. The Attorney General has sabotaged the defense program. If a Republican had obstructed the national defense program the way this Attorney General has, he would be called a "fifth columnist" by the present occupant of the White House.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I have been through in hearings and in time on the floor practically the whole of the last 12 months on appropriation bills. We have probably had to handle more work and more money than any other committee since 1918. I have not always agreed with the majority of the committee. Sometimes I have opposed them quite vigorously. Sometimes we have had debate here on the floor. But I have come to admire and respect the members of the majority on the Deficiency Committee, Messrs. ED TAYLOR, CLIFF WOODRUM, CLARENCE CANNON, GEORGE JOHNSON, LOUIS LUDLOW, BUELL SNYDER, and EVERETT O'NEIL, more and more as I have had more contact with them, and have come to appreciate more and more the hard, sincere, and patriotic work they have been doing. [Applause.]

I wish to extend at this time my thanks and appreciation to the Members on my own side of the aisle on that committee, Messrs. DICK WIGGLESWORTH, BILL LAMBERTSON, and BILL DITTER. They have been faithful and loyal to the interests of the country as they see them. [Applause.]

It has been a hard and a trying session. It has been one where tremendous responsibilities have been placed on us. Sometimes we have had to bring in here appropriations for things which were needed and for which we could not have the usual printed hearings. In my opinion, we should not get into those things where it is necessary that national defense be protected.

In my judgment, the Deficiency Committee and the whole Appropriations Committee have discharged their duties toward this defense problem in a highly sincere and patriotic manner, and I wish at this time to pay my respects to them. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, being a member of the Appropriations Committee, I, too, feel that the members of that committee, both those on the Deficiency Committee and the other members of the committee, are just as fine men as we have in the House of Representatives, but I certainly have not agreed with the work we have done as far as appropriations are concerned. Probably I may lay it to the laws the House of Representatives has passed, which create a great demand for spending.

A few minutes ago the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] brought out the fact that we have appropriated at this session of Congress $24,700,000,000. If you take into consideration the fact that the amount of revenues you will receive will be about $7,500,000,000, including the two tax bills we have passed, we are going to be about $15,000,000,000, $16,000,000,000, or $17,000,000,000 in the red. If the Appropriations Committee did a good job, then somebody is lax in the House of Representatives, maybe the Committee on Ways and Means, for permitting us to appropriate that enormous sum more than we are going to receive. In view of the fact that for the last 10 years we have been in the red every year from $1,500,000,000 to $4,000,000,000 something is going to happen. We cannot continue to go on in that way.

I want to call your attention to some of the appropriations in this bill which I contend never should have been made. The Deficiency Committee should have called in the men who had charge of certain appropriations so that we would not have permitted these appropriations to be made.

I believe one of the greatest recommendations to the Appropriations Committee was made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], that each subdivision of the Appropriations Committee should have a man, to be paid $10,000 a year, to keep the Appropriations Committee informed of just what was going on. If we should have such a man for each of the 10 subcommittees, and if these men were efficient and desirous of trying to keep this country within its limit of spending, it would be the cheapest money the Appropriations Committee could spend and it would be along the lines of good business.

Let me call your attention to some of these appropriations. Here is the High Commissioner of the Philippine Islands. We gave him $750,000 to build a home in Manila and then we gave him money enough to build a home out in the suburbs. Now he comes in here and asks us to give him $18,250 for the improvement of that house and for additional operating expenses. That money should never be appropriated and should not be included in this bill. Why they have granted that money I do not understand.

Then here is the Bonneville Power Administration. We set up a yardstick down in the T. V. A., and now we have appropriated in the War Department bill, and almost every bill this year, something for Bonneville and Grand Coulee, and we give them here $3,850,000. We give the Bituminous Coal Commission $137,000, the most extravagant and wasteful commission we have ever had. That money should not have been added to this bill, or at least the other members of the Appropriations Committee should have been called in and should have been considered in the appropriation of that money. Then we have the Bureau of Reclamation and a lot of other items, including the Pine River project in Colorado, involving $400,000, and the Colorado River project involving $2,500,000. These items could have been deferred another year. Then we have an appropriation of $10,000 to the Jamestown Museum. This money should not be appropriated now, and I could have stricken out a lot of other items, and it would have been a mighty fine thing if they were stricken out.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for these few minutes so that I may, in my own humble, simple, and inadequate way, pay my tribute to a Member of this House whom I consider one of the most remarkable men who ever sat in the Congress during the century and a half of history of this Nation. I refer to Congressman EDWARD T. TAYLOR, of Colorado, chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives.

My colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. JOHN TABER] the ranking Republican of this great committee, of which I have the privilege of being a member, told us a few moments ago that the total appropriations and authorizations for all purposes at this session of Congress amounted to $25,000,000,000. Two years ago I compiled the figures giving the total assessed valuation of the United States as that valuation was determined by the local assessing officers of the several States. The total assessed valuation of the 48 States was approximately $134,000,000,000. The total appropriations and authorizations made at this session of Congress, according to the gentleman from New York, amount to almost 20 percent of that assessed valuation. I am not saying this for the purpose of criticizing, but rather to point out the tremendous task this great committee has had during the past 9 months. It is indeed remarkable that the man who has been chairman of this committee which has held hearings and passed upon this tremendous sum of money is now in his eighty-third year.

ED TAYLOR is one of the finest and most lovable characters in American history. He was graduated from the University of Michigan in 1884, and was president of his class. He studied and worked with the famous Judge Cooley, and while working for Judge Cooley proofread that monumental legal landmark, Cooley's last edition of Blackstone. He served his State and Nation in various capacities for nearly a half a century, and is now serving his sixteenth successive term in the House of Representatives.

We of Michigan are proud that he is an alumnus of the University of Michigan, of which I have the honor of being an honorary alumnus. He brings to the House and to the committee that tremendous experience and judgment which comes with lifelong service. God has been very kind to him and showered him with many blessings and in blessing him has blessed his State and his Nation. God has permitted him to enjoy, at the age of nearly 83, the health, mental vigor, and vitality of a man of 50. The Nation has been fortunate in having in Congress and at the head of this committee a man with 83 years of life and all the experience that 83 years of clean living brings with it. It has been a rare privilege to serve with him and under him. I have learned to love him and everything that he is and has been; for his patience, his kindness, and his help. My prayer is that the Almighty God may give him many more years of life, health, and happiness. God bless you, ED TAYLOR. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, from the remarks made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], we are to understand that an opinion rendered by the Attorney General of yesterday has invalidated practically 30 percent of the contracts that had been let for the national-defense projects. It is my opinion if that is the situation the Congress should certainly not adjourn until it has been corrected. As I understand it, the opinion has invalidated contracts where an order has been issued against firms by the National Labor Relations Board. This certainly is a problem that is of the utmost importance to national defense and the Congress will be held guilty by the country if we adjourn before that situation is corrected. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL] such time as he may require.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Virginia yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Does this conference report include an item of $4,000,000 for the completion of the turbines in the Bonneville project?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; it does.

BONNEVILLE PROJECT AND NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, with reference to the conference report on the deficiency bill now before us for consideration, H. R. 10539, it may be recalled that when the bill was before the House recently I discussed the matter of the appropriation carried therein providing $3,850,000 for the Department of the Interior, Bonneville Power Administration, for construction, operation, and maintenance of the Bonneville power-transmission system.

There is an additional item now included in the conference report on this bill of $4,000,000. This appropriation was added in the Senate and is a pure precautionary defense item. It was approved by the Bureau of the Budget and sent up to the Senate by the War Department.

Does this conference report include an item of $4,000,000 for the completion of the foundations of the remaining turbines in the Bonneville project?

Last August the Bonneville Administrator, through the Secretary of the Interior, advised the Secretary of War that it was necessary to schedule the completion of Bonneville units 7 to 10, inclusive, to meet estimated load resulting from defense and normal regional load increased. The War Department then sent the Administrator's schedule to the Portland engineer's office for information and estimate, and did not receive a return in time to have the matter presented to the House committee.

Bonneville has now 107,000 kilowatts under contract, including the 65,000 kilowatts now going to the Aluminum Co. A nationally famous industry, one of the most vital cogs in our defense program, has asked the Bonneville Administrator for 97,000 kilowatts. This load will materialize, as our airplane construction program requires this power. Seven other defense industries have asked for power reservation totaling between 200,000 and 250,000 kilowatts. If only 40 percent of these latter applications result in firm contracts, Bonneville will be short of power.

For some time I have stressed the great national weakness of our defense program, and have pointed out ways and means to correct the situation. This appropriation item is one step in such a remedial program, but we greatly need to go further. I do not believe that Congress or the American people fully realize our dependence on imported metal stock piles. Definite defense bottlenecks exist in the critical metals like nickel, manganese, chrome, and antimony. In this connection I can extend the remarks I made last May on the nickel situation. Armor plate is a nickel-steel alloy, and our entire naval program rests on the supply of nickel from one Canadian smelter. If anything happens to this one plant, armor-plate production will be retarded.

Fortunately large deposits of natural nickel-steel ore are located in Alaska, adjacent to tidewater, and can be boated at a low cost to the Bonneville area for electro-thermal reduction. Our administrative officers should immediately take steps to protect the armor-plate supply, and ample low-cost power should be available for this eventuality.

Modern metal-reduction processes depend on the electric furnace and the electric cell. The Northwest has ample supplies of basic ores and large blocks of potential hydro power. These should by all means be hitched together. For some time I have developed the basic facts in this all-important subject. Anyone who is familiar with the strategic and critical material situation will urge the development of our available supply of low-cost power. For this reason I have urged the adoption of the $4,000,000 item, which is 100 percent recoverable under the act of August 20, 1937.

Mr. Speaker, I believe these additional appropriations to carry on toward completion the transmission facilities of the Bonneville project and complete the additional power units is a wise procedure. As I have said, the dam itself has long since been constructed, and the Federal Government has a large investment therein and we may be called on on short notice to provide increased loads of electrical energy to proceed with our defense program. We have recently appropriated $65,000,000 for additional facilities for that purpose at the T. V. A. This additional power made available at Bonneville under these increased facilities will add materially to our power capacity, and I append as a part of my remarks certain tables which will make clear power capacity and dates available of the Bonneville project loads under the programs now authorized by the Congress.

The tables referred to are as follows:

TABLE 1.—Bonneville project installation schedule and capacity Bonneville units

Date	Units	Installed capacity (kilowatts)
		With suggested appropriation unit capacity	Cumulative capacity	Without suggested appropriation unit capacity	Cumulative capacity
At present	1 and 2	43,200	86,400	43,200	86,400
Jan. 1, 1941	4	54,000	140,400	54,000	140,400
Jan. 15, 1941	3	54,000	194,400	54,000	194,000
Jan. 1, 1942	5 and 6	54,000	302,400	54,000	302,400
July 1, 1943	7 and 8	54,000	410,400	(1)	(1)
Jan. 1, 1944	9	54,000	464,400	(1)	(1)
July 1, 1944	10	54,000	518,400	(1)	(1)

[1] Completion dates for units 7, 8, 9, and 10 without suggested appropriation will depend on future appropriations, but will most probably be 1 year later than with suggested appropriation, because of time difference (Oct. 15, 1940 and July 1, 1941) and shop delays of machine manufacturers.

No allowance made in above for holding 1 unit in reserve.

Based on normal unaccelerated schedule for units 7 to 10, inclusive, and continuing appropriations for these units.

Derived from table p. 180, House hearings, first supplemental appropriation bill for 1941, corrected for change in schedule submitted by Chief of Engineers for unit 9.

CONCLUSIONS FROM TABLES 1 AND 2

July 1, 1941—Installed capacity of 194,400 kilowatts. Will not take care of total in sight load. 60,000 kilowatts of dump power will have to be dropped or handled by interchange to take care of 76 percent of defense load.[2] No Bonneville power will be available for load.[3] Will have to draw on interchanges.

July 1, 1942—Bonneville will be short of capacity about 75,000 kilowatts.

Jan. 1, 1943—And succeeding years, with normal schedule of completion under suggested deficiency appropriation.

[1] Dump power sold to private utilities, which are short of capacity to handle their own load. For dump load see p. 183 of House hearings, less prime utility contracts listed p. 184.

[2] Defense load request from 1 of the principal American metal companies now supplying the bulk of metal to airplane industry—97,000-kilowatt plant load plus line loss.

[3] Bonneville Administrator has preliminary reservation requests from 7 metal and chemical companies, totaling about 250,000 kilowatts. To be conservative only 40 percent of these requests was taken to represent firm contracts. This represents 100,000 kilowatts, the same as load from X company. Bonneville will not have capacity to meet any further defense load.

[4] Yearly increase derived from table, p. 194, House hearings, and excluding load areas tributary to Grand Coulee.

[5] Same as footnote 4 above, except calculated on 6-month basis.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the House conferees on the fact that they insisted on the $40,000,000 remaining in this bill of the $80,000,000 that was originally in it for the construction of airports.

I also want to state to the membership that you had just as well get ready to appropriate a great deal more than $40,000,000 in the session to come for the construction of airports. We have a program in this country aimed at 50,000 airplanes. You would be surprised if you would make a survey of the landing facilities throughout the United States, to know that we did not have enough airports even to take care of the airplanes that we have at this time. Fifty thousand airplanes is a lot of airplanes, and it will take a whole lot more airports than we now have to accommodate them.

If I may point out one or two things to you, you know that we have only four class 4 airports in the United States for commercial purposes. A class 4 airport is simply this: It is an airport with runways of at least 5,000 feet, adequate hangar space with illumination—I mean lighting—and radio beams; only four such in the United States. When Gravelly Point is completed it will be the fifth one.

You have surprisingly few airports in the United States which will accommodate a squadron of airplanes. This program has to go on. We have not invented sky hooks yet. We must have places to land and house these airplanes.

Beyond that, we have a great training program going on. There are fields in the country today where on a single field you will have these three operations, a training program for student pilots under the C. A. A. program; you will also have the operation of a squadron of Army planes, at least. At the same airport you have from 18 to 50 scheduled commercial airplane landings there, and you might even have a training school there for the Army under one of these factory training schools—all of them working on one field and under most trying conditions; conditions that are not safe for the training of students; conditions that are not safe for the training of Army or Navy students, and certainly not safe for the landing of commercial travelers.

This thing is happening all over the country today where commercial aviation and cities have at their own expense developed great airports in about the third class. The Army, in order to find a place to train our Army flyers comes along and literally pushes them off of the field and takes away that airport from the city in order to train our Army and Navy flyers.

So this country has to spend a lot more than $40,000,000. This is a good start. I think it is probably as strong as we should have gone now, but in January you can just get ready to appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars for the construction of airports throughout this country, because, not having airports and having 50,000 airplanes is just the same as having a big navy and no place to dock it.

Congressman EDMISTON and myself recently obtained through the War Department an Army bomber and flew to the west coast. We then zigzagged back and forth to Washington, looking over airport facilities, or probably I should say a lack of airport facilities. On this trip we paid our own expenses so that we could return and give you first-hand information as to the inadequacy of landing and training facilities throughout the United States. We only scratched the surface but saw enough to convince us that the construction of airports throughout the United States is as much a vital part of the national-defense program as is the expansion of the Army and the Navy.

C. A. A. students should not be training on fields where there are large Army, Navy, or commercial activities. Neither should Army students, working under a factory school, such as the Spartan School in Tulsa and Muskogee, Okla., be trained where there are Army, Navy, or commercial activities.

We saw fields in California where it was so hazardous for our pilots to attempt to land our airplane, because of student flyers who did not have radio connection with a control tower, that it was necessary for us to fly to another field to land.

The largest airplane in the world is being constructed at the Douglas factory in Santa Monica, Calif., and will be known as a B–19 bomber, with a wing spread of 210 feet, a length from tip to tail of 165 feet, a gasoline capacity of 11,500 gallons. They will have to take this airplane off of the ground of an airport which has runways of only 2,500 feet.

Commercial aviation, through its development, has developed both airplanes and airports to the point that we now lead the world in this field, and it is not right that this operation should be forced off of the airports which they and local communities have developed in order to train Army, Navy, and civilian flying personnel. This system of airports must so be arranged across the United States that when this emergency is over and the Army and Navy, because of reducing their activity, no longer needs them, all of them will be ready and accessible for use in the commercial and private flying fields, which is bound to follow after this emergency has passed.

I am here, of course, only hitting the high spots in making these remarks, for the purpose of serving notice on those of you who have not stayed abreast of the rapid evolution that has taken place in aviation, that you have got to get ready to spend enormous sums of money to provide housing, landing, and training facilities for the vast number of airplanes that we have in this Congress appropriated money to build.

My conservative brethren had just as well get ready to loosen up, because if you are to remain conservative, you can only do that by providing these facilities. They are as vital as are roads to automobiles; road beds to railroads; docks and deepened channels to the steamship.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, there are eight amendments in disagreement. I ask unanimous consent that amendments numbered 11, 23, 24, 37, 43, 48, and 59 be considered en bloc. There is nothing controversial about them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 11: Page 4, line 21, insert:

"GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

"The Superintendent of Documents is hereby authorized to deliver to the Librarian of Congress, from the sales stock in the Government Printing Office, 250 sets of The Writings of George Washington, as published by the Bicentennial Commission, for distribution through international exchange and for such other distribution for the use of foreign governments as may be deemed appropriate."

Amendment No. 23: Page 17, after line 14 insert:

"Navy Department Building, Washington, D. C.: For the construction of an additional wing on the Navy Department Building and an additional story on wing No. 1 thereof under the provisions of the Public Buildings Act approved May 25, 1926, as amended, including administrative expenses in connection therewith, $590,000: Provided, That the contract or contracts for such project may be entered into without advertising."

Amendment No. 24: Page 18, after line 14, insert:

"GEORGE WASHINGTON BICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

"For payment to Katherine H. Clagett and to the estate of Dr. John C. Fitzpatrick $2,700 and $6,666.66, respectively, for services rendered the George Washington Bicentennial Commission in connection with the compilation of the definitive writings of George Washington, $9,366.66: Provided, That the payment to the said Katherine H. Claggett shall be in full, complete, and final compensation of any and all claims arising out of services rendered to the George Washington Bicentennial Commission prior to June 30, 1940."

Amendment No. 37: Page 28, after line 2, insert:

"Appropriations available to the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year 1941 for soil and moisture conservation operations shall be available for packing, crating, and transportation, including drayage, of personal effects of employees upon permanent change of station, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior."

Amendment No. 43: Page 30, after line 23, insert:

"Eastern Cherokees: For the relief of the Eastern Cherokees, as authorized by the bill (S. 4232) entitled 'An act for the relief of the Eastern Cherokees,' Seventy-sixth Congress, fiscal year 1941, $1,997.84, without interest and to be in full settlement of all claims of such tribe of Indians against the Government as found to be due by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1906 (202 U. S. 101)."

Amendment No. 48: Page 34, after line 18, insert:

"Legislative expenses, Territory of Alaska, 1939: The limitations in appropriations for legislative expenses, Territory of Alaska, as contained in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1939, and the Third Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1939, are hereby amended to read as follows:

" 'For salaries of members, $21,585; mileage of members, $9,448.40; salaries of employees, $5,160; printing, indexing, comparing proofs, and binding laws, printing, indexing and binding journals, stationery, supplies, printing of bills, reports, etc., $14,458.81; in all $50,652.21.' "

Amendment No. 59: Page 43, at the bottom of the page, insert:

"Removal and reestablishment of Arlington Farm, Va.: For the removal and reestablishment of the functions and activities at Arlington Farm, including the acquisition of lands by purchase or by condemnation, the construction and installation of buildings, equipment, and utilities and appurtenances thereto, including the employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $3,200,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That this appropriation shall be transferred to the credit of the Secretary of Agriculture for expenditure by him: Provided further, That upon the transfer of the activities of the Department of Agriculture from Arlington Farm, so much of the land thereof as may be required by the War Department shall be transferred to the control and jurisdiction of the latter Department."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the above amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the other amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 34: Page 24, after line 19, insert:

"For all necessary expenses incident to the care, operation, maintenance, and protection of the Washington National Airport in accordance with the act of June 29, 1940, including personal services in the District of Columbia, purchase, operation, and maintenance of one motor-propelled ambulance, one fire-and-crash truck, and one rescue fire-and-crash motorboat; purchase (including exchange), operation, and maintenance of two passenger-carrying motor vehicles; purchase of equipment, materials, and supplies, including $700 for the purchase, cleaning, and repair of uniforms for the guards, $152,200, and, in addition, the sum of $103,450 is transferred to this appropriation from the appropriation 'Maintenance and operation of air-navigation facilities,' contained in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1941: Provided, That $15,000 of this appropriation shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia, employed in connection with the completion of the construction of said airport, without regard to the Civil Service Act and regulations."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this amendment calls for $255,650 for the maintenance of the Gravelly Point Airport. If your town or my town has an airport we pay for the land, we pay generally for a very considerable part of the construction of the airport, and we pay for the maintenance of the airport.

The Washington Airport cost $14,000,000 under the direction of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, the W. P. A., and the P. W. A.—three times what the investigating committee of the Committee on the District of Columbia thought should be spent for the airport at this particular site 2 years ago. Every dollar of it has come out of the Federal Government, and now it is proposed that $255,000 be provided for the maintenance and operation of this airport for the rest of this fiscal year. I am not going to try to get a roll call on this but I am serving notice that in my opinion the District of Columbia ought to have an opportunity to pay part of the expense of operating this airport, and I believe that as we get to the proposition in future years we should provide that the District pay a good part of the operating cost of this airport.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. Does the gentleman know that there is a bill now pending fixing the boundary between the District of Columbia and Virginia which proposes to encompass all of the National Capital Airport in, make it a part of, and cede it to the State of Virginia?

Mr. TABER. No; I did not know that.

Mr. NICHOLS. That bill is now pending before the Committee on the District of Columbia. As the airport stands at the present time it is half in the District and half in Virginia. The boundary line runs through the middle of it. That portion which was reclaimed from the river is in the District of Columbia, the other portion is in the State of Virginia. The Natonal Capital Parks and Planning Commission introduced a bill to place it all in Virginia. I have offered an amendment to this bill to put it all in the District of Columbia where it belongs.

Mr. TABER. Certainly.

Mr. NICHOLS. And in that case I agree with the gentleman that the District should provide the money for its upkeep.

Mr. TABER. Undoubtedly it should contribute a large part. I hope the gentleman's bill passes.

Mr. NICHOLS. The other bill would give it all to Virginia.

Mr. TABER. Then Virginia should pay the cost of its operation.

Mr. NICHOLS. No; Virginia wants to collect the taxes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am very much shocked that there is no appropriation for the drydock at Boston. I feel that Boston is being severely discriminated against in not being given money for this drydock. Was it because the Budget did not submit an estimate? I know the Budget is the President so far as appropriations are concerned, but did they not submit an estimate? I cannot understand why we failed to get this appropriation.

Mr. TABER. I do not remember that there was a Budget estimate. My understanding is there was not. I will, however, check on this before my remarks are printed. My understanding is there was no Budget estimate for it. I know none was cut.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It is a discrimination which ought not to be, for unless we take care of our drydock facilities we will find ourselves in the position of having ships but no docks for them. If we had the drydocks at Boston, some of the mistakes that have been made elsewhere by the Navy Department in the ships such as building ships that will not stay upright and sending out of ships with inadequate equipment would not be made.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Referring again to the National Capital Airport and the matter of jurisdiction, one important question to be considered in this connection is that of gasoline taxes.

Mr. TABER. It would be important; yes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska to ask a question.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the courtesy of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia in yielding to me. I should like to ask him just one question concerning the conference report item of $40,000,000 for airports to be allocated upon the authority of the interdepartmental board to be set up acting in conjunction with the Civil Aeronautics Authority for the improvement of existing airport facilities in cities throughout the country. The inquiry which I should like to make is whether this money is available to the cities for the purchase of land, or whether it is limited to other purposes?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is not available to the cities, but these funds may be used by this joint board wherever they determine it is necessary for a defense project. I would say to the gentleman from Nebraska that those instances would be very rare and would be where there was no community or city nearby which could purchase and furnish the land for their airport. It would not be considered that this board would use this fund to buy land in cities for the purpose of building airports.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. One further question, if the gentleman will bear with me. The city of Omaha, my home city in my district, at the present time is planning to hold an election to vote a substantial bond issue for the purpose of securing by purchase additional land to be added to the present airport. Does the gentleman believe that the money involved in this bill, the $40,000,000 or any part of it, would be available to the city of Omaha for the purchase of land as an addition to existing airport facilities?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I should think in the case of a city like Omaha that it would not be. Were it a case where this board should find that the local community could not buy its own land it might, but in the case of a splendid city like Omaha it would be expected that the city would furnish the land.

Mr. LUDLOW. If the gentleman will permit, it is all predicated upon national defense.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; it is all predicated upon the question of national defense.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Perhaps the gentleman has just answered one question I had in mind when I rose. Is the determination of the location of these airports, or their need of improvement, made solely on the basis of national defense, or does it take into consideration also the facilitation of commerce?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is confined to national defense.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. MONRONEY. Is it not a fact that this $40,000,000 can be used as sponsorship funds under a W. P. A. project, and if so used would it not provide upward of $150,000,000 or $200,000,000 worth of airport work?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They can work together with the W. P. A., the C. C. C., or any of those other agencies.

Mr. MONRONEY. This $40,000,000 will be used as sponsorship money?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would not like to term it "sponsorship" money. They will have to work out their cooperation with the W. P. A., C. C. C., and other public agencies, Federal and non-Federal.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made here today and to insert a table that I referred to when I had the floor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

There was no objection.

IMPROVEMENT OF CERTAIN RIVERS AND HARBORS IN THE INTEREST OF NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 9972) authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD]?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder if it would be possible for the gentleman to have the House take this bill up at this time? If it goes to conference it will be delayed, and this bill should be passed now.

It contains an amendment introduced in the Senate by Senator NORRIS for an authorization for the Harlan County Dam, also known as the Republican City Dam, on the Republican River in Nebraska, according to House Document 842, Seventy-sixth Congress. This proposal is very meritorious. It would authorize an appropriation to be made for an on-river dam near the town of Republican City. This dam has been approved by the district engineer, the division engineer, and the Chief of Engineers.

Last spring the Flood Control Committee, of which I am a member, held exhaustive hearings on this proposal. The committee favored it and reported it out to this House. This dam should be built now.

I wish that I could impress upon the House the great need out in that part of Nebraska. They have been waiting for some flood-control work on this river for a long time. Many lives have been lost and millions of dollars' worth of property destroyed. On previous occasions I have told the House of the needs of this valley.

This dam will provide for water storage for irrigation in four Nebraska counties and some in Kansas. It is right in the drought area and the Dust Bowl. Those people have not raised a crop for 7 long years.

If our experience in the last World War in regard to the production of food is any criterion, the construction of this dam would play a great part in our national-defense program.

This dam will also give great protection to Kansas City, Kans., and Kansas City, Mo. These great cities, with their railroads, public utilities, airports, and national-defense industries, are a most important part of the national-defense works of this country. The Norris amendment should go through.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I do not think this bill can go through without going to the conference committee.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand an amendment has been placed in this bill by the Senate which has to do with the authorization of a dam in the State of Nebraska, in the district of my colleague the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS]. I feel that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS], who has worked so diligently on this particular project, should have an opportunity to say something about the matter at this particular time. I shall not object to the request, however.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD]?

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. GAVAGAN, Mr. PARSON, Mr. CARTER, and Mr. DONDERO.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conference report may be considered and acted upon without delay upon being filed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD]?

There was no objection.

NATIONALITY ACT OF 1940

Mr. LESINSKI filed the following conference report and statement on the bill H. R. 9980, to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9980) to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of inserting the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert on page 92 of the House bill, between lines 10 and 11, the following:

"SEC. 503. If any person who claims a right or privilege as a national of the United States is denied such right or privilege by any Department or agency, or executive official thereof, upon the ground that he is not a national of the United States, such person, regardless of whether he is within the United States or abroad, may institute an action against the head of such Department or agency in the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia or in the district court of the United States for the district in which such person claims a permanent residence for a judgment declaring him to be a national of the United States. If such person is outside the United States and shall have instituted such an action in court, he may, upon submission of a sworn application showing that the claim of nationality presented in such action is made in good faith and has a substantial basis, obtain from a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States in the foreign country in which he is residing a certificate of identity stating that his nationality status is pending before the court, and may be admitted to the United States with such certificate upon the condition that he shall be subject to deportation in case it shall be decided by the court that he is not a national of the United States. Such certificates of identity shall not be denied solely on the ground that such person has lost a status previously had or acquired as a national of the United States; and from any denial of an application for such certificate the applicant shall be entitled to an appeal to the Secretary of State, who, if he approves the denial, shall state in writing the reasons for his decision. The Secretary of State, with approval of the Attorney General, shall prescribe rules and regulations for the issuance of certificates of identity as above provided."

And on page 92 of the House bill, line 11, strike out "Sec. 503" and insert "Sec. 504"; and on page 98 of the House bill, line 5, strike out "Sec. 504" and in lieu thereof insert "Sec. 505"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9980) to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendment no. 1: The purpose of this amendment was to make it clear that the term "national of the United States" does not include an alien. The House recedes.

Amendment no. 2: This amendment amended the second paragraph of section 205, relating to the acquisition by illegitimate children of the nationality held by their mothers at the time of their birth, to make it clear that the provisions of the paragraph are applicable with respect to children born before as well as after the effetcive date of the act. The House recedes.

Amendment no. 3: This amendment related to the eligibility for naturalization of Filipinos, and provided that Filipinos with full civil-service ranking who had been in the service for at least three years might be eligible for naturalization. The Senate recedes.

Amendment no. 4: This amendment provided that citizens of the United States who have lost their citizenship by reason of service in the armed forces of a foreign state might regain their American citizenship by naturalization, and that in the naturalization of such persons compliance with some of the provisions of the naturalization laws will be waived. The House recedes.

Amendment no. 5: This amendment provided that persons claiming the rights or privileges of nationals of the United States might petition the district courts of the United States for judgments declaring them to be such nationals. It provided further that any such person who is beyond the jurisdiction of the United States and has filed such petition might obtain from the appropriate consular officer a certificate of identity entitling him to entry into the United States. The House recedes with amendments which make a number of clarifying changes in the text of the Senate amendment and provide for the issuance of the certificates of identity only upon an application showing that the claim of nationality is made in good faith and has a substantial basis. The conference agreement also provides for appeals to the Secretary of State from denials of application for such certificates of identity. The conference agreement transposes the text of this amendment to a more appropriate place in the bill and also makes the necessary corrections in section numbers.

Amendment no. 6: This amendment provided that in registering aliens arriving in the United States, the fingerprints of such aliens shall be required in addition to the other information which is required under the bill. The House recedes.

Amendment no. 7: The House bill provided that a national of the United States should lose his nationality by entering, or serving in, the armed forces of a foreign state unless expressly authorized by the laws of the United States. The Senate amendment provided that he should lose his United States nationality in such a case only if he has or acquires the nationality of the foreign state. The House recedes.

Amedment no. 8: This amendment provides that, in addition to the other reasons specified in the bill, a national of the United States shall lose his nationality by committing any act of treason against, or attempting by force to overthrow or bearing arms against the United States, provided he is convicted thereof by a court martial or by a court of competent jurisdiction. The House recedes.

Amendment no. 9: This is a change in cross references made necessary by amendment no. 8. The House recedes.

Amendment no. 10: The House bill provided that a person who has become a national by naturalization and who would otherwise lose his nationality by residing in a foreign state for a period of years shall not lose his nationality if he resides abroad to represent an American commercial or financial organization. The Senate amendment added "business organization". The House recedes.

Amendment no. 11: This amendment makes clarifying changes in the provision of the House bill which provides that the wife, husband, or child of an American citizen, who is residing abroad for the purpose of being with such American citizen, shall not lose his citizenship in those cases where the American citizen spouse or parent may reside abroad without losing his nationality. The House recedes.

JOHN LESINSKI,
CHARLES KRAMER,
EDWARD H. REES,
JAMES E. VAN ZANDT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report on the bill H. R. 9980 just filed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI]?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman give us a little time to discuss this?

Mr. LESINSKI. We will have an hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the whole report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI]?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman expect to give us a little time on this?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] will control an hour.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is what I thought. If he was going to be arbitrary and not give us any time, we would object now. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein an exceptionally fine address presented to the Accounting Section Convention at Green Lake, Wis., by Mr. C. E. Kohlhepp, vice president of the Wisconsin Public Service Corporation, Milwaukee, Wis.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a recommendation for a loyalty crusade through music for 1940–41 by Mrs. Helen Harrison Mills, of Peoria, Ill., chairman of the International Music Relations Committee of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short article by Westbrook Pegler.

The SPEAKER. Is there objecticn to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

NATIONALITY ACT OF 1940

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks an article from the Radio and Electrical Union News.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, for about 5 minutes I ask that the House indulge me while I discuss the frailties of the human memory; the vagaries of a mind which forgets; the necessitous urge which leads a political leader suddenly to change from an enemy of organized labor to pose as its solicitous friend.

Mr. Willkie, the Republican standard bearer, cooed his friendship for labor in his speech at Pittsburgh last night. I desire to give another side to that picture—and the time is almost coincident with the date on which Mr. Wendell Willkie, president of the Commonwealth & Southern, was chosen as the Republican standard bearer.

I shall read from the Radio and Electrical Union News—published by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor in the second half of July, the following dispatch, dated Tallassee, Ala.:

[From the Radio and Electrical Union News of July 1940]

ALABAMA POWER WORKERS REAFFIRM DETERMINATION—COMPANY UNION BATTERIES AND PLUG-UGLY BOSSES FAIL TO SHAKE COURAGE OF LOCAL UNION 904—LAW FLOUTED BY WILLKIE UTILITY

TALLASSEE, ALA.—Still one of the blackest spots on the utility map, the Alabama Power Co. continues its incessant war on organized labor. The company is a unit of the vast Commonwealth & Southern, a huge holding corporation, of which, until his very recent resignation, Wendell L. Willkie, former Democrat and now Republican nominee for Presidency of the United States, was chairman of the board of directors.

Whether Willkie is at fault or not is beside the question. Undoubtedly, if he is interested in labor at all, he might very easily rectify the deplorable situation now existing on this power system.

SIX YEARS CONTINUOUS

The battle for labor recognition on this property has been raging for about 6 years, has run the gantlet of every device conceived in the minds of labor-hating bosses to destroy all semblance of democracy, company unionism has run rampant, the Labor Relations Act has been flouted and laughed at, Labor Board orders have been ignored or corrupted by the tycoons, and plug-uglies have incited riotous conditions to discredit union affiliation.

"Even in this year 1940," states an observer, "men are forced to face the same brutal conditions on this company's property that were thought to be wiped out decades ago.

"Just a few instances will serve to show the deplorable treatment meted out to those who dare to exercise their right to join a union of their own choosing.

UNION MEMBER SLUGGED

"A steam-plant superintendent, notorious for his slave driving and labor baiting, slugged a union member who dared to resent being falsely labeled a thief. A hydro plant foreman threatened to knock another union member on the head when the member offered some constructive criticism of the foreman's faulty work. The known presence of company spies keeps everyone on nerve's edge, and the widespread enmity of bosses for union members has reduced efficiency to a low ebb.

"In addition to all of this, the company is still resisting an order to refund dues deducted from the pay roll for the support of a company union, condemned as illegal under provisions of the Labor Act. The amount due is in excess of $10,000.

"This battle, provoked and continued by the company since 1934, is probably the most outrageous antiunion campaign in recent history. But I. B. E. W. Local Union 904 continues to hold the fort for organized labor. We shall win."

Mr. Speaker, I do not think I need point the moral. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON].

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I listened to the debate this morning. I am afraid the readers of the RECORD will get the impression from the critical articles read into the RECORD concerning the candidates, and the expressions on the other side, that a mantle of sacrosanctity has been put about the candidates for President. I believe it ill becomes this House to indulge in that kind of claptrap, going to extremes either on one side or the other.

I want to go back to show you that that never was the rule in this country. Let me take first that great statesman, America's supreme statesman, Thomas Jefferson. The John Jay treaty was up, and he said of the President at that time, George Washington, words to this effect, "Damn his good intentions if he is going to destroy this Republic." His exact words were: "Curses on his virtues; they have undone his country." That sort of criticism, now as then, is good Americanism. It came from the greatest statesman this or any other country has ever produced. I know there is no man of Jefferson's size in this House today.

Now I come a little closer home. I followed the speakers this morning, and I could not help but think of a beautiful thing said by a President who was born in Kentucky. Jefferson Davis and this man were born almost alongside of each other. This President, in a speech delivered as a Representative in this House, a great indictment of James K. Polk, then President of the United States, said:

Mr. President, you have not fired a shot on American soil. They were all fired on foreign soil.

Further in that speech he said this:

Military glory, the attractive rainbow that rises in showers of blood, that serpent's eye that charms to destroy.

That speech was made on January 12, 1848, by Abraham Lincoln. He criticized a President. I say that we have not only a right to criticize a President but we have a duty to criticize Presidents or candidates.

I can take one of the candidates and I believe I can show that the House of Morgan is back of him. You have heard of the House of Rothschild that profited so terrifically in the Napoleonic wars. I know who put you into the other war, the first World War. It was the House of Morgan. The astounding thing in America today is that both candidates are just as one on the question of so-called selective service. Four newspapers are published in this city. Jefferson said of newspapers:

The first aid to promoting war, the newspaper.

The four newspapers in this city urged upon you, the Members of Congress, adoption of the selective service, so-called, and every one of them today is calling it a conscription act. One of them a day or so ago went so far as to say editorially:

Don't fool the people longer, this is a war act.

I say, let us give heed, if giving heed is a protection to the American citizen who has to go out and face this thing. If we have to speak lightly about the House of Morgan and the candidates, then there is surely a degeneracy on the part of this, the people's body, because if the American youth does not have representation here, he does not have it any place. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and on looking them over I find there are two very brief quotations that I would like to include. I therefore ask unanimous consent to put them in my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Los Angeles Times of Sunday, September 29.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, all of us who have been following this legislation appreciate that it is a very complicated matter. The Immigration Committee of the House for years has been struggling with the proposition of recodifying the nationality laws, and I believe that under the direction of my colleague, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], and the other members of that committee, they have done a very fine job. We passed the bill here in the House after a good deal of discussion and it went to the Senate and they have added some very important amendments. The conferees have accepted some of the amendments and rejected others. I want to compliment the House conferees on their stand in refusing to concur in some of these proposed amendments, but there are two amendments in which they have concurred that I do not quite understand and I would like to take the time to secure a little explanation of them.

I have before me Senate amendment No. 4 and it would be of no use for me to read it to the House because it is so complicated that no one could understand it by reading it once or even reading it 10 times, and to give you a sample I will read a part of it:

A person who shall have been a citizen of the United States and also a national of a foreign state, and who shall have lost his citizenship of the United States under the provisions of section 401 (c) of this act, shall be entitled to the benefits of the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, except that contained in subdivision (2) thereof. Such person, if abroad, may enter the United States as a nonquota immigrant, for the purpose of recovering his citizenship, upon compliance with the provisions of the Immigration Acts of 1917 and 1924.

Of course, the language of the proposed amendment, no doubt, has been well prepared, but it is meaningless in itself and I would like to ask someone to explain to me just what that amendment does.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] as he was chairman of the subcommittee that worked on these amendments.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the statement of the gentleman from Ohio. Reading the amendment by itself, it is not exactly meaningless, but it is certainly quite difficult to explain. Any amendment read separately from a bill is difficult to understand. Of course, the gentleman has read the bill and the amendments to it and I will be pleased to explain this particular amendment to the gentleman from Ohio, who has always given these problems his careful and earnest study. He is well informed on problems of immigration and naturalization.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I will be glad if the gentleman will do that.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Under the original House bill it was provided that anyone who joined a foreign army would lose his citizenship whether he took an oath of allegiance to the country of that army or not. You know until recently it was generally understood that if you joined a foreign army you took an oath of allegiance to the country of the army that you joined, but in recent years there have been a good many cases, and I believe right now more of it is being done, where men join foreign armies and do not take the oath of allegiance. The provision in the bill that was passed by the House said, in substance, that anyone who joined a foreign army would lose his citizenship. We found it to be true, however, that an American citizen would join the army, we will say, of Great Britain, and thereby lost his citizenship he might become stateless unless he could become a citizen of Great Britain. Furthermore, we just do not want that sort of thing to happen and therefore the bill has been amended in the Senate to say, in substance, that anyone who is a citizen or national of the United States and joins the army of a country in which he has dual citizenship, that person will lose his citizenship in the United States.

I might go back and explain a little further that the reason for this particular amendment comes about largely because it is said that there are persons from certain countries who have gone to the United States or its possessions and have children born here or in our possessions that returned to the country of their parents and acquired dual citizenship of such country. They join the army of that country without taking the oath. They have returned to this country and we are never able to tell whether they have been in those armies or not. We would like to find out the facts if we can. So we are cutting their citizenship off except under certain circumstances and conditions.

Now, all in the world we are saying here is, in substance, that if a person has a dual citizenship in a country where he joined the army he loses his citizenship but if he is an American citizen without dual citizenship and has joined a foreign army without taking the oath, he does not lose his citizenship. Then to go one step further, if he joins the army of a country where he has dual citizenship he may return to this country and file application for the recovery of his citizenship, practically in the same manner as veterans have done under the laws that were passed in 1917.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Let us take the case of a boy who goes to some foreign country and joins its army. When the war is over or any time he wants to come back, this amendment provides that he may come back as a nonquota immigrant. He works his way back to citizenship according to law.

Mr. REES of Kansas. If he has not taken the oath of the country whose army he joined.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Oh, yes; of course, if he has expatriated himself, has held up his hand and said, in effect, "I am not a citizen of the United States any more," and accepted the citizenship of some other country, then, of course, he is not any longer entitled to our compassion.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. But if he is a boy who has run away and joined the army just out of the lure of what the army offers, and so on, we do not want to punish him by keeping him out, and that is a very laudable provision in the bill. But in section 2 it says "except that contained in subdivision (2) thereof." What is subsection 2 and what has subsection 2 got to do with it? If it is a boy such as I have described, there is no impediment to his return.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. But what is this subsection 2? What kind of a predicament can he get himself into that would keep him out except renouncing allegiance to the United States and assuming allegiance to some other country? What is in this section? I have it before me, but I cannot tell what it means.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Subsection 2 says that a person who has acquired nationality through his parents—that is to say, if he acquires that nationality because of his parents, not of his own volition——

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Well, let me ask you this in a broad sense: For instance, here is a man who has been in this country. He is of foreign extraction. He, of course, would not be a citizen until he becomes a citizen, but he has been in the country and he has been a law-abiding citizen, but he goes back and joins the army in his own country. He has already indicated his willingness to become a citizen. I presume section 2 means that if he goes back to his native country and becomes married, and so on, and becomes entangled in some domestic connection he will not be able to get back as freely as the boy that I first described?

Mr. REES of Kansas. He certainly would not.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I presume that is what section 2 means.

Mr. REES of Kansas. He never was able to.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think that is what No. 2 in this fourth amendment means. It means that if a boy wants to come back, then we are going to let him come back, but if he has mixed himself up in something else that disqualifies him, he has to prove himself clear and fight himself back as best he can. I do not profess to understand this fully. My only interest is to feel that you have not let something slip into this law that will cause us trouble.

Now, let me go to amendment No. 5. That is a very long amendment and is very complicated. I have read it with a great deal of care. I must confess I do not understand it exactly. Let me ask if this is what it means: The gentleman appreciates this fact, that we have always maintained in the United States—and, by the way, our country was the first country to lay down real, sensible immigration laws.

In other words, we laid down the foundation. They have all followed us. Some have gone a great deal further than we have, but we have had a principle of law that we have not lost sight of, and that is that an alien who has not yet arrived in our country has no rights under our law; not a single right does he possess. When he comes here he has practically all the civil rights that a citizen has. He has a right to park his car within the white lines. If he has children he has the right to send them to our schools. When he comes here he has the same rights, but until he comes here he has none. I hope this section does not invade this time-honored principle that we have defended so nobly in this country.

Mr. LESINSKI. That amendment is for this purpose: Where our manufacturers send agents through the country and they may have to remain 5, 10, or 15 years in a foreign country, we have to give them certain rights to come back.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. But I would like to address myself to this one theme that I have laid down: Does this invade that time-honored position that we have taken in this country and always defended successfully?

Mr. REES of Kansas. It does not have a thing to do with it. I think the gentleman is talking about the amendment that has to do with the question of what we regard a right to a day in court."

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is what I mean exactly.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I think the gentleman recalls that when this measure was explained before the House we have amended the code to tighten the situation a great deal with reference to individuals who have what we call dual citizenship. There are thousands of persons abroad who have what is known as dual citizenship. Let me give you an example. For instance, take a man who is born abroad of American citizen parents. That particular person born abroad, born in Italy or Germany or France or whatever it may be, if his parents are American citizens he is an American citizen because he is the child of American citizens.

Then he acquires citizenship of the country where he is born. We have provided among other things in this code that that particular group of persons will lose their citizenship under certain circumstances and conditions.

This particular provision applies now only to persons who are nationals or citizens. We have discussed the question of what we mean by "nationals."

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What do you mean by "nationals"?

Mr. REES of Kansas. They are persons who owe allegiance to the Government of the United States. We say that if those persons attempt to come back, if they are turned down by the diplomatic representatives of our country abroad, if they still are able to give a substantial reason why they should be admitted as citizens of the United States, and if the Department of State believes there is a substantial reason for doing so, that person may come to this country for the purpose of bringing an action in court and being heard in this court and having his case appealed if he wants to. At the same time it is with the understanding that if he is turned down he shall be deported from this country.

We have a rather new situation here, and that is we are cutting off the claim to citizenship of these thousands of persons under this provision in the bill who do not comply with its terms and therefore it was deemed advisable that some chance be given them to have what might be called their day in court. We have safeguarded the situation extremely carefully and feel that so far as possible we have prevented any abuse of it. It was my contention when this measure was up for consideration in the committee that such people did have the right to go into court either on a declaratory judgment or under a writ of habeas corpus, but there was a feeling on the part of others that they may not have that right.

We are giving this right not to aliens, if you please, but to American citizens. There being perhaps some foundation for that contention, we have allowed it but have safeguarded it just as carefully as we could. Have I made myself clear to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think this proposition is pretty well laid down. It is unfortunate that the amendment that is going to be written into the bill is not the amendment the gentleman gave me and the one I am reading from.

Mr. LESINSKI. The gentleman will find that in amendment No. 1, the word "alien" was put in. In other words, an alien cannot take an appeal.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think that was a very salutary change and protection, but I want to develop this somewhat further. I remember a case that came to the attention of Congress, the case of a man attempting to avoid the principle I talked about a while ago. He had married a woman who lived in Germany, and before he married her he had been informed that she could not be admitted into this country. He tried to bring a suit, in fact did bring a mandamus action against the Secretary of State to compel the admission of this woman into the United States. The case went to the Supreme Court and the Supreme Court held just as I said a while ago that an alien outside of the United States not a citizen of the United States, one who has not started to become naturalized, would have no right in our courts.

I think the provision in the amendments defining the word "national" is a very salutary one.

I know there are a lot of fine people who need the protection of this provision that I am discussing. There is no question about that, but what I am concerned about, and this is the next question, is that when we come close to a fundamental principle of law which we have agreed upon for years we must be exceedingly cautious. What you are saying here is that a man who has never been in the United States at all——

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Let me proceed for a minute, please. What you are saying in this amendment is that a man who has never been in the United States at all but who claims he is a national either because his parents were, or on some other ground but is not, in fact, a national, can make application in our courts to have tested the question of whether he is a national. Or suppose he wants to be admitted into this country to do something not for the best interests of the country, he can claim his day in court.

Certainly we should not protect him as we would the boy who became a soldier. What is there in the bill to prevent the abuse of this privilege by a man who puts up a plausible claim to being what he in fact is not? The gentleman from Kansas has done a splendid job on this bill and I compliment him; he deserves to be complimented. Likewise the gentleman from Michigan, he has done a splendid job and I compliment him; but I do not want to see us give imposters a right to carry on their perfidy while we are trying to do something worth while for some deserving people.

Mr. LESINSKI. I return the compliment to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. But I want to know what safeguards have been erected against the abuse of this privilege.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I think I can answer the gentleman briefly. Let me call his attention to the fact that he seems to be discussing aliens. We are not talking about aliens.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am afraid the gentleman is wrong about that. I am talking about the case of a man who is not a national but who claims to be a national and who makes a showing of establishing that he is a national of this country. What have you in the bill to put up the bars against such a fellow?

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman from Ohio being familiar with these nationality laws knows that anyone who is a citizen who goes abroad can come back into the United States any time he wants to no matter what he has done while abroad just so he has not done one thing, lose his citizenship.

He may even have committed a crime, just so he has not in some way expatriated himself as a citizen of this country. That is the present law. He does not have to bother about this process. He can come back to the United States and claim the protection of the laws here or the protection of our Government while abroad. Under this code we have provided certain restrictions in that situation and one of the most important is that the man who claims dual citizenship and who does not make the claim within a 2-year and 90-day period after this bill becomes law, that person has the burden of proof. Heretofore there was no burden at all. Now he loses his citizenship if he does not come into the United States within 2 years after this bill passes and maintain that citizenship. He is out otherwise. Except also he has 2 years after he reaches the age of 21.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. We are not very far apart on this. Let us get back to this hypothetical case of the man in Germany. He has never been over here, he has never had the benefit of the teachings of Americanism. Let us assume he is a Nazi. He does not espouse our theories at all. But he has a pretty good claim that he is an American national. He can make out a pretty good claim that he is a national. Now all he has to do is step up to a consul and say, "I am an American national and I want you to give me a certificate," and the consul has to give it to him. If you interpret this law liberally he may have to give him that certificate. Then he can go over all Germany and say, "I am a German" when he wants to be a German and "I am an American" when he wants to be an American. And if he refuses to give him that certificate, that man may institute an action in our courts to have court take the time to hear his case.

This law goes too far in that respect. This fellow has the right to file a petition in the United States courts. We used to say that these fellows who are away from here have no right in our courts. But here is a man who has never been here and he has the right to file a petition in the United States court demanding a certificate that he is an American national, and he may use it.

Of course, you have one very fine provision in here and I compliment you for that. If the consul over there is on to his job he can make that fellow prove all these things before he gives him a certificate, but if he is inclined to be loose he may say, "We will let him go through. He claims he is a national, and we will give him a certificate." Then that fellow will parade himself as an American citizen. I know you have tried to shut the door. Now, I ask you this question in the spirit of an American, like all of us here are: Can I go out of this room after this is adopted and tell the people who are going to ask about this law that we have shut the door against that fellow? Do you make him establish the fact he is a national and that he is what he claims to be before he can masquerade all over Europe with a certificate from an American consul saying that he is something which he is not? What I want you to know is that if you have failed to do this you have overlooked an important matter. We should make our immigration laws fair toward the man or woman who is deserving, but we cannot be too strict toward the imposters and those who would undermine our Government and its institutions. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to prolong this discussion further.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Under the present law the individual the gentleman from Ohio is talking about does not have to go through any process at all. If he is still a citizen of the United States, even though born abroad, he does not have to go through any process at all. In this act we put the burden of proof upon that individual to show that he is a citizen or a national of the United States. Along with that, we have guarded the thing further. After placing the power and authority in the hands of the State Department, we give him, as I tried to explain a few minutes ago, a day in court. The other way he can come back into the United States, regardless of what we may say about it, because he is still a citizen and entitled to our protection, no matter how long he may have been abroad.

Mr. HINSHAW. I would like to ask a question about a person born in the United States of foreign parentage—that is, of noncitizen parentage—and who has this status of dual nationality. Suppose he is called back to join the army of the country of his parents, which he does. I understand that after his service he can apply for reentry to the United States under this act.

Mr. REES of Kansas. If he goes back to that army and joins without taking the oath, then he can come back to this country and petition for citizenship and have a hearing. If he has taken the oath of the foreign country he loses his citizenship and becomes an alien.

Mr. LESINSKI. There is an additional explanation. The law provides that any man who reaches the age of 21 must make his declaration within 2 years after his twenty-first birthday or he loses all his rights to American citizenship.

Mr. HINSHAW. Does this law provide that he cannot hold dual citizenship?

Mr. LESINSKI. This law provides he must make his declaration within 2 years and 9 months after his twenty-first birthday.

Mr. HINSHAW. There is one country in the Orient which says that if the parent of a child registers its nationality and citizenship with that foreign country before the child reaches 16 months of age, the citizenship is permanent.

Mr. LESINSKI. What foreign country?

Mr. HINSHAW. That does not make any difference.

Mr. LESINSKI. Suppose American-born children went back to Europe and settled there with their parents. Those are what we call dual citizens, or they hold dual citizenship. Now when those persons reach the age of 21 they must make a declaration upon attaining the age of 21 years and if they do not they lose all rights to American citizenship.

Mr. HINSHAW. Let us get down to cases and speak of the Japanese child born in the United States of Japanese parentage and who is registered with Japan as a citizen of Japan before he reaches the age of 16 months.

Mr. LESINSKI. Of course, our law is very plain on that. Everybody born here is an American citizen.

Mr. HINSHAW. I understand, but they are registered in their home country as Japanese citizens.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER].

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, one of the amendments that was written into this bill by the Senate was to give the right of citizenship to Filipinos who are in the Government service. The House conferees voted against that amendment, likewise did two of the Senate conferees, so the Senate receded from that amendment and it was stricken out. We felt that it was giving special privilege to one race, whereas there were many other people coming from other countries, such as Ireland, Sweden, and Poland, who were likewise in the civil service, and why should we give a special privilege to the Filipinos on the Pacific coast or elsewhere and not to the others. If they were losing their jobs by this legislation it is through the fault of no one but themselves because they were all the time holding themselves out as being American citizens.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time to put a few questions to the gentleman in charge of the bill, and particularly to the chairman of the subcommittee, who I feel sure is an eminent lawyer and constitutional authority. I was very much interested in the questions raised by the gentleman from Ohio which had to do with some of these complicated matters. In these days when we have so much discussion about and so much thought in the public mind concerning dangerous aliens and subversive influences, I am wondering what rights resident aliens have under the Constitution of the United States. I have heard it said that they have no rights guaranteed by the Constitution. Would the gentleman from Kansas comment on that question a bit? For instance, does the right to have a writ of habeas corpus, the right of judicial trial, the protection of due process of law, and other such rights apply with equal force to resident aliens as to citizens of the United States?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I appreciate the gentleman's compliment about my being a constitutional lawyer, but I am afraid if I went into too broad a discussion of the question he might discover that I am not as well qualified as a constitutional lawyer as he suggests. Nevertheless, I believe I can answer his question rather definitely and say that if this country sees fit to admit an alien to this country he is entitled to all the protection that is provided our own citizens under the law. I am speaking about the protection afforded under our Constitution. Of course, he does not have the right to vote or the right to hold office. Under our present laws we provide that aliens may not be employed by the various departments of the Government. However, the gentleman is talking about the Constitution.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I believe that what the gentleman means is that, as we all know, an alien who is in this country has all the rights of personal liberty that a citizen has.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is right. I appreciate the statement of the distinguished floor leader.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The Bill of Rights applies to that resident alien the same as to an American citizen?

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is right.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I thank the gentleman for the information and it confirms my thought on the matter.

As one who is a long way removed from his ancestors who came from Europe to American shores, I may be exhibiting that common American characteristic of the older inhabitants by wishing to tighten our immigration laws and deal more firmly with the aliens who have come among us. Yet I do appreciate the splendid human contribution which America has continually received from abroad. I am confident that love of America burns as fiercely or even more fiercely in the breasts of many newcomers than it burns in the breasts of some natural-born Americans or those who have descended from natural-born Americans. While all that is true, we must recognize that there are dangerous aliens among us. Even discounting some of the fears and the exaggerations of alarmists about "fifth columnists," prudence dictates that we reshape our laws concerning immigrants and concerning the taking out of American citizenship and concerning the treatment of resident aliens in this country.

Now that the Old World is on fire, and there will be effort made by many nationals of warring countries to escape Old World troubles and get to America, there is especial need of vigilance on our part to be more selective and to debar the dangerous and undesirable variety and deport that variety who are already here. American citizenship must mean something. It does mean very much, and it must not be too freely bestowed upon the unworthy. Those of us who have read sacred history remember how a great but despised early Christian frequently avoided persecution and escaped imprisonment merely by pronouncing the magic words, "I am a Roman citizen." Would to God every worthy person within the confines of our country might put greater meaning into similar words by proudly affirming, "I am an American citizen." Such would afford him all the rights, benefits, privileges, and blessings of our Bill of Rights and of the entire Constitution of the United States.

I have no patience with aliens who come to our shores, or who have years ago come to our shores, for selfish reasons, have lived here for years without attempting to become naturalized citizens. I have no plea nor excuse for them, and have never asked any special consideration of them. Of course, I am very well aware that there are many resident aliens in this country who have not become citizens, and who would like very much to become citizens, being prevented by some explainable matter from doing so. I have pity rather than censure for such aliens residing among us if their loyalty and attitude in other respects may be approved.

During recent weeks a sort of war-time hysteria has swept this country, and some professed patriotic leaders have demanded deportation of all alien troublemakers—as if we were not all anxious to do just that. They have been impatient of delay and careless about method. These would-be political figures sometimes assert that aliens residing in this country have no rights at all under the Constitution, and that they should be deported merely on the ground that they are charged with being hurtful.

It is my understanding that the entrance of a foreigner into this country is not a right of his but a privilege which our Government may grant or withhold, but when an alien has entered this country legally—or at least not illegally—and has resided here, that his status ripens into a right to the protection of our Constitution exactly as the Constitution and Bill of Rights protect American citizens. I further understand that the Supreme Court of the United States has declared that the writ of habeas corpus applies to an alien in this country exactly as to an American citizen, and that the right of judicial trial according to due process of law is guaranteed by the Constitution itself to aliens and nationals of other countries living in this country. Of course, some of these benefits to resident aliens may be further strengthened by treaty provisions between our Government and the governments of which they are subjects. Naturally such treaty provisions, according to the Constitution, become a part of the Constitution itself.

There certainly has been need, in recent months, for new legislation concerning immigrants and aliens, and Congress has passed quite a body of laws besides this measure before us today dealing with the subject. This legislative process has been going on for more than a year. On the 28th of June last, a comprehensive measure finally became law providing for the registration of aliens and also providing for deportation of certain classes of dangerous and undesirable aliens. I recall that the House bills which constituted the initial form of this recent legislation passed the House in May 1939, and I recall that the conference report on some of this legislation came before the House on June 22 this year. Apparently it takes considerable time to affect final enactment of these much needed measures. However, I do believe that this Congress, with new legislation and with codification of old legislation, has dealt energetically, and I hope effectively and fairly, with the problem of the aliens who live among us or who wish to come to live among us. I trust that this will emphasize the value of American citizenship in all minds and will duly safeguard the precious thing called the American way of life.

Such legislation is a complicated matter, and although I have not been able to look through this bill very carefully, I want to compliment the committee on what they have done. I hope it will clear up many of the questions which are puzzling us. Acting within the framework of constitutional principles and with patriotic loyalty, we need to draw the line sharply so as to deal justly with the three and one-half million or more aliens who are among us, and at the same time protect the great American heritage for our own children as well as for those who have come as our guests from other lands, later to become citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I want to go on with the question I was asking a moment ago about the child with dual citizenship who grows up here and is called back to serve in the Army of the country of his other citizenship, and then applies for reentry to the United States. The gentleman from Kansas said that at the age of 21 years plus 2 years and 90 days, I believe it was, he had to make a declaration of his determination of citizenship, but suppose the foreign country which has his other citizenship refuses to release him from that nationality. He might serve in that army and he might serve in a war against the United States. Is he still eligible to return to the United States? I mean, he might serve in the foreign army without taking the oath of allegiance, because of the feeling that he is already a citizen.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman now is talking about this man's becoming an enemy of this country.

Mr. HINSHAW. He might have served in a foreign army, and that army might have operated against the United States.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Let us divide the question. If an individual is born in the United States and joins the army without taking an oath of allegiance of the country of his dual citizenship, that is, he is born here of foreign parentage and as a child is taken by his parents to the country from which his parents came, and becomes a citizen of that country because of the parentage of his father and mother or his father or mother, as the case may be—that person would lose his citizenship.

Mr. HINSHAW. I brought up a moment ago the case where the child was registered with the consul before the age of 16 months, and consequently they claim him as a citizen.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am not sure that we would pay any particular attention to his registry. We would follow the law of our own country.

Mr. HINSHAW. Yes; but they claim him as a citizen because his parents, before the age of 16 months, registered him as a citizen of that foreign country.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman is suggesting a matter, I believe, that would have to be ironed out by the State Department. Let us get back to the simple question of an individual born here who acquires dual citizenship. We would follow the laws of our country and not the laws of any other country. If the parents go back to their home country and acquire citizenship in that country also, then that individual if he fights in the army of that particular country can only reacquire his citizenship by filing a petition in the courts of this country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] was temporarily called from the Chamber, and asked me to request unanimous consent that he be given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on the first legislative day of next week I may be permitted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to insert an article regarding the commercial and industrial depression in the Northwest and in other sections of the Nation, and the bearing which our transportation facilities have on the same, and also to include an article by William A. Marin, of Minnesota, an expert on rate problems. The matter, Mr. Speaker, is over the limit allowed, but I have taken it up with the Committee on Printing and have also obtained an estimate from the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us what he knows about the program for next week, because that will save a lot of questions if it is in the RECORD.

Mr. McCORMACK. On Monday, of course, we have the Consent Calendar and the conference report on the rivers and harbors bill and there may be one or two suspensions.

Mr. MICHENER. The Ramspeck bill will not be taken up?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; I understand the Ramspeck bill will be called up, and I am glad the gentleman has called that to my attention.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is that coming up definitely?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is my understanding; yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

PETITION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Assembly Joint Resolution No. 1.—Relative to memorializing Congress to pass legislation for the control of predators

Whereas due to existing Federal legislation the killing of predators that prey upon our fish and game is prohibited in national parks; and

Whereas such predators daily take a deadly toll of fish and game in and out of national parks; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, that the Legislature of the State of California does hereby memorialize the President and Congress of the United States to consider and enact legislation permitting the control of predators in national parks in the State of California by the California Fish and Game Commission and its duly authorized officers and agents; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the Assembly of the State of California is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California to the Congress of the United States, and that such Senators and Members from California are respectfully urged to support such legislation.

OFFER OF SERVICE TO THE UNITED STATES—RESOLUTION OF RUTLAND (VT.) LIONS CLUB

Mr. GIBSON presented a letter embodying a resolution adopted by the Lions Club of Rutland County, Vt., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LIONS CLUB,
Rutland, Vt., September 11, 1940.

The Honorable ERNEST W. GIBSON,
United States Senator for Vermont,
The Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We submit the following resolution, adopted September 3, 1940, for your consideration and possible action:

"Whereas the United States of America is now facing the gravest crisis in its existence; and

"Whereas there are, in the United States of America, many subversive factors tending to undermine the Constitution and abrogate the Bill of Rights on which our country was founded; and

"Whereas there is a decided need for sober, impartial, forbearing and constant vigilance on the part of true Americans; and

"Whereas the fundamental principle on which Lionism is based is our country's security; and

"Whereas we believe that by the proper application of the word L(iberty) I(ntelligence) O(ur) N(ation's) S(afety) we, as Lions, can do much to assist our country in an hour of need: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Rutland Lions Club of Rutland County, Vt., offer our collective and individual service to the proper authority in the United States of America, pledging ourselves to use diligence in the exercise of our rights and the rights of others under our Constitution and Bill of Rights, to the end that subversive elements and influences be eradicated; and be it further

"Resolved, To be mindful of the fact that a hasty act may work injury to others and to be sure of our ground before acting; and be it further

"Resolved, That we will abide by, after careful consideration, any instructions which may be given us by the properly constituted authority; and be it further

"Resolved, That we unequivocally and without reservation offer our service to our country for whatever action they may assign to us; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each one of our Senators and Congressmen representing the State of Vermont at Washington, D. C."

Signed by the president of the Rutland Lions Club, of Rutland County, Vt., attested by the secretary, this 3d day of September 1940.

ELROY M. CHASE, President.

Attest:

KENNETH M. ALEXANDER,
Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10322) to amend further the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2209) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10495) to amend section 61 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, by adding a proviso which will permit States to organize military units not a part of the National Guard, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 2210) thereon.

PRINTING OF MESSAGE OF PRESIDENT JAMES MONROE EMBODYING THE MONROE DOCTRINE

Mr. HAYDEN. From the Committee on Printing I report back, without amendment, Senate Resolution 321, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 321), submitted by Mr. O'MAHONEY September 26, 1940, was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the annual message of President James Monroe transmitted on December 2, 1823, to the first session of the Eighteenth Congress, embodying the Monroe Doctrine, be printed as a Senate document, with certain portions of the original message in facsimile as illustrations.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

On October 3, 1940:

S. 253. An act to authorize the leasing of certain Indian lands subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior;

S. 1160. An act for the relief of Roland Hanson, a minor, and Dr. E. A. Julien;

S. 3550. An act to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate commerce, and for other purposes;

S. 3636. An act to amend the National Defense Act, as amended, so as to provide for retirement of assistant chiefs of branches and of wing commanders of the Air Corps with the rank and pay of the highest grade held by such officers as assistant chiefs and wing commanders, and for other purposes;

S. 3868. An act for the relief of certain former disbursing officers for the Civil Works Administration and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration;

S. 4258. An act to remove the restriction placed upon the use of certain lands acquired in connection with the expansion of Mitchel Field, New York;

S. 4353. An act to restrict or regulate the delivery of checks drawn against funds of the United States, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, to addresses outside the United States, its Territories and possessions, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 267. Joint resolution providing for the acquisition by the Railroad Retirement Board of data needed in carrying out the provisions of the Railroad Retirement Acts.

On October 5, 1940:

S. 162. An act to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes;

S. 3437. An act for the relief of the Franco-American Construction Co.;

S. 3778. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide better facilities for the enforcement of the customs and immigration laws," approved June 26, 1930;

S. 3920. An act to amend the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938, as amended June 20, 1939, and for other purposes;

S. 4316. An act to repeal sections 4588 and 4591 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

S. 4341. An act to expedite national defense by suspending, during the national emergency, provisions of laws that prohibit more than 8 hours' labor in any one day of persons engaged upon work covered by contracts of the United States Maritime Commission, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 295. Joint resolution authorizing the participation of the United States in the celebration of a Pan American Aviation Day, to be observed on December 17 of each year, the anniversary of the first successful flight of a heavier-than-air machine.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CHAVEZ:

S. 4401. A bill to amend the act of June 7, 1939, providing for the acquisition of stocks of strategic and critical materials essential to the needs of industry and the national defense; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GUFFEY:

S. 4402. A bill to amend the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, Senate Joint Resolution 284 providing a method for the payment of amounts due to persons in the United States from foreign nationals in respect of the use in a certain foreign country of American patents, was referred to the Committee on Patents. That committee held some hearings, and various persons appeared and testified in connection with the bill. It became apparent, to the Committee on Patents, however, that the measure was such that it properly should be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Because the chairman of the Committee on Patents, the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], has been temporarily incapacitated from appearance here, he has asked that I move, in behalf of the Committee on Patents, that the committee be discharged from further consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 284, and that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency for its consideration; and I so move.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut.

The motion was agreed to.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS OF VETERANS' LAWS—AMENDMENT

Mr. ELLENDER (for himself and Mr. MEAD) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, jointly, to the bill (H. R. 8930) to amend section 202 (3), World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, to provide more adequate and uniform administrative provisions in veterans' laws, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

WIRE TAPPING AND INSTALLATION OF LISTENING OR RECORDING DEVICES—AMENDMENT OF RESOLUTION

Mr. GREEN submitted a resolution (S. Res. 323), which was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution No. 224, Seventy-sixth Congress (authorizing and directing an investigation of alleged wire tapping and installation of listening or recording devices), agreed to March 20, 1940, is hereby amended as follows:

(1) By striking out "to or from officials and employees of the Federal, State, and local Governments"; and

(2) By striking out "participated in by such officials and employees."

METHODS OF APPORTIONMENT IN CONGRESS (S. DOC. 304)

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, at the next session the Congress will consider the question of reapportionment for the redistricting of seats among the States in the House of Representatives. Prof. Edward V. Huntington, of Harvard University, has given years of study to this problem and has prepared an excellent exposition of the mathematical formula involved in the question of reapportionment of the seats in the House of Representatives. This manuscript will be an excellent source of material for the Members of the Congress who will be studying it and engaged in formulating a reapportionment bill, and for this reason I ask that Professor Huntington's manuscript may be published as a Senate document. It is entitled "A Survey of Methods of Apportionment in Congress."

Brookings Institution has examined the manuscript and state there is nothing in the field quite like it that adequately presents, in any single document, the data herein contained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the manuscript will be printed as a Senate document.

NATIONAL DEFENSE HOUSING—APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREE

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] was appointed one of the conferees on the part of the Senate on the bill (H. R. 10412) to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes, which is now in conference. The Senator from Missouri is temporarily absent from the Senate. I ask that the Chair appoint another conferee in his stead.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Chair appoints the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] a conferee in place of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN].

POSITION OF SENATOR CAPPER ON SENDING AMERICAN SOLDIERS ABROAD

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have received from Andree W. Olson, national organizer of the National Legion of Mothers of America, an organization "dedicated to peace, national defense, and Americanism," a letter asking what my stand would be should the Congress be called upon "to vote on the question of sending American men to fight on the battlefields of Europe." The letter is as follows:

To all Members of the Congress of the United States:

Honorable SIRS: Conforming to the mandates of the national board of the National Legion of Mothers of America, our national President, Mrs. Kathleen Norris, has instructed me to submit to each Member of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives the following question:

"What will be your stand should you be called upon to vote on the question of sending American men to fight on the battlefields of Europe?"

I respectfully submit this question to you and trust that I may have your answer at your earliest convenience.

Yours, in the interest of the American youth.

ANDREE W. OLSON,
National Organizer, National Legion of Mothers of America.

Mr. President, I think the Senate will be interested in my reply to this letter, as follows:

DEAR MRS. OLSON: In answer to your question:

"What will be your stand should you be called upon to vote on the question of sending American men to fight on the battlefields of Europe?" my answer is:

I will never vote to send American boys overseas to fight other nations' wars.

I do not believe it is the mission of the United States to police the rest of the world.

I do not believe it is our job to settle the boundary lines of Europe, nor to sacrifice the lives of American men and boys to decide the conflict of Old World power politics.

Europe has been fighting over boundaries and power for thousands of years; as far as I can see, it will continue to do so. We went over there in 1917, to save democracy, to wage a war to end war. We did not save democracy in Europe; the resulting peace that was not peace only bred more wars and now has spawned the biggest war of all. I do not believe in repeating that experience.

I believe in the Monroe Doctrine, and in making it effective. But coupled with the original statement of that doctrine, to the effect we would not allow any further interference by Europe in the Western Hemisphere, was the corollary that we would not intervene in European affairs.

I believe we should follow that policy, both parts of it. In that way only can we remain an independent nation. To insist that European nations keep out of the Western Hemisphere, and at the same time insist upon our right to intervene in Europe's conflicts, is not only illogical; it also is an unsound foreign policy. It would mean, in effect, that every generation or so we send an American expeditionary force to Europe, to fight the wars of European nations. I am opposed to that. I am unalterably opposed to war unless the United States is attacked.

I believe in adequate national defense, both military and economic; defense against attack from without, defense against collapse from structural weaknesses within. I am giving the national-defense program my best support.

The United States, in the world as it is today, must have a well-equipped and well-trained army; a powerful navy; a large air force, which, incidentally, I think should be an air army of itself, not just auxiliary to the land and naval forces.

But I want this adequate national defense as an insurance against war—not an assurance to some European power that we are going to intervene in Europe's conflicts.

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR CAPPER.

MRS. GEORGE C. HAMILTON AND NANETTE ANDERSON—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ELLENDER submitted the following report:

The Committee of Conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4561) for the relief of Mrs. George C. Hamilton and Nanette Anderson, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

ALLEN J. ELLENDER,
JOHN G. TOWNSEND, JR.,
PRENTISS M. BROWN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ROBERT RAMSPECK,
J. PARNELL THOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT AT DEDICATION OF FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT SCHOOL, EAST PARK, N. Y.

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by the President of the United States, at East Park, N. Y., on October 5, 1940, in connection with the dedication of the Franklin D. Roosevelt School, and two other schools, which appears in the Appendix.]

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR M'NARY BY SENATOR CAPPER

[Mr. CAPPER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by him on October 6, 1940, relative to the Presidential campaign and paying tribute to Senator MCNARY, the Republican nominee for Vice President, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE LATE SENATOR LUNDEEN

[Mr. HOLT asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Maj. Al Williams entitled, "Senator Lundeen," and an article by Boake Carter regarding Senator Lundeen, which appear in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY RAYMOND MOLEY ON INDISPENSABLE PRINCIPLES

[Mr. WILEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject of indispensable principles, delivered by Raymond Moley on September 17, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

RECIPROCAL-TRADE PROGRAM AND AMERICAN AGRICULTURE

[Mr. SCHWELLENBACH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter written by him to Mr. A. W. Ricker, editor of the Farmers Union Herald, St. Paul, Minn., relative to the reciprocal trade program and American agriculture, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY SENATOR THOMAS OF UTAH ON AMERICAN-JAPANESE RELATIONS

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on American-Japanese relations, delivered by Senator THOMAS of Utah on Sunday, October 6, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY SENATOR JOHNSON OF COLORADO ON AMERICAN-JAPANESE RELATIONS

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on American-Japanese relations, delivered by Senator JOHNSON of Colorado on Sunday, October 6, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

ARTICLE BY GEORGE SANFORD HOLMES ON WENDELL WILLKIE

STATEMENT OF FORMER REPRESENTATIVE JOHN O'CONNOR ON THIRD PRESIDENTIAL TERM

[Mr. BURKE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement on the subject of a third Presidential term, made by John O'Connor of New York, former chairman of the Rules Committee of the House of Representatives, before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary; which appears in the Appendix.]

ELECTION PROSPECTS—EDITORIAL FROM WASHINGTON TIMES-HERALD

[Mr. MINTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial published on the 5th instant in the Times-Herald, of Washington, D. C., under the heading "It looks like Roosevelt," which appears in the Appendix.]

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess last Friday, House bill 10127 was the pending business. The Chair is advised that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] desires to address the Senate. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

FRANK S. PERKINS

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield in order that I may ask the majority leader a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, there has been pending for several days on the Executive Calendar the nomination of a postmaster at Fremont, Nebr. I indicated that I desire to speak for 10 or 15 minutes on that subject, merely to lay the facts before the Senate, and that I desire to do it, if possible, when there are more than half a dozen Senators present, as is apt to be the case at the close of the day when we consider nominations on the Executive Calendar. I wonder if it would be agreeable, after my colleague shall have concluded his remarks, that the Senate take up that matter. It will not take long. We shall be apt to have more Senators here then than later in the day.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that we are likely to wind up the legislative business today a little earlier than usual, because there is nothing to be considered except some odds and ends and a conference report or two. I do not think the bill which is now under consideration will take long. We may conclude the business before us by the middle of the afternoon; but if I see that we cannot do so then we shall be able to take up the matter referred to by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. I thank the Senator very much.

KINGSLEY DAM, NEBR., AND TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in one of his periodical visits to the United States Senate, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] a few days ago appeared and made a speech. He immediately left and has not yet returned. I suppose he will not return until he has another speech ready, and then he will make another short visit to the Senate.

What I am about to say I wanted to say while the Senator was present; and I should have liked to say it immediately after he made his remarks the other day, in which he criticized some remarks I had made, and incidentally which some other persons and periodicals had made, against Mr. Willkie.

Upon a fair and candid consideration of the remarks I made, I think no one will conclude that they are in any degree affected by what the Senator from New Hampshire said in reply to them. In fact, what I considered some of the most serious criticisms I had made he did not refer to; and in the instances in which he did refer to my criticisms he did not refer to the most material part of them. I should not undertake to reply if it were not for the fact that I think, without exception, the Senator from New Hampshire used language which I think was discourteous, and some of it seemed to me to be malicious, against every person who had criticized Mr. Willkie and whom he was trying to answer. It struck me that the Senator from New Hampshire was going on the theory that when you are trying a lawsuit, and have not a good case, the thing to do is to abuse the other lawyer. Most of the charges he made against other persons had no reference whatever to what had been said in regard to Mr. Willkie and were absolutely immaterial so far as Mr. Willkie was concerned.

I shall speak first of a reference which the Senator from New Hampshire made to me in relation to some projects in my own State. I feel almost like apologizing to the Senate for taking up its time in referring to some things which have happened there which he talked about, which, as a matter of fact, have no direct relationship to Mr. Willkie. Because I had made some charges against Mr. Willkie, some criticisms which, in my judgment, were legitimate, Mr. Willkie being a candidate for President of the United States, the Senator from New Hampshire referred to some projects in my own State. He particularly said there is a desert in Nebraska which has been named after me, and he clearly left the impression that I was to blame for the existence of that desert. He stated that the Platte River was dry—I think he said—222 days in 1 year, and left the impression that the river became dry because I had advocated the building of a large dam known as Kingsley Dam on the Platte River.

The truth is, Mr. President—and I do not hesitate to say it emphatically—that the building of the Kingsley Dam on the Platte River had nothing whatever to do with the fact that the Platte River went dry. That is a common habit of the Platte River. It has a national reputation for being a mile wide and an inch deep; and the only difference in the dry seasons which have occurred during the past 6 or 7 years in that part of the country is that the river has not been an inch deep. Yet volumes of water have gone down the Platte River, damaging property farther down in the stream, in the Missouri River and in the Mississippi River. But when the critical time for irrigation comes in Nebraska in July and August the Platte River is dry. I do not know about its being dry as long as 222 days in 1 year, but probably the Senator spoke the truth. For argument's sake, at least, I am going to admit it.

The Kingsley Dam is an on-river dam in western Nebraska, on the Platte. It makes a reservoir which will hold 2,000,000 acre-feet of water. The Platte Valley, one of the most beautiful in the country, with a soil that is as fertile as that of the Nile Valley, easy of cultivation, a valley which ought to be a farmers' paradise, usually finds itself in July and August absolutely dry. As I said, the building of that dam had nothing whatever to do with the Platte River's going dry. The dam is not yet finished; and I say to you, Mr. President, that not a single gallon of water has ever been held back by that dam up to this very hour.

The idea was that many of the irrigation ditches on the Platte were not able to get water when the critical time for irrigating crops was at hand. That has been true for the last 6 or 7 years to a degree which would bring tears to the eyes of anyone who believes in his fellow man and who likes to see a return come from his toil and labor.

The dam will be completed this year, in a couple of months, and if water is then coming down the Platte, an effort will be made to store it for next year's use. When the floods come and when the winter months come, it is expected that the reservoir will be filled, but probably not in one year. Sometimes, according to the records, it could be filled in one year, sometimes it would take 2 years to completely fill the reservoir, and occasionally longer than that. For the last 6 or 7 years the experience in the Platte Valley has been that the farmers, through their irrigation ditches, have been able to irrigate their land so long as there was water flowing in the Platte, and when the Platte went dry the irrigation ditches went dry.

Mr. President, for 6 or 7 years in succession, now, we have seen the Platte dried up, the irrigation ditches without water, and land with growing crops on it absolutely ruined, so far as those crops were concerned. We have seen the crops wither and decay; we have seen the hot wind killing the corn and other vegetation, and we have seen the toil of the farmers along the Platte Valley all gone for nought. The farmers had put in crops and raised them partially until the hot winds and the dry weather came.

It was the dream of those who were behind the building of that great dam that waters which went down the Platte, when they could not be used in the valley, could be stored in this reservoir and that, when the Platte went dry, the flow could be made continuous by letting the water out of that great reservoir, and that, instead of drying up and blowing away, the crops there would be luxurious and the yield would be abundant.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the Chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. REED. May I ask the distinguished Senator from Nebraska the exact location of the dam about which he is speaking? It is near North Platte, is it not?

Mr. NORRIS. No; it is quite a distance west of North Platte. It is about 6 miles north of Ogallala. Ogallala is on the south fork of the Platte River. This dam is on the north fork of the Platte River, and at that place they are about 6 miles apart.

Mr. REED. I do not wish to disturb the train of thought of the Senator from Nebraska, but on the North Platte River in the western part of Nebraska and extending over into Wyoming, as I recall, there is a substantial amount of irrigation, and crops are raised by irrigation. Take, for instance, the Scotts Bluff district——

Mr. NORRIS. That is on the same river.

Mr. REED. How far below this dam has any attempt been made to raise crops by irrigation?

Mr. NORRIS. I could not give the Senator the definite distance, but all the way down the Platte, especially from North Platte east, there has been a series of irrigation ditches put in. Some of the ditches have been there for many years. In ordinary years large crops have been raised under those ditches. But the farmers had to do their irrigating before the Platte went dry. If they did not get their soil sufficiently soaked with water so that the crops could survive the dry weather, which everyone knew would come in July and August, they would have a failure.

Mr. REED. I was mentally comparing the situation on the Platte with the situation on the Arkansas River, in Kansas, the soil on both sides of which is quite sandy and porous. There is a so-called underflow which moves very slowly through that sandy and porous soil.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. REED. But on the Arkansas, in Kansas, to the best of my knowledge and belief, the farmers do not undertake to depend on irrigation, or use water for irrigation, much farther east than Garden City. West of Garden City, all the way up the Arkansas Valley to Pueblo, and even beyond Pueblo, to Canyon City, water is extensively used for irrigation purposes. My recollection, which I very freely admit may be faulty, is that, so far as the Platte River is concerned, there is no substantial irrigation east of North Platte.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; there is a great deal of irrigation east of North Platte.

Mr. REED. I admit to the Senator from Nebraska that I may be mistaken, and I appreciate the force of what the Senator might say as to when that so-called underflow of water, which seeps slowly down that sandy, porous soil, disappears. Of course, the alfalfa crop, which, as I recall, is one of the principal crops around Ogallala, needs that underflow, and the Platte River, as the Senator has said, being figuratively a mile wide and an inch deep, the valley on both sides, which is not a very precipitous valley at any place, is wide and level——

Mr. NORRIS. It runs back 25 miles on each side in some places.

Mr. REED. The underflow is important to the farmer. But I had been under the impression, which, of course, may be erroneous, and I accept the statement of the Senator from Nebraska, that there was no substantial irrigation east of North Platte.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Kansas that at Garden City, which he has mentioned, Nature has made a natural reservoir, which could be used if a dam were built across the Arkansas River there, and which would hold, let us say 2,000,000 acre-feet of water, so that when the Arkansas went dry, there would be irrigation below Garden City. The stream could be made a continuous stream, if water were stored at Garden City in sufficient quantity so that it could be let out when the stream was dry, to supply irrigation east of Garden City. That is what this dam is to do. It is designed to irrigate over 300,000 acres of land, and I believe, and the engineers believe, that it is the key to the situation. Even before the recently exceptional dry years came, we would have dry years in that section of the country intermittently. Sometimes there would be an abundant crop, and the farmers would not need any irrigation, but very seldom has there been a year, even if they had rain, when irrigation would not have vastly improved the productivity of the valley.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit, he was speaking of a possible natural dam site, if I correctly understood him, at Garden City. I wonder whether the Senator was not confused with the natural dam site at Caddoa, Colo.

Mr. NORRIS. No, Mr. President, I was not confused. I was not claiming that there was a dam site at Garden City. I was merely assuming that there was an opportunity at Garden City for a reservoir site, and saying that by building a dam it would be possible to store 2,000,000 acre-feet of water, and the water could be let out to irrigate land east of Garden City.

Mr. REED. Perhaps the very distinguished Senator from Nebraska may be familiar with the fact that the States of Kansas and Colorado have had litigation proceeding for many years over the division of water from the Arkansas River, which rises in Colorado. Since the time I was Governor of Kansas possibly those differences may have been reconciled, but we always complained that we were entitled, by priority of locating irrigation ditches, to a certain amount of water from the Arkansas River, whereas the State of Colorado disputed that claim, and they having possession of the water, and, as I understand, possession in law being practically considered about 9 points out of 10, we in Kansas have carried on litigation and discussion and negotiation with Colorado over the division of waters of the Arkansas River. Possibly the State of Nebraska may have had the same experience with the State of Colorado on a similar question.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, all that has been said by the Senator from Kansas is exceedingly interesting, but in my judgment it does not apply to what I want to say with respect to the remarks made by the Senator from New Hampshire. One can draw no other impression, not only from what the Senator from New Hampshire said here the other day, but from what has been said by representatives of the private power and utility leaders during all the time we have had this matter under discussion, that the district in question is a desert and, as he said, it is to be called the Norris desert. A deliberate attempt has been made to create that impression.

Mr. President, I may not be here when the work is completed; I probably will not be here; but I wish Senators who are here—and who I hope will remain here for many years—will remember what I now say. I give it as my judgment that that "desert," upon the storage of water behind this great dam will become a garden. I should like to live to see it. It will take several years of work before everything is in operation. It will take several years before the water stored behind that great dam will result in the raising of crops 200 miles east of the dam, but that it is coming is as plain as the rising sun to any honest student of the subject. The only thing left to be done to make this valley and similar valleys into productive agricultural districts is to store the floodwaters in reservoirs so that they can be let out in the streams and utilized at critical times in the growing season. That is the object of the dam in question.

Mr. President, I do not think I had as much to do with it as I am given credit for, but I am willing to take it all on my shoulders. Pile it up if you want to. I should not want anything better in the future years than to know that something had been done in that great valley, in that great State, to utilize the soil to produce the crops which can be produced under irrigation.

There is no use trying to irrigate from a stream which is dry when water is needed, and which may have an abundance of water at other times. The Platte River is full from bank to bank for months in the year, doing no one on earth one penny's worth of good, but causing damage farther on down along the Missouri and the Mississippi. We are called upon in the Congress to save that section of the country from damage which results from water traveling from the Rocky Mountains down the streams through the Missouri, into the Mississippi, and then into the Gulf.

Mr. President, the dam in question would have been completed 2 years ago if it had not been for private power companies and men who were doing their bidding. Had the dam been completed, we would not have had a flat crop failure in the Platte Valley this year. Instead of the desert the Senator speaks of there would have been a garden. The Senator from New Hampshire was instrumental, so far as he could be, in preventing that great tri-county project, as it is called—the tri-county irrigation power project—from becoming a reality.

About a year or two ago those sponsoring this project, together with those sponsoring another project, entered into negotiations to buy the Iowa-Nebraska Power Co., the second largest power concern in my State. After long negotiations an agreement was reached. The amount was agreed upon. All the details were drawn up. All the papers were signed, and all were approved by the Federal Power Commission and the P. W. A. It was necessary to secure money. That arrangement had also been made. In New York arrangements had already been made with representatives of insurance companies to take the bonds it was necessary to issue to buy the power company. Approximately $20,000,000 was involved. The State and local officials came to Washington. After they had obtained Federal approval, which was necessary, and after they had obtained the approval and the promise of the insurance companies to put up the money, they went to New York to sign the final contract.

Just before that happened, the Senator from New Hampshire offered in the Senate a resolution which is still slumbering in a pigeonhole in the Commerce Committee, demanding an investigation of the whole matter. Propaganda had been circulated over almost the whole country. The power representatives had agents in Nebraska who had been elected to the legislature. They were in league with the Senator from New Hampshire. What happened? After 2 years of study and negotiation, when everything had been agreed upon, when the price had been agreed to by everyone, men like the Senator from New Hampshire, who offered a resolution in the Senate, assisted by the power companies in Nebraska, scared the financial backers. When the State and local officials went to New York the men representing the insurance companies said, "We will probably have to face an investigation." A power man in the Nebraska Legislature had sent them information that as soon as the legislature met he was going to introduce legislation which would change the law on the subject. They further said, "We are faced with an investigation by the Senate of the United States. We do not feel we can afford to put up the money under these circumstances." They refused to put it up, and all the preceding negotiations and studies went for naught. More than a year's work and an enormous amount of money spent in the preliminary negotiations went for nothing.

The tri-county plan was met with injunctions from the time it came out of the cradle until about a year or so ago. One injunction suit was filed by the power companies in the District of Columbia court. The injunctions all failed. Everyone knew they would. But delay was what was wanted. The expense incurred in defending that litigation probably amounted to $1,000,000. Delay has occurred, so that at least one or probably two crops, which would have been abundant, have been absolute failures. Nothing has been produced.

The Senator from New Hampshire has never crowded his resolution. Probably he has forgotten it now, but it helped to do damage. It helped to withhold income from some of my constituents. It helped to withhold income from honest farmers and others which this irrigation would have produced.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire referred to the district as my—meaning the Senator from Nebraska's—desert, and he let the impression go out that in some manner I had made that desert. It was and it is to a great extent a desert when dry years come. It is true that the Platte is frequently dry. But the dam, as I said awhile ago, has never yet stored a gallon of water. It cannot commence to store water until it is completed and the floods come in the winter and spring months, and it will not be completed for a couple of months.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am very much interested in what the Senator has to say about the Platte River, and it reminds me of what I have read in our own history, that about a hundred years ago, when there were some improvements offered for the great region between the Mississippi River on the east and Crawley's Ridge on the west in what is now largely the State of Arkansas, and from the Missouri line down to the Louisiana line, a distinguished Senator from New England, who had never been there, said that he would oppose any appropriation of any kind, nature, or description in connection with the proposal, because the district in question was an impenetrable morass; that it was impossible for people ever to live in it or on it; that it was fit only for wild buffaloes, snakes, lizards, and alligators, and over which the suzerainty of man would never be established.

Today that valley, thus designated by a then New England Senator, is one of the garden spots of the world. I think more cotton and grain are raised there than in any other like territory in the world. Mankind has complete control over it. I have no doubt that when the Senator's dam is built and the water is furnished at proper times during the growing of the crops the territory he has described will become a great territory for the benefit of mankind.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator.

I now yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I merely wish to confirm out of experience one or two things the Senator has said in reference to the impounding of water.

In the first place, from 40 to 60 percent of the water which is put on the land percolates back into the stream. On all the irrigation acreage above the great dam about which the Senator speaks—and that acreage extends through the State of Wyoming and into Colorado—the water will percolate back and finally come down into the stream, to be impounded and held for use.

With reference to the length of time required to fill a dam, of course we have had some dry years. Everybody is familiar with the great drought all over the United States. I call attention to the fact that when the great Pathfinder Dam was built the engineers for the Government and others predicted that 4 years would be required to fill it. However, the year the dam was completed it filled up, and water began to run over the top. We hired farmers from the surrounding country with their teams to bring in sand and load sandbags and put them on top of the dam in order to protect it. Dams can be filled quickly when we have a favorable year.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator from Wyoming.

The Senator from New Hampshire said that a recent refunding of the bonds which these three projects owe to the Federal Government had taken place, and that the interest had been reduced from 4 percent to less than 1 percent. Technically, that is true. As a practical matter, there has been no diminution of the interest. The bonds were refunded by an organization of the three districts by which they could operate as one, and the time for payment was extended. The interest on the first payment was cut down. It gradually increases, so that in the end the Government will receive the same amount of money it would have received if there had been no refunding. The interest goes up as high as 5 percent. That plan was agreed to in order to leave no doubt that these great projects would be a success. The time was extended over 60 years, so that the payments could be made gradually.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks two editorials written by J. E. Lawrence, editor of the Lincoln Star, in Lincoln, Nebr. One is entitled "That Nebraska Rat Hole," and the other "Senator BRIDGES Views Norris Desert."

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Lincoln (Nebr.) Star of October 3, 1940]

THAT NEBRASKA RAT HOLE

By strange coincidence—or was it coincidence?—at approximately the same hour Senator H. STYLES BRIDGES, of New Hampshire, was pointing the accusing finger at what he described as Nebraska's rat-hole project, 250 farmers, businessmen, and University of Nebraska agricultural experts were inspecting a 35-acre field of tri-county irrigated corn on the T. A. Gustafson farm near Funk.

Three acres of the forage crop, 14 feet in height, will yield 66 tons of ensilage. The remaining 32 acres, the extension agronomist of the University of Nebraska, Prof. D. L. Gross, said would make 77 bushels an acre, dry measure. In all of that area except where irrigation was had as in the instance of the Gustafson farm, corn was a complete failure due to drought. And the big storage dam at Keystone, still under construction, still waiting the first storage of water for the irrigation of hundreds of thousands of acres of land, is not yet finished. When finished Nebraska's future, the future of that region within the tricounty area, will be infinitely brighter.

That tricounty irrigation near Funk—there are several thousand acres in that vicinity receiving direct stream flow from the Platte, with all apologies to Senator BRIDGES—furnishes convincing evidence of what is feasible in the years ahead. Yet BRIDGES, one of the Republican high command, one of the stalwarts behind Willkie, one of the speakers carrying on in this Presidential campaign, as a part of that campaign contemptuously refers to the efforts of Nebraskans to rebuild soil fertility, to store waste flood waters, as the Nebraska rat hole. That also is homely and rugged language, a thousand miles from home, and a thousand miles from presentation of the facts.

SENATOR BRIDGES VIEWS NORRIS DESERT

As a stranger to Nebraska, unfamiliar with its problems New Hampshire's Senator BRIDGES perhaps should be forgiven for his speech on the floor of the United States Senate Wednesday. That would be the charitable thing to do. But the speech smelled to high heaven. It reeked with misstatements of fact. Calling for an explanation, according to press dispatches, "why 11 counties in west central Nebraska have the local name of the 'Norris desert,'" Senator BRIDGES went on to say:

"It is a man-made desert, made by the New Deal at the insistence of the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska. There are three hydroelectric projects. Two of them are on a stream that in very recent times has been dry for more than 100 miles and for as much as 222 days in a single year. Now, as everybody knows, water for irrigation is needed to be stored for use during the growing season. And electricity, to be valuable, must be deliverable 365 days out of the year. These dams were used for power so that little was left for irrigation."

Senator BRIDGES said that disregarding engineering reports, $60,000,000 had been poured down the Nebraska "rat hole."

Senator BRIDGES visits to Nebraska have been limited, necessarily. The few days that he was here on flying trips were supposed to have been devoted to inspecting the projects he undertook to discuss upon the floor of the Senate.

These are the facts:

1. The Tri-County Dam is under construction, and no attempt has been made to store water behind it either for irrigation or the development of electrical current. No storage can be undertaken until the work is complete.

2. The Sutherland project has been producing limited amounts of electricity and providing limited amounts of water, supplemental water for irrigation, for 2 years. The Sutherland project embraces storage in the Sutherland Reservoir, and the only dam in connection with this is a structure built solely for diversion purposes.

That is as near as Senator BRIDGES came to telling the facts. The Platte River has been dry. The central sections of Nebraska have been afflicted with a drought. The most severe drought in those same counties took place in 1934 before so much as a spade of dirt on either project had been turned. Those same counties have experienced year after year of drought although not a pint of water has been diverted to the production of electricity by the Tri-County. And that is not the worst of Senator BRIDGES reckless handling of the facts. His own words reveal an astounding contradiction. He said the river had been dry for as much as 100 miles and for as long as 222 days in a single year, and he charged that water stored behind the dam had been used for power so that little was left for irrigation. This water used for power, when it is used for that purpose, and when the Tri-County's construction is completed—where does Senator BRIDGES expect it to go after it passes through the generating systems?

Cruising off by itself in new channels on a strange and lonely expedition?

It will go only one place, and that is back into the channel of the Platte, to be used 365 days in the year by the people living along the Platte in those same 11 central Nebraska counties. Necessarily if electricity is generated out of water in the Platte throughout every day of the 365 days of the year, it will return to the channel of the stream. It isn't consumed by the power plants' manufacture of electricity. They do not drink it up or eat it. The water only passes through and out again. Its volume is not diminished. The best insurance that the Platte never would be dry, even a single day, would be the storage of such flood and waste waters in such quantities that each day 1,500 second-feet flow could be passed through the plants producing electricity and permit it to continue on downstream every day, a flowing river every day in the year, instead of the dry, sandy bed of these recent years.

This matter is of some importance to the people of Nebraska. It is their hope for the future. This State must have irrigation. This State must store water for irrigation. Every drop of water that is stored adds so much to the security of its agriculture against heat and drouth and ruined crops. Putting that stored water to use in the production of electricity does not in any way interfere with its use for irrigation, and if the production of electricity is successful 365 days in the year, a dry stream must become a stream carrying whatever amounts of water daily are utilized for the manufacture of electricity. The profits of the sale of electricity offset the cost of irrigation to the farmer.

This matter is of some consequence to the people of Nebraska. These projects are not Federal projects but projects developed and built or under construction by the people of Nebraska.

As a member of the Willkie brigade, Senator BRIDGES statement merits the closest attention.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I also ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point an article appearing in the World-Herald, of Omaha, Nebr., on August 18, 1940, entitled "Joint Operations, Pooled Revenue Mark Hydros' New Finance Scheme."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Without objection, the article may be printed in the RECORD.

The article is as follows:

[From the Omaha (Nebr.) World-Herald of August 18, 1940]

JOINT OPERATIONS, POOLED REVENUE MARK HYDROS' NEW FINANCING SCHEME

Last Thursday Nebraska's three major public power and irrigation districts—the "hydros"—embarked upon a new phase of their development which to observers of their troubled career offered the best hope yet for self-sufficiency and effective action.

On Thursday the $37,000,000 debt which the three districts owe to P. W. A. was refinanced by issuance of new bonds which do not mature for 60 years. And on Thursday the districts began operating under a joint operating agreement which in effect fuses the power and irrigation activities of all three into one unity.

Those two developments together were designed to bring about these consequences:

1. Gradual and orderly retirement of the entire debt without hampering growth in the early years;

2. Maximum beneficial use of Platte and Loup river waters;

3. Replacement and repair of equipment, together with potential expansion, from the hydros' own resources;

4. Rapid assurance of at least 306,000 acres under irrigation and generation of at least 480,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity a year.

If those hopes are realized, the date of August 15, 1940, will mark a big day in the history of the hydros.

Two of the three are now in operation—Platte Valley and Loup. They have had a hard row to hoe. Platte Valley's reservoir has failed to hold its full capacity of water. Both districts have been unable to meet interest payments. Both have been hampered by lack of a market.

But now the market is assured, through contracts with private utilities. And next winter the biggest project of the three, Tricounty, will be ready for action. The new phase of the hydros' history will depend upon how well Tricounty lives up to engineers' expectations. The solvency and effectiveness of all three now depend on it.

AUTHOR

Chief architect of the change, though not the only one, is K. Sewell Wingfield, the mild-spoken Virginia-born chief project engineer for P. W. A. who has been the nurse, coordinator, peacemaker, and director of the hydros during the latter years of the construction period.

Trained as an engineer, apprenticed as vice president of a Wall Street investment house, Wingfield joined P. W. A. soon after its organization in 1933. His first work was in the financial division, passing on bonds, certifying the fiscal soundness of hundreds of projects submitted for P. W. A. loans and grants. From there he went into the power division, becoming assistant chief of all P. W. A. electric enterprises.

Wingfield was sent to Nebraska in 1937 to take over direction of P. W. A. activities. His job, to put it in the worst terms, has been to pull the hydros out of the fire—to make them work, make them pay back the Government's investment.

Now, after months of laborious study and negotiation, Wingfield is preparing to leave again for Washington, to become P. W. A. power chief. He goes with the knowledge that everything has been done that could be done to bring about the solvency and self-sufficiency of the hydros; that the Government has been persuaded to accept a delay in repayment of its loans; that the districts, without giving up their identities, have been persuaded to adopt unified operations; that a mighty instrument of potential benefit to Nebraska has been created.

WHY?

Why is refinancing necessary? Why have the hydros failed to work out on the original basis?

Says Wingfield: "The reason is that conditions have changed, the projects themselves have changed, the manner in which they will be operated has changed. The projects as constructed are entirely different from those originally proposed.

"To meet these changes and to provide a type of financing which realistically allowed for actual conditions, refinancing was necessary."

Changes from the original plans fall into three brackets:

1. Costs are higher than first planned. Why? Partly, says Wingfield, because of delays in construction, some of which he says were caused by power-company injunctions; some by starting construction hastily, in the interest of creating jobs, before all studies and plans have been made. Other costs were raised by changes in design, others by rising prices of materials and labor. Much of the increase was due to the addition of the hydros' own transmission system, not included in original plans.

2. Tricounty, with its big Kingsley Dam on the Platte River, has been added to a picture which included originally only Loup and Platte Valley, neither able to guarantee alone a large supply of firm power. Tricounty makes unification possible.

3. Development of revenues as originally planned has been delayed, first by court and legislative battles between the districts and private power companies, second by the hydros' effort to purchase private utilities in their quest for a market. When the latter effort failed the hydros signed up contracts to supply the existing market, largely controlled by private interests.

AGREEMENT

Key to the new plans is the operating agreement which went into effect Thursday.

In arriving at this agreement, Wingfield and the districts projected operations against a background of water records from 1930 to 1938. A study by Douglas G. Wright, P. W. A. engineer, furnished the foundation.

Wright's assignment was to find out how the hydros would have operated during those 9 years had they been in existence. They were dry years, years of low water supply. It is reasonable assumption says P. W. A. that water supply in the forties will be at least as large.

What Wright found out was that the hydros, operating as a unit during those 9 years, would have:

1. Supplied water on the Platte to satisfy all prior rights.

2. Furnished 100,000 acre-feet for irrigation from ditches under the Platte Valley project (about 25,000 acre-feet were actually supplied this year by Platte Valley, operating alone).

3. Furnished complete irrigation for 206,000 new acres under the tricounty project.

4. Generated at least 480,000,000 kilowatt-hours of firm power every year, with production averaging 491,000,000 and peak seasonal output hitting 511,000,000.

To achieve these results, the Loup district must use all water available to it for power generation, carrying peak loads at times; Platte Valley virtually abandons its Sutherland reservoir, where seepage is so bad that the basin can be only partially filled; Tricounty stores water for both its own project and Platte Valley behind Kingsley Dam, and Kingsley stabilizes power production for all three districts, running enough water through its hydro plants to guarantee a minimum output for the system as a whole.

Though the water study shows a minimum power output of 480,000,000 kilowatt-hours a year, Wright recommended that during the first 3 years the districts should limit their firm power contracts to 325,000,000, revising after that according to experience.

POOL REVENUES

Beginning August 15, all revenues go into a joint fund. First payments from this go to meet operating costs of each district. The balance is shared according to the proportion each district's debt bears to the total debt. Roughly, this will mean a split of 52 percent to Tricounty, 25 Percent to Loup, 23 percent to Platte Valley.

This division of revenues Wingfield says, expresses, as well as the debt ratio, the approximate contribution of each district to the system. Loup contributes about 34 percent of the power; Platte Valley, 25 percent of the power, plus irrigation; Tricounty, 41 percent of the power, plus irrigation, plus storage.

Operations are under a board of managers, composed of the manager of each district. Later, probably not before the first of the year, they may choose an executive officer to carry out their orders. Expenses of the joint system are met by the districts, each paying according to the debt ratio.

FINANCING TO FIT

On this agreement rest the refinancing plans. Unlike many enterprises, in this case the financing was made to fit the operations, not operations to fit the financing. What Wingfield did was to estimate probable revenues for the next 60 years, basing his estimates on the water supply shown to be available and on existing contracts for sale of power and water.

Contracts with Nebraska Power of Omaha and Iowa-Nebraska of Lincoln call for purchase of a certain amount of firm power which increases by steps until it reaches a maximum, plus purchases of secondary power as needed.

Other contracts with private companies call for purchase of secondary power only.

Still other contracts (with some municipalities, R. E. A. districts and one power company, Southern Nebraska) call for purchase of all their requirements from the hydros. In these cases Wingfield has assumed a gradual increase in requirements; but to be safe he has assumed in most instances that load growth in the future will be less than it has been in the past.

Adding up the amount of power which could be sold under these contracts, Wingfield figures that for the year ending April 30, 1942, the system's revenues will total $1,120,710. This year they are running at the rate of about $700,000 a year, which is more than Wingfield estimated. They are expected to increase as Tricounty comes into the picture, providing a greater supply of firm power, which commands a better price than secondary.

By 1945 revenues are expected to reach $1,695,580; by 1950, $2,435,560; by 1965, $3,336,970.

Wingfield considers his estimates more than conservative. Although the water study showed 480,000,000 kilowatt-hours of firm power could be delivered each year, he counted only on sales of a top of 360,000,000, which would not be reached until 1954.

NEW BONDS

Given the revenues, the problem was to devise a bond issue which could be paid off by them, which would give the Government all its money back, and which would not penalize the hydros. To turn the trick required months of patient figuring.

The old bonds were in these amounts:

Loup, $9,268,000.

Tricounty, $19,793,000.

Platte Valley, $8,776,000.

They were serial bonds, bearing 4-percent interest, scheduled to be retired steadily over a period of 30 years.

The new bonds are in the same amount. They are term, not serial, bonds, all maturing in the year 2044. But the trust indenture requires that certain amounts of them be retired steadily, beginning in 1946, just as if they were serial bonds. Retirement will be by selecting certain bonds by lot for redemption, at a premium amounting to 4½ percent.

The interest rate, instead of being fixed, is variable. The problem was to keep bond payments low in the early years; to secure repayment of the Government's loan in full; to pay off the bonds in a reasonable period; to keep the top interest rate as low as possible; to prevent the call premium from becoming excessive.

A final balancing of all these factors resulted in establishing interest rates beginning this year at only one-fourth of 1 percent, rising gradually to 3 percent in 1945, to 4 percent in 1951, and a top of 5 percent in 1956.

Over the whole 60 years, the total of interest paid plus call premium paid will almost exactly equal the amount which would be paid if a flat 4-percent-interest rate were in effect throughout.

In figuring what the districts can afford to devote to debt retirement, the plan sets up total operating costs of $750,000.

After paying operating costs, each district must place a certain sum in the interest and sinking fund; next, build up a renewal fund; next, an extension fund; and the balance will go into surplus.

The renewal fund is designed to take care of repairs and replacement of equipment. The indenture requires that each district build up this fund to a certain minimum, and then keep it at that level. For Loup and Platte Valley, a $150,000 fund is required; for Tricounty, $300,000.

The extension fund is quite separate, and is meant to give the hydros a "kitty" with which they can extend their systems, electric or irrigation, in years to come. Each district is required to build up this fund until, in 1950, it reaches $1,000,000 for Tricounty, and about $500,000 each for Platte Valley and Loup. After that, continuance of the fund is optional with the districts.

BACK INTEREST

In addition to the bonded debt, two of the districts owe defaulted interest. Platte Valley paid no interest in 1937, its first year, a very small part in 1938 and 1939, and none in 1940. Its total back interest is $1,137,513. Loup paid only part in 1938, 1939, and 1940, has unpaid a total of $761,520.

This will not be funded with the new bonds. Instead, P. W. A. agrees to accept installment payments without charging interest on them. A separate agreement calls for Loup and Platte Valley to pay off this interest separately, over the same period as the bonds. P. W. A. accepts a junior lien to the bonds.

UP TO KINGSLEY

Clearly enough, the whole set-up depends upon operation of Tricounty's big Kingsley dam on the Platte River. For that dam must, by storing large amounts of water, guarantee a firm supply of marketable power from the grid while at the same time conserving water for irrigation.

Can it be done? Wright's water study is P. W. A.'s answer. If Kingsley Dam had been completed in 1929, instead of 1940, it would have been half full (1,000,000 acre-feet) by the end of the first year; three-fourths full in the second and third years, nearly full in the fourth year, full and overflowing in the fifth year, over half full in the sixth and seventh years, and somewhat less than half full in the eighth and ninth years.

Always it would have been full enough to guarantee irrigation for 306,000 acres and generation of 480,000,000 kilowatt-hours of firm power.

Will water supply in the next 10 years be as high as in the past 10? Wright says the chances are all in favor of the belief that it will. Asked if additional storage of Platte River water by the Casper-Accova project in Wyoming is likely to diminish the supply, he answers:

"If you have 8 buckets to catch water in Wyoming, and you can fill only 6 of them, it won't make any difference to Nebraska if you increase the number of buckets to 10. That's what's been happening.

"There hasn't been enough water to fill the Wyoming reservoirs during the past 10 years, and still the Platte has had enough water in it at Kingsley to do these things. Further storage can't hurt us. The great bulk of Platte River water at Kingsley, apart from direct flow, comes into Nebraska not in the river but in irrigation canals, and gets back into the river bed by return flow."

Mr. NORRIS. In that article the engineer who has done probably more than any other one man to bring about this organization explains in detail just what has happened. There is no secret. Nobody is trying to cover up anything. There is no intention to rob anybody. Here is a great scope of country. If it is all irrigated as is contemplated, a virtual empire can be brought into production by the building of this dam. Irrigation is the real object of it. But, Mr. President, at least under present agricultural conditions, the farmers who buy the water and must pay for it would not be able to build that great dam merely as an irrigation project. In two of these projects there are power facilities which will produce a large amount of hydroelectric energy, but the dam is required to give a constant flow.

The Senator from New Hampshire laughs and makes fun of the idea of getting power from a river which is dry for 200 days in 1 particular year. He has not yet comprehended what the plan is. He does not know what the building of the dam and the storage of 2,000,000 acre-feet of water mean. The engineers have gone over every feature connected with the project carefully and in detail.

The Senator from New Hampshire said in his speech that four Government engineers had condemned this great scheme. That is not true, Mr. President. The Senator is mistaken. He has been misinformed. As I remember the facts—and I think I remember them—only one Government engineer made an adverse report, and that was only as to power. The engineer who went with him gave a glowing report and said that in his opinion the building of the dam was one of the geratest things he had ever heard of or known about. If we had eliminated power, the cost of the project as an irrigation project would have been prohibitive. If we had taken irrigation out of it, the cost to produce power would have been prohibitive. By combining the two we cheapen both and put the project on a fair financial basis.

The Senator was probably milder in the language he applied to me than in the language he applied to anyone else to whom he referred. For instance, he referred to the New Republic in language which is not creditable to a United States Senator in reference to any honorable publication or honorable man. The New Republic had criticized Mr. Willkie, and it thus becomes the subject of the Senator's denunciation. No one can read his language without coming to the conclusion that he was perfectly unjustified in the language he used. The New Republic criticized Mr. Willkie and the Senator from New Hampshire practically ignored the criticism and laid violent hands on the New Republic.

We all know the New Republic. Some of us agree with it most of the time, some of us all the time. I have not always agreed with it, but we know its high standing as a journal in the United States. We know that it is not a partisan publication. We know that it has been a liberal organ. Whether or not we agree with the policies it advocates, it seems to me there is no question of its high standing everywhere it is known.

After the Senator had spoken the other night I received a telegram from the New Republic referring to his statements. I wish to read it. It is dated October 3 and is addressed to me:

Senator STYLES BRIDGES quoted in today's New York Herald Tribune accusing New Republic "plain and fancy lying."

That is the language he used. Anyone who dares to criticize Mr. Willkie is guilty of "plain and fancy lying." He is a liar. That is the sentiment in the speech of the Senator from New Hampshire, running not only to one but to everybody who has made any criticism.

SENATOR STYLES BRIDGES QUOTED IN TODAY'S NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE ACCUSING NEW REPUBLIC

"Plain and fancy lying" in its special statement about Willkie. Should appreciate it if you could bring following facts to attention Senate and insert CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

All specific charges of error this supplement have been dealt with in our pages and, though we are not infallible, no substantial mistake has been discovered. If any error can be found we shall immediately publish correction and apology.

Senator BRIDGES asserts New Republic refused print rebuttal of our supplement by Russell Davenport. Davenport's rebuttal appears on page 449 of our issue date September 30. We have received no other statement by Davenport and have refused to print none. We have sent Senator BRIDGES a telegram containing substantially all the foregoing statements.

NEW REPUBLIC.
By BRUCE BLIVEN.

That only illustrates what the Senator from New Hampshire always does; it only illustrates the thing to which I am trying to call the attention of the Senate. "Fancy lying" he calls the New Republic article. I have on my desk a copy of Mr. Davenport's article, and I have also a copy of the New Republic containing an article entitled "Willkie and the Record," in which the facts are again reviewed. It appears in the September 30, 1940, issue of the New Republic, and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, at this point in my address to print the article in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the New Republic of September 30, 1940]

WILLKIE AND THE RECORD

On page 449 of this issue of the New Republic a letter from Mr. Russell W. Davenport, Mr. Willkie's personal representative, attempts to discredit our entire supplement, This Man Willkie, on the basis of a few instances of what he terms fiction. It is pertinent first of all to consider these instances:

1. "There is the statement on page 327 that Commonwealth & Southern's subsidiaries have in force only 2 labor contracts with the A. F. L. The most elementary care in investigation would have revealed the fact that these companies have no less than 21 existing contracts with the A. F. L. and 1 with the C. I. O."

What we said was, "The A. F. L. reports two contracts with Commonwealth subsidiaries." This was in accordance with the latest official A. F. L. statement. Mr. Davenport apparently obtained his information from a list issued by the Associated Willkie Clubs of America. All but 4 of the contracts there listed are with street-railway or bus employees; transportation properties have been segregated from the 10 recognized Commonwealth & Southern subsidiaries and put under a separate corporation, the Transportation Securities Co. These contracts represented collective-bargaining relationships established years ago, prior to the formation of Commonwealth & Southern and Mr. Willkie's connection with it.

There are four companies with contracts covering power utilities proper. Of these, South Carolina dates from 1912 and Georgia Power from 1919—17 and 10 years, respectively, before Commonwealth & Southern was formed. That may be the reason for the A. F. L. understatement. Of the other two contracts, Gulf Power (1939) is the smallest of all the subsidiaries, and Central Illinois Light (1940) was signed a month before the Republican convention. The list, significantly, does not include the three important subsidiaries cited by the New Republic as guilty of specific unfair labor practices—Alabama Power, Consumers Power, and Ohio Edison.

Mr. Davenport makes no mention whatever of the overwhelming evidence of unfair labor practices cited in great detail by the New Republic: (a) That the National Labor Relations Board found three Willkie subsidiaries guilty of interfering with the self-organization of employees by the promotion of company unions; (b) that these company unions had been fostered to fight both the A. F. L. and the C. I. O.; (c) that the Board found Consumers Power guilty of flagrant intimidation and coercion of active union members; (d) that Consumers Power violated its agreements with the C. I. O. The first agreement with that company, made in 1937 following a strike, was signed by Mr. Willkie himself, but the management almost immediately proceeded to violate it by promoting its company union, spying on C. I. O. meetings, and discriminating against C. I. O. members.

On the basis of the record it may be fair to say that where Mr. Willkie found labor contracts existing he left them undisturbed, but where labor sought recognition his companies successfully resisted collective bargaining except in three cases—the least important subsidiary (Gulf Power), a subsidiary where the issue became acute 1 month before the nominating convention (Central Illinois Light), and the subsidiary where, as we have stated, he reportedly attempted to make an alliance with labor to fight the T. V. A. (Georgia Power).

2. "The writer suggests * * * that Mr. Willkie is responsible for such criticisms as may be made of the organization of Commonwealth & Southern and its common-stock exchange offers." But, according to Mr. Davenport, this suggestion, and the entire thesis of our section, Mr. Willkie in Business, falls to the ground because Commonwealth & Southern was incorporated May 1, 1929, and offered its exchanges of stock on June 12, whereas Mr. Willkie did not become counsel for the corporation until October 1, 1929.

What the article set out to prove was not that Mr. Willkie was personally responsible for these matters, but that he was not entirely candid when he said, according to James C. Hagerty in the New York Times of July 16, 1940: "I am very proud that I had nothing to do with that phase of American economic life. * * * I found myself in complete accord with Speaker Bankhead in his condemnation of speculative orgies of the 1920's." What the article charged was: "So in the spring and summer of 1929 Mr. Willkie, giving the lie to the noble defiance of evil speculation expressed by Candidate Willkie in 1940, saw nothing wrong with what the bankers were doing with Commonwealth & Southern. When the chance came to become an insider himself, he acted as though Commonwealth & Southern were the best fraternity in the campus." Note that these sentences say explicitly that the bankers did the job, that Mr. Willkie saw nothing wrong with it, and that soon afterward he joined the organization.

Of course, Mr. Davenport might argue that Mr. Willkie, with childish innocence, did not know what the bankers had been doing—although many prominent men were attacking holding-company abuses and predicting calamity. But the periodical of which Mr. Davenport was managing editor before the campaign—Fortune—wrote about Wendell Willkie in May 1937: "He learned so much about the business that when Commonwealth & Southern was formed he was invited to join John C. Weadock as the corporation's counsel in New York." It may be added that the Akron Co. which Mr. Willkie represented before his move to New York was merged with a Youngstown company to make Allied Power & Light. This company was originally valued at $3,600,000 and was written up to $18,000,000 in the big merger, as a subsidiary of Commonwealth & Southern. Did Mr. Willkie also not know that this was going on?

3. Mr. Davenport repeats Mr. Willkie's sweeping denial that any Commonwealth & Southern Co. ever employed labor spies, but includes no evidence in support of the denial. He offers again the explanation that the detectives were hired only to check up on streetcar fares. Since no new defense is here presented, we can only refer our readers to the full reply to this denial in our issue of September 16, "Mr. Willkie pleads guilty." We might add that several of the Commonwealth & Southern Cos. shown by the La Follette committee to have hired labor detectives have no transit lines.

4. Without evidence or argument Mr. Davenport denies several other statements. On these we must rest until we are presented with some good reason to revise them. We trust that Mr. Willkie, as promised in the last sentence of the letter, will write a full answer to the supplement. When he does so we shall be delighted to publish it and to acknowledge any errors we may have made. The New Republic has no pretense to infallibility. But if the replies so far received are a sample, we do not believe any material corrections will have to be made.

So far the replies have either answered charges we did not make, or offered corrections in immaterial details. The point of the labor section, for instance, was not the number of union contracts under Commonwealth & Southern—the statement concerning them was made incidentally near the end of the article. The chief point, of which no refutation has been attempted, was that in important instances subsidiaries fought unions and defied the Labor Relations Act.

Mr. NORRIS. Now we come to another matter to which the Senator referred. It is the case of Chattanooga, and, incidentally, Mr. President, the principal statements of record which I put in my address the other day which the Senator from New Hampshire undertook to answer stand now, after his speech, uncontradicted in any manner. He does not deny them; he cannot deny them, because I included in full in my address which the Senator from New Hampshire was criticizing a letter written to Willkie. The letter is in the RECORD of September 27, 1940, and refers to the Chattanooga case. The letter was directed to Mr. Willkie himself by the president of the bogus organization that was fighting in behalf of Mr. Willkie to defeat the bond issue. On the investigation he was put on the stand; that letter was produced, and I read it to the Senate. In the letter the writer calls Mr. Willkie's attention to the fact that they had been unsuccessful in their fight—he does not say so, but, as a matter of fact, they were defeated two to one in the election—and says that they have a large deficit; a few hundred dollars over $10,000, and he asks Mr. Willkie to contribute. The Commonwealth & Southern, Mr. Willkie's corporation, had already contributed $10,000 in that fight. In answer to that letter there came a communication with the memorandum in it enclosing a check of the Commonwealth & Southern for $10,000 to make up the deficit. That stands undisputed; nobody has denied it; there is not any question of its truth.

Mr. Willkie's friends spent something over—I think the letter stated—$23,000 or $24,000 in that fight alone, that one little municipal fight. Those on the other side spent slightly more than $1,500 in the same fight.

Mr. President, that is another example. Everyone who refers to the Chattanooga fight in which Willkie's company participated and which it financed almost entirely, everyone who is trying to call attention to those facts is charged with trying to smear Willkie.

In connection with the case of the Chattanooga News, which was one of the oldest newspapers in the South, it suspended publication, it was sold, and went out of existence. Mr. Willkie was not entirely to blame for that; I never claimed that he was. The newspaper had financial difficulties, but it ceased publication because the Willkie crowd and those who held the indebtedness combined their forces. Willkie took away its advertising entirely; the newspaper was unable to meet its financial obligations, which were not extended 1 hour of time, although money was raised by the employees of the newspaper, amounting, I think, to $5,000 to liquidate a particular claim. The creditors refused to accept it because they had already taken possession; they said they would not give it up; and so the newspaper went down.

That is not the only instance of private power companies killing a newspaper. Mr. President, that is a common practice; it has been going on for 25 years. It was a disgraceful episode, it seems to me, and, despite claims of belief in the freedom of the press, one can go back over the history of the Power Trust and find all along its pathway the ruins of newspapers which it has killed in this way or that way—newspapers which they could not buy.

The Chattanooga News gave up its life; it had to, because it stood for what it believed was a wise policy. It won the fight in the election but lost its life in doing so.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that I should not miss the opportunity now of going a little further into Chattanooga affairs because of a matter which happened to come to my desk Saturday. The claim is always made—I referred to the claim when I made my speech the other day about Mr. Willkie—that public-power companies do not pay taxes, and I was trying to show—and I think did show—that the T. V. A. wanted to pay the same taxes that would be paid from all electric operations as though they were privately owned instead of publicly owned. There came to me, as I said just a few days ago, a demonstration of what is going on in Chattanooga on that score. Here, Mr. President and Senators is a lithographed copy of a check [exhibiting] drawn by the public-power facilities of Chattanooga for taxes amounting to $131,220.66 city taxes, paid by the electric power board.

The electric-power board issued a little statement as follows:

> The treasurer of the city of Chattanooga yesterday received a check for $131,220.66 in settlement of current city taxes on the local electric distribution system taken over by the electric power board on August 15, 1939. This is at the rate formerly paid on its properties by the Tennessee Electric Power Co.

That is a subsidiary of Mr. Willkie's corporation which owned it when the property was sold to the T. V. A. and to various municipalities.

> The electric power board pays out approximately 8 percent of its total income directly for taxes and, in its payments to T. V. A. for wholesale current, an additional 5 percent of the board's income is made available for replacement of taxes by T. V. A.

These taxes are not the only taxes paid by the T. V. A. The T. V. A. pays taxes upon all their transmission lines, their generating systems, everything they own attributable to power. This $131,000 is merely the taxes on the local distribution system.

The electric power board goes on:

Thus 13 percent of the board's income goes for taxes, which is comparable to the national average of 14.3 percent paid in taxes in 1938 by the privately owned utilities of the United States.

While saving the consumers of electricity $1,700,000 a year, the electric power board is replacing the taxes formerly paid by the privately owned utility, equalizing wages of its workers at a cost of $25,000 a year, maintaining its bond expenses—and still is accumulating a surplus for expansion and upkeep of its distribution system.

ELECTRIC POWER BOARD OF CHATTANOOGA.

Mr. President, a newspaper there, in giving an account of this matter, had quite a statement to make. This payment for taxes was not for an entire year; it was for only 10½ months of operation; that is all. In that statement, which I shall ask to have printed in full at this point in my remarks, the newspaper gives some very fine illustrations of what is being done. It says:

Public power is paying off early to get 1 percent cash discount, just like private power did.

From the record that has been made by public power, it would seem that it is a good time for a number of important people and institutions in Chattanooga, including a couple of good newspapers, to start publicly apologizing to the people for the bad advice handed out prior to and during the power referendum. But these same fellows, particularly the editors, are so busily engaged right now in handing out equally bad advice about whom to vote for President that they doubtless have no time for retractions.

All of which is by way of poking a little fun at the fellows who thought that we were crazy for advocating public power. Seriously, the present cooperation of many of those who once opposed the private-power program is responsible for much of the success of that program.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks the entire article from which I have just read an excerpt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

CITY RECEIVES $131,546 TAXES FROM THE C. E. P. B.—PAYMENT IS SAME AMOUNT AS T. E. P. CO.'S, WILHOITE SAYS—CHECK TO AID CITY

A check for $131,546.12 was paid into the city's coffers by the Chattanooga Electric Power board yesterday, representing taxes due on properties and assets of the board for the year 1940.

This is the same amount of taxes as paid by the Tennessee Electric Power Co. before its properties in Chattanooga were assumed by the board on August 15, 1939.

The $131,546.12 check was turned over to City Treasurer Alvin Shipp by L. J. Wilhoite, chairman of the board. Superintendent S. R. Finley, Secretary Noble Simmons, and F. K. Rosamond, city auditor, were present.

The city treasurer stated that the payment of the power board taxes one day before due was "indeed welcome," as the city has due the first week of October, which is the first week of the city's fiscal year, a school pay roll of $97,000 and an interest payment of $90,000.

Commenting on the tax payment afterward, Mr. Wilhoite said that it was being made primarily to bring to the attention of the people of Chattanooga the fact that those who "so loudly proclaimed" that public power would mean tax losses to the city and increased taxes on real estate "didn't know what they were talking about."

By acquiring their own power-distribution system, people of Chattanooga have obtained for themselves an annual saving of more than $1,500,000 on their power bills and at the same time paid all the costs of owning and operating the power system, paid taxes to themselves in the same amount that the private company was paying and didn't have their taxes on real estate or anything increased a penny, Mr. Wilhoite pointed out.

"It will be recalled that Willkie told the Military Affairs Committee of the House that he would like to see us let alone to 'stew in our own tax juice.' Stewing in their own tax juice is costing the people of Chattanooga about $2,000,000 less than stewing in Mr. Willkie's private power juice," Mr. Wilhoite stated.

A JAB AT OPPONENTS

Taking a good-natured poke at people, institutions, and a couple of good newspapers, he declared that now is the time for them to "start publicly apologizing to the people for the bad advice handed out prior to and during the power referendum."

"These same fellows, particularly the editors, are so busily engaged right now in handing out equally bad advice about whom to vote for President that doubtless they have no time for retractions," Wilhoite said.

His statement follows:

"The power board is paying into the city general fund today $131,546.12, this sum being equivalent to the taxes which the city lost on account of the acquisition of the properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. by the board.

"This tax-equivalent payment is being made today primarily for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the people of Chattanooga the fact that those who so loudly proclaimed that public power would mean tax losses to the city and increased taxes on real estate didn't know what they were talking about, but were simply the victims of private-power propaganda.

"By having sense enough not to allow this tax bugaboo to scarecrow them into continuing the private power, people in power in Chattanooga, the citizens have presented themselves with an annual saving of more than $1,500,000 on their power bills, and, while they were making this $1,500,000 presentation to themselves, they paid all the costs of owning and operating the power system, paid taxes to themselves in the same amount that the private company had been paying and didn't have their taxes on real estate or anything else increased 'one single red penny.'

"On the contrary, they have during the initial fiscal period of their public power operation actually gotten their real-estate taxes reduced 40 cents on each $1,000 valuation.

"It will be recalled that Mr. Willkie told the Military Affairs Committee of the House that he would like to see us let alone to 'stew in our own tax juice.' Stewing in their own tax juice is costing the people of Chattanooga about $2,000,000 a year less than stewing in Mr. Willkie's private-power juice. Stewing in public power tax juice is like sitting on an iceberg, compared with stewing in private power electric rates.

"Of course, we could say that this tax-equivalent payment is being made early in order to give the city the advantage of early tax receipts in meeting its current obligations. That is what the private power company always said. It will be recalled that on one occasion the private power company actually kept the schools from being closed, according to newspaper ballyhoo. So, you newspaper fellows can say that public power is keeping open the schools and is patriotically coming to the aid of the city in an hour of need by putting the tax-equivalent on the barrelhead early—all of which would be pure 'bunk' just like it was when you wrote that kind of tripe about private power a year ago.

"Public power is paying off early to get 1 percent cash discount just like private power did.

"From the record that has been made by public power, it would seem that it is a good time for a number of important people and institutions in Chattanooga, including a couple of good newspapers, to start publicly apologizing to the people for the bad advice handed out prior to and during the power referendum. But these same fellows, particularly the editors, are so busily engaged right now in handing out equally bad advice about whom to vote for President that they doubtless have no time for retractions.

"All of which is by way of poking a little fun at the fellows who thought that we were crazy for advocating public power. Seriously, the present cooperation of many of those who once opposed the private power program is responsible for much of the success of that program."

Mr. NORRIS. I received at the same time, from the electric power board, a report for that period of 10½ months. I desire to read some of it. I wish every Senator could read this report. It is practically the same in other cases. I read from page 3:

ELECTRIC POWER BOARD OF CHATTANOOGA,
Chattanooga, Tenn., August 24, 1940.

To the Board of Mayor and Commissioners, City of Chattanooga, Chattanooga, Tenn.

GENTLEMEN: In accordance with the requirements of chapter 455, section 12, Private Acts 1935, amending the charter of the city of Chattanooga, the Electric Power Board of Chattanooga is submitting herewith a financial statement showing the financial operations and financial condition of the electric distribution system for fiscal year ending June 30, 1940.

The balance sheet shows total assets of $15,633,999.57, including current cash assets of $677,846.07. The sinking and other funds contained cash of $290,041.27. Liabilities consist principally of a $13,200,000 issue of electric power revenue bonds and a $100,000 issue of general obligation bonds.

The statement of net revenues and appropriations thereof shows a gross electric operating revenue from August 16, 1939, through June 30, 1940 (10½ months), of $3,166,578.38. Operating expenses, including purchase of total power requirements from the Tennessee Valley Authority, maintenance, provision for depreciation and taxes, totaled $2,405,362.75. Purchased power expense was $1,284,417.06; other operation expenses, $489,525.25; maintenance expenses, $99,639.52; provision for depreciation, $287,814.42; and taxes, $243,963.50. The net operating revenue after these expenses—was $761,215.63. To this is added income from interest on certificates of deposit of $773.39, making a net earned revenue of $761,989.02.

Listen to this—

From this net earned revenue of $761,989.02 have been made deductions for interest charges on long-term debt amortization of debt premium and expenses (net) and other interest charges, totaling $280,765.41. This leaves a net revenue to the board for the 10½ months' period of $481,223.61 available for appropriations. Of this amount the sum of $225,000 has been appropriated to the legal reserve for bond retirement and $105,000 for additions and extensions to the electric system. The board thus finishes the fiscal year with an unappropriated net income of $151,223.61. From this unappropriated net revenue a deduction for loss on operations prior to August 15, 1939—

That is before they took it over—

of $17,554.56 has been made, leaving a balance of unappropriated net revenues of $133,669.05.

Basic T. V. A. rates, without surcharge, have been extended to all customers, thereby saving them during the first 10 months of public operation approximately $1,417,367. It is interesting to note, since the figure is a tangible measure of the value of the public power system to the people of the Chattanooga area, that the savings to customers plus the unappropriated earned surplus for the entire 10½-month period of public operation amounts to almost $1,600,000—$1,551,036.05.

Yours very truly,

ELECTRIC POWER BOARD OF CHATTANOOGA,
L. J. WILHOITE Chairman.

Mr. President, that has not anything to do with the criticism Mr. Willkie made; I admit that; but it seems to me to be so pat to show what has been going on in 10½ months in Chattanooga that I thought the Senate would be interested in it.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. GIBSON. I am quite interested in that matter. Can the Senator tell me the base rates of the T. V. A. for the ordinary house?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I may be mistaken on the details. I am not mistaken as to the rate, but I may be as to the number of kilowatt-hours that must be consumed. I think the rate for the first 40 kilowatt-hours is 3 cents a kilowatt-hour. I do not know what the limit is. The next is 2 cents a kilowatt-hour, and the larger amount, I think 200 kilowatt-hours, or something of that kind, at 1 cent, and after that I think the rate is 7 mills.

Mr. GIBSON. Do they have a minimum charge?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I think it varies with the different localities, but usually is 75 cents or a dollar.

Mr. GIBSON. They have no such thing as a room rate, or anything of that nature?

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. GIBSON. It is merely a flat rate, depending on how much current consumers use?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. GIBSON. And the Senator thinks it starts at 3 cents?

Mr. NORRIS. I know it starts at 3 cents. That is the highest point of the schedule, 3 cents a kilowatt-hour, and a comparatively small amount of electricity is furnished at that rate, before it drops to 2 cents.

Mr. GIBSON. Then they are reducing their bonded indebtedness?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes.

Mr. GIBSON. At a faster rate than was anticipated?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I think in every case. One of the cooperative institutions, which has been operating since the beginning or near the beginning of T. V. A., has paid off its entire indebtedness. Then it cut down the rate. Instead of 3 cents they made the top rate 2½ cents. It is only a question of a few years before the top rate will be 2 cents, or probably less. So that the average rate at this time is probably less than a cent a kilowatt hour, or not much more than a cent.

Mr. GIBSON. Does not the Senator think that perhaps some of the private power companies, if they had to pay off their bonds and not refund them, or retire their preferred stock, would work down to the point where they would have to charge as low rates?

Mr. NORRIS. Practically so. The only thing preventing their coming clear down to the low rates of T. V. A. would probably be the dividend question. Of course, the T. V. A. pays no dividends to anyone. No one owns any stock in it.

Mr. GIBSON. But if the bonds were retired, and the preferred stock were retired, there would remain only the simple proposition of a reasonable return on invested capital.

Mr. NORRIS. That is all. Mr. President, with respect to my criticism of the way in which Mr. Willkie was nominated, I have received a large number of communications. Practically every one of them has given me facts and incidents. I shall not burden the Senate with them, but I wish to read at this point an editorial from the Cleveland News which I understand is a supporter of Mr. Willkie. At least it says:

THE NEWS STANDS FOR—

ROBERT A. TAFT for President.
Better administration at less cost.
Equalization of the national labor law.
Improved city transportation and more bus lines.
More recognition for Cleveland's cultural life.
An up-to-date metropolitan zoo.

This is the editorial to which I refer, published June 26, 1940:

THE HIGH-PRESSURE GAME

Regardless of the virtues and defects of their candidate, the high-pressuring tactics being used by New Yorkers in Wall Street and other high places on behalf of Wendell Willkie for the Republican nomination are approaching a scandal.

Ohio delegates to the convention are being called by businessmen of their home cities and told "be for Willkie or else." These Ohio businessmen are in turn being called by business leaders in the Wall Street sector and advised to contact their delegates.

The names of millionaire New York bankers, brokers, and utility chiefs are mentioned at Philadelphia as doing actual lobbying on the scene or by phone from "the street." Party Treasurer E. T. Weir is advising Willkie's nomination if the party wishes to raise money for the campaign.

These people were for Landon to a man in 1936, but Landon was overwhelmed in the election. It is not the businessman's vote which the party needs in November. The party will not get the other votes if these crude pressure tactics continue. Are they necessary, if Willkie is the spontaneous messiah his advocates claim?

That was "before taking," I suppose. The party is probably taking a different kind of medicine now.

Mr. President, I wish to put into the RECORD at this point a letter from Charles J. Thielen, an attorney at law, of Humphrey, Nebr., on this very subject—the Philadelphia convention, and how it was manipulated. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD at this point in my address.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

CHAS. J. THIELEN,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
Humphrey, Nebr., September 28, 1940.

Hon. GEO. W. NORRIS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am extremely happy to think you are actively engaging in the campaign against Willkie. I am particularly pleased that you have exposed the flood of telegrams sent to delegates on convention date. I presume it is not unknown to you that broadcasting stations at short intervals would announce and urge sending of telegrams to delegates to vote for Willkie. I listened to WOW, Omaha, and WJAG, Norfolk, and I venture to say that these announcements were repeated no less than 10 times over each station during the course of the balloting. What I should like to know is, Who paid for these announcements. If this was repeated over all the stations in the United States, and I cannot see why the two above-mentioned stations should be singled out, you can imagine that it cost someone a pretty penny. Who was that someone? Why not have an investigation to find out who that someone was. It smelled rotten to me the night of the convention and it seems to me the stench is getting worse as the campaign progresses.

Sincerely yours,

CHAS J. THIELEN.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, criticism of the Philadelphia Record was made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] in his address. I do not know that he used the name of the newspaper, but he referred to it—I will not quote his language now—in very disrespectful terms. In other words, this newspaper was put in the class with me, and with the New Republic, which he said was a lying sheet because it asked Willkie a number of questions. But he did not tell what the questions were, and so I shall read them into the RECORD:

Mr. Willkie, we ask you who killed the Chattanooga News, for two reasons:

First, because at Cheyenne, Wyo., on July 23, you declared that "a free and untrammelled press is one of the guaranties of democracy."

Second, because the Tennessee Utilities Commission found your power company—Tennessee Electric—guilty on 917 counts of "using unlawful devices" to destroy the Chattanooga News by illegally helping its competitor which was "friendly" to your interests. Tennessee Electric was a subsidiary of your Commonwealth & Southern.

What is the truth, Mr. Willkie?

Do you believe in freedom of the press for all of the press?

Or only for those newspapers which do not stand in your way or in the way of your corporations?

The public is entitled to a clear answer.

You naturally know all the facts in this case, because the killing of the Chattanooga News took place while you were president of Commonwealth & Southern.

Milton's paper first supported T. V. A., then favored a publicly owned power plant for Chattanooga. What followed? We refer you to the records of the Tennessee Utilities Commission, which show—

(a) That your company withdrew its advertising from the Chattanooga News after a competitor, the Free Press, had been set up in business by a group of men whose chief stockholder was Silas Williams, an attorney for your Tennessee Electric Power Co.

(b) That your company was found guilty of turning over to this Silas Williams the sum of $10,000 "under the guise of counsel fees, * * * all of which the said Williams shortly turned over to the Free Press in ostensible consideration for the issue to him of certain shares of stock."

(c) That your power company bought $19,303 worth of advertising in the paper set up to fight the Chattanooga News, and paid an advertising rate "far in excess of the regular rates"—about 25 percent higher—the only conclusion being that your company paid more than it had to as a subsidy.

(d) That your company granted a 5-percent discount on the power bills of the Free Press, even after they had become delinquent, and when, according to your company's advertisements, they were not subject to discount.

(e) That your company further gave indirect financial help to the publisher who was fighting the Chattanooga News by giving him 5-percent discount on the bills of some forty-odd grocery stores in which he was interested.

(f) That when the congressional committee investigating T. V. A. came across this whole episode, its counsel, Francis Biddle, declared: "Tennessee Electric has been subsidizing the Chattanooga Free Press."

There were 909 other counts on which your company was found guilty—of trying to destroy a newspaper whose policies it didn't like.

As directing head of the corporation in control of this situation, we'd like to hear your explanation, Mr. Willkie.

What finally happened to the Chattanooga News?

Surely you recall, Mr. Willkie, that it was sold by the sheriff to the Free Press, the same paper the Tennessee Utilities Commission said had been subsidized by your power companies.

The News was sold even though, in its last days, it was breaking about even while the company which bought it was then supposed to be losing money.

The News was sold even though its own employees raised $15,000 at the last minute, by mortgaging their homes and cashing their savings, in an effort to preserve their jobs.

The News was sold—and a lot of people are still wondering where its competitor got the money to buy it.

Sold, Mr. Willkie—and then killed. That was the fate of the Chattanooga News, the newspaper which stood in your way in Tennessee.

What could other American newspapers expect, Mr. Willkie, if you were to become President—and they were to oppose your policies?

Would they share the same fate?

You've been reading the papers of Mr. Justice Holmes lately. Maybe you observed his famous phrase: "Freedom of speech means freedom for the thought we hate as well as for the thought we love."

Freedom of the press, Mr. Willkie, means fredom to applaud you or to criticize you, freedom to support you or to oppose you.

From the time your company first turned on the heat of its financial power down to the very last kilowatt-hour, the Chattanooga News was no longer free.

It was electrocuted.

Maybe you'd like to tell us why.

That is from the Philadelphia Record. The reason "why," if there be any reason, was told by the Senator from New Hampshire a few days ago, when he referred in a disgraceful and reprehensible manner to that newspaper for asking those questions.

Talk about the freedom of the press, Mr. President. It is unknown in some quarters.

The Senator from New Hampshire is particularly malicious about the T. V. A. That was referred to in the letter of Francis Biddle, which was placed in the RECORD by the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] the other day. Read the speech of the Senator from New Hampshire. Note the language he uses in reference to Mr. Biddle. Is Mr. Biddle a cut-throat? Is he a thief? Is he a robber or a murderer? Have his youth and the remainder of his life been a disgrace and a dishonor? We all know Francis Biddle. We may agree with him or not, but if we are honest we must say that he is a scholar of the highest repute, that he is an honorable man, that he is an able man, that he is a courageous man. He was the attorney selected by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], who is not now present in the Senate chamber, who was chairman of the Joint Committee Investigating T. V. A. activities. Ask the Senator from Ohio what he thinks of the T. V. A. Enormous burdens fell upon the shoulders of Francis Biddle during that long tedious investigation. Throughout the whole of the investigation he conducted himself with honor, with ability, with fairness and with unmistakable courage.

The Senator from Ohio has often said to me that the committee was most fortunate in securing as its attorney a man of the courage and ability of Francis Biddle. How did the Senator from New Hampshire refer to Mr. Biddle? He referred to him in language which I shall not repeat, language which is entirely out of place, language which can impute to Mr. Biddle no honor, no ability, no purpose, but in which he is described as a slave without any degree of honor. The language used by the Senator is, I think, disreputable.

Senators all heard read the letter which came from Francis Biddle in reply. In that letter he referred to what the Senator from New Hampshire had said on the Senate floor many months ago in speaking of the activities of the T. V. A. The Senator then spoke of the purchase of a jackass. I have before me the language used by the Senator, but I shall not repeat it now, because I do not think it is proper to be used in a respectable assembly.

Mr. Biddle in his letter referred to the statement by the Senator from New Hampshire in which he charged that the T. V. A. bought a jackass. That charge was true. The Senator from New Hampshire on the 9th day of March, 1939, stated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 3107:

> The T. V. A. purchased a jackass for $2,500, plus $2,080 traveling expenses, total $4,580, and sold him for $300.

Why did the Senator make that statement? It is true that in connection with experimental farm operations the T. V. A. bought a jackass and paid $300 for it. It is also true that the T. V. A., after using it for a season, sold it for $350, and that is all there is to it. But the T. V. A. had bought such things as a mechanical jack. What did the Senator from New Hampshire wish to convey to the Senate when he stood in his place on the 9th day of March? Again he wanted to injure the character of the men in the T. V. A. He wanted to convey the idea that they were dishonest and disreputable, and he made his statement out of whole cloth. What was his object? Did he wish to deceive the country or the Senate? On the spur of the moment no one could deny the statement he made. While no Senator believed the statement, Senators were not in a position to deny it, because they realized there was a possibility of such a thing having occurred.

Mr. President, it seems to me the Senator showed his malice, and showed it without any reason or cause, against men who could not be here to speak for themselves. He charged that the T. V. A. bought a jackass for $2,500, and the traveling expenses in connection with the purchase, he said, were $2,080. He said the jackass cost a total of $4,580, and that the T. V. A. sold it later for $300. We all know that is not true. When the statement was made everyone knew it was not true. However, we passed it by and said nothing about it, because the Senator from New Hampshire has a reputation for making statements of that kind. The Senate knows that when the Senator from New Hampshire gives figures they probably are not entitled to very much consideration unless they are corroborated in some way. A statement of fact made by the Senator from New Hampshire, without corroborative evidence, is not even prima facie evidence that the statement is true.

Mr. President, what could have been the object of the Senator from New Hampshire? It seems to me that only one of two conclusions could be reached; either that the Senator from New Hampshire was trying to deceive the Senate and the country as to the facts or he was controlled by such a superignorance that he did not know the difference between a jackass and an ordinary mechanical jack used in building operations. I have many quotations made by the Senator similar to that. It would seem that everyone who does not agree with him is disreputable, dishonest, or there is something else wrong with him.

Mr. President, I wish to recur now to the Senator's reference to my own State. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by V. T. Boughton, managing editor of the Engineering News-Record of New York.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Engineering News-Record of April 27 and May 25, 1939]

WATER POWER IN NEBRASKA

(V. T. Boughton, managing editor, Engineering News-Record)

Five years ago Nebraska began the public development of the State's water-power resources with money from the Public Works Administration in the form of loans and grants. To date the Federal Government has made commitments totaling about $60,000,000 to three public power and irrigation districts having water-power development as a major part of their programs. These are the Platte Valley public power and irrigation district, the Central Nebraska public power and irrigation district, and the Loup River public power district. Local people have contributed about $200,000 for promotional work in these districts.

Widely characterized as Nebraska's "little T. V. A.," these public-power and irrigation projects have been the subject of much adverse comment by those who are opposed to their construction. Total costs have been declared to be so high as to put the unit cost of power and irrigation water beyond reason; question has been raised as to whether any considerable amount of firm power can be produced because of the uncertainty of the water supply; power markets have been declared to be lacking, and the operating difficulties of the two completed projects have been held up as evidence of the impracticability of the undertakings. As a consequence, unbiased information concerning the undertaking is hard to obtain.

Opposition to the projects is both local and national. Locally the opposition is due chiefly to factors peculiar to the region in which the projects are being built. In the first place, water in Nebraska is a valuable commodity, which is jealously guarded by those who need it to irrigate their lands. People on existing irrigation projects who have seen the Platte River go dry and their crops burn up are violently opposed to further drafts for any new combined power and irrigation project. Quite naturally the privately owned power companies are opposed to the projects, but it is rather surprising to find the power companies supported by town officials in communities having municipally owned power plants. The reason for this is found in the fact that the relatively high rates charged by these plants bring in a tidy income, which carries a large part of the municipal expenses, and the town officials see in the public-power districts a move to confine surpluses to a general reduction in domestic rates.

But for engineers the Nebraska undertakings hold out much wider interest than those that lie in the controversial subject of public versus private power development. First, there are completed or under construction three hydroelectric power undertakings that are unique both as to design and as to cost of construction; and, second, there are questions of water conservation and use which are important for all concerned with development of the water resources of the arid regions of the West. To date, three diversion dams and two reservoirs have been built, 88 miles of power canals have been dug, and three power plants of moderate size have been put into operation. Now under construction is the Nation's second largest earthfill dam, a fourth diversion dam, 67 miles of power supply canals, three more power plants, 102 miles of main irrigation canals, and 540 miles of small laterals.

POWER AIDS IRRIGATION

Nebraska's climate ranges from subhumid along the eastern edge to semiarid in the west, with a wide central area where there is insufficient rainfall for crop production. Dry farming has been practiced extensively in this area, a large section of it having been put under cultivation in the war days when wheat prices were high, but there is evidence everywhere that the record has been one of frequent crop failure especially in the recent dry years.

Irrigation of land in the wide, flat valley of the Platte River was begun in a small way as far back as 1866 and has gradually expanded to include about 200,000 acres now under irrigation canals. But the flow of the Platte River is so uncertain in the central part of the State that these bottom lands have not always been able to obtain from direct flow as much water as they needed, and stored water has not been available. Lands at higher elevations never have been reached, and yet they need little water in normal years to make them suitable for a wide variety of crops. Rainfall in Phelps, Kearney, and Adams Counties, where the lands now being irrigated lie, averages 24 inches per year, while 36 inches is needed to carry crops to maturity. Hence the irrigation system is designed to supply 12 inches per acre, or about 200,000 acre-feet for the work now in hand, which combines storage with use of any available direct flow.

Schemes for providing irrigation water for the fertile lands lying south of the Platte River in the central part of the State have been actively promoted for many years, but as the low flow of the North Platte River—the principal source of water for the south-central area—is overappropriated, these schemes were largely based on storage and use of floodwaters which come down both the North and South Platte in large quantities every spring. Storage, however, was difficult to obtain. Because the river bottoms are wide and the underlying material porous, the construction of on-river reservoirs long appeared too costly. On the other hand, the off-river storage sites were neither large nor numerous, and the amount that can be diverted into them during the short flood season is limited by the amount that can be carried through long supply canals. Some of these studies of off-river sites indicated that power could be developed in bringing water down into the valley from storage reservoirs in the hills, but in all cases costs appeared prohibitive.

This was the situation when, in 1933, the National Recovery Act was passed, and it soon became evident that liberal Federal aid would be available to foster construction of projects that could not be financed if required to repay their full cost out of earnings. The same year the Nebraska Legislature passed an act providing for the establishment of public power and irrigation districts and authorizing the district to borrow money from the Public Works Administration on loans secured by the potential earnings of the district.

POWER DISTRICTS FORMED

Among the first power districts to be organized was the Platte Valley Power and Irrigation District to build what is commonly known as the Sutherland project. It was followed by the formation of the Loup River Public Power District for construction of the Columbus project, a power project without irrigation features on the Loup River, and subsequently by the formation of the Central Nebraska Public Power and Irrigation District to build what is commonly known as the Tricounty project, a project that then was expected would be able to supply irrigation water to about 500,000 acres and would develop a large amount of power. Also organized were two smaller irrigation projects on the North and Middle Loup Rivers. Neither of these latter included the development of power as part of its undertaking but both were authorized to buy or generate and distribute power.

The basic scheme around which the three major projects were designed is the same. The valleys of all the rivers in central Nebraska are wide and flat and are flanked with low hills of loess or fine sandy material. The valley slopes are gentle and the only way in which heads for power development can be obtained is through the use of long canals leading water out of the bottom-lands into the hills and then carrying it downstream many miles to some point where the river swings close enough to the hills to permit the water to be returned to the river channel through a power plant. This results in long canals through loess and sandy material—too many miles to make lining feasible—and calls for many structures to take care of cross drainage. Storage reservoirs must be formed in shallow basins by the use of long and fairly high earth dikes. The general drop of the rivers is about 7 feet per mile; that of the canals, 2 to 3 inches.

Construction of the Sutherland project was begun in August 1934 and it was put into service in December 1935 but trouble with ice developed almost immediately and the project did not begin to produce power commercially until February of this year. Details of its design and of its troubles with canals and structures will be given in a subsequent article. Its power plant develops an average head of 204 feet and contains 2 units of 18,000-horsepower capacity having an output of 13,000 kilowatts at 90 percent power factor and using 900 second-feet of water.

The water used by the Sutherland project belongs to irrigators below the tailrace of its power plant. Floodwaters stored in Sutherland reservoir are to be sold to those irrigators to help pay for the project.

Construction of the Columbus project was begun late in 1934. The Loup River on which it is built has a much more uniform flow than the Platte, hence water supply was not a major question, but a most difficult problem was presented by the fact that the river carries a large quantity of silt. The silt problem will be taken up in the subsequent article.

The Columbus project has two power stations designed to use a uniform draft up to 3,000 second-feet supplemented by pondage for peak loads. The Monroe station contains three 3,200-horsepower units developing a head of 32 feet, and the Columbus station has three 18,000-horsepower units developing a normal head of 112 feet. The system has been in operation since September 1938.

Work on the Tricounty project of the Central Nebraska Power and Irrigation District was begun in the spring of 1936 but active construction was held up for many months by legal questions. The project differs from the other two in that it includes construction of a reservoir of 2,000,000 acre-feet capacity near Keystone above the intake of the Sutherland project for the storage of floodwaters of the North Platte. The district has rights only to floodwaters. Water released at the dam is to be picked up below the tailrace of the Sutherland power plant and run through the three power stations of the district before it is delivered to irrigators down in Phelps, Kearney, and Adam counties.

Work on the Tricounty project is now well along; it is scheduled for completion in 1940. Its three power stations are designed for a flow of 1,800 second-feet supplemented by pondage and some off-river storage. They will have an installed capacity of 54,000 kilowatts.

WATER SUPPLY

Water supply was a major problem of the Sutherland project and still is for the Tricounty project. Now that the Tricounty district is building its big storage reservoir just above the intake of the Sutherland project a water supply is assured for the irrigators whose water the district uses for power development because they have first claim to enough water to meet their authorized appropriations. And while there is no question but that the storage of 2,000,000 acre-feet behind Kingsley Dam (formerly called Keystone) would meet both the needs of these and other power appropriations and would still leave ample to irrigate the lands under the canals of the Tricounty project, there is question as to whether there are enough floodwaters in the North Platte River to fill such a reservoir and keep it replenished annually. Studies of records for the past 20 years indicate that such a reservoir would have been filled to overflowing in all but 4 years. Current studies show that from October 1 of last year to March 1 of this year 584,700 acre-feet passed the gaging station at Overton, Nebr. Of this amount 150,000 acre-feet would have been released to meet the needs of the water-power plant at Kearney, leaving 434,000 acre-feet that could have been stored in 5 months, with the period of melting snow yet to come.

A major cause for uncertainty arises from the fact that the United States Reclamation Bureau is now beginning to store water behind Seminoe Dam for the irrigation of 66,000 acres in the Kendricks project near Casper, Wyo. The Seminoe Reservoir has a capacity of 1,070,000 acre-feet. What effect this storage will have on the flow of the North Platte is unknown, as the flow in central Nebraska will depend in some part upon the return flow from the irrigated land in the Kendricks project. Officials of the Tricounty projects hold that their rights to the waters of the North Platte are superior to those of the Kendricks project.

On the other hand, a favorable factor in the water-supply situation will be the start of the diversion of water from the headwaters of the Colorado into the headwaters of the South Platte River as planned for the Colorado-Big Thompson project now under construction in Colorado. This diversion should add to the low flow of the South Platte River, aiding the irrigators below the confluence of the South and North Platte and so making possible the storage of more water in the Kingsley Reservoir.

Another factor favorable to the success of the present undertaking is a finding by the Nebraska Supreme Court to the effect that the central Nebraska district may not take water out of the Platte River Valley for the irrigation of lands lying over in the Republican River watershed, as was proposed when the district was organized. This reduces the land under the tricounty irrigation canals from 500,000 acres to 220,000 and materially reduces the amount of water that will have to be drawn from the Keystone Reservoir. Thus the carry-over will help to offset any shortage in dry years.

SUTHERLAND POWER

The Sutherland project began commercial sale of power in February of this year, and since March 1 the average daily output has been 115,000 kilowatt-hours, the peak being about 70 percent of the capacity of one of the two generators in the power station. Power goes to local private power companies, to municipalities, and to other public power districts. This load is about 40 percent of the designed capacity. Within a few weeks the contractors at Kingsley Dam will begin hydraulic fill operation, which, when the dredges are up to capacity, will require about 240,000 kilowatt-hours per day. That work will continue until September 1940, and by 1941 the district officials believe that they will have built up a sufficient market to take over that power.

The total amount advanced by the P. W. A. in the form of loans and grants is $11,226,000, of which a considerable sum is still available for working capital during the load-building period. About $700,000 annually is required to pay interest, amortize the loan, and operate the plant. Of this, $100,000 will come from water users as soon as water can be stored in Sutherland Reservoir. The power output of the system should be about 100,000,000 kilowatt-hours annually. Deducting line losses, this power can be sold for about 7½ mills per kilowatt-hour and yet produce enough income to provide the remaining $600,000.

LOUP RIVER POWER

Last year the two power stations of the Columbus project produced 46,000,000 kilowatt-hours as against 188,000,000 kilowatt-hours estimated as the average annual output of the project. It is expected that the output will be up to about 90,000,000 kilowatt-hours by the end of this year.

The district has $9,000,000 in bonds outstanding. Interest, amortization and operating cost amount to about $870,000 per year, which means that the average income from the power should be 4½ or 5 mills. The district has had an offer of 5 mills from private power companies for all the power it can produce, but its officers believe that one of their functions is to build up the local use of power, especially in the rural areas. Consequently the district is doing all it can to help the local districts of the Rural Electrification Administration, of which there are now 28 in the State. At the present time 2,500,000 kilowatt-hours of the Columbus output is going to the R. E. A. districts throughout the State, power being sold to the various districts at 1 cent per kilowatt-hour average. The Loup district has 378 miles of rural line built and contracts let for 170 miles more. Lines are built where an average of 2.2 customers per mile can be obtained. Of the 830 customers already signed up, 305 are connected to the system. Average sales were 66.3 kilowatt-hours to purely rural customers in January.

TRICOUNTY POWER

A study of the flow of the Platte River between 1895 and 1909 shows that there was sufficient water, supplemented by storage in the Kingsley Reservoir, to have operated the three power plants of the district at 100-percent capacity factor for the whole period. From 1910 to 1916 an average of about 90 percent could have been maintained; from 1917 to 1931, 100-percent capacity factor would have been possible; and from 1931 to the end of 1937 a reduction to about 50-percent capacity factor would have been necessary due to the long drought. The average annual generation of the district over the 43½-year period studied would have been 353,368,000 kilowatt-hours. These figures are based on assumed evaporation losses from the reservoir 25 percent higher than available data would indicate will occur, and on the assumption that the reservoirs and canals are full at all times. Losses from the canals which were being seasoned last year were somewhat less than one-tenth of 1 percent per mile, which is lower than the loss figure used in this study.

Under normal conditions there is a considerable increase in the flow of the river between the site of Kingsley Dam and the diversion dam just below North Platte. This pick-up amounts to 1,500 second-feet during the nonirrigation months and to 2,500 second-feet during the irrigation months, but these figures were reduced by 50 percent in making the flow studies. Due to the conformation of the river valley, seepage losses from the Kingsley Reservoir are expected to reappear downstream.

With the bonded indebtedness of the district being $19,793,000, 40 percent of which is charged to irrigation and 60 percent to power, and with annual power operating costs estimated at $196,000, the district expects to be able to sell its power at 7 mills per kilowatt-hour.

POWER INTERCHANGE

Negotiations are now nearing completion for an interchange of power between the Platte Valley project, the Loup project, and the tricounty project by which it is hoped to be able to make the most advantageous use of the water resources of the three districts. Upon completion of Kingsley Dam it will be possible to about double the firm power of the Sutherland system by diverting water for the tricounty project through its canals and power station. But without this added water the Sutherland project is expected to be up to its designed capacity by 1942. Officers of the Loup River Public Power District estimate that upon completion of the pending agreement for the interchange of power with the other two power districts they will be able to build up their load to a paying basis by 1943.

If a projected plan for setting up a State-wide public-power system through the purchase of existing privately owned power companies by the public-power districts is consummated, the Loup district should be on a paying basis by 1942. Late last year it looked as though the State-wide scheme would soon be an accomplished fact, but uncertainty as to what the State legislature will do has postponed further action until it adjourns.

ECONOMIC JUSTIFICATION

From the economic angle, it would probably be easy to show that for the total investment—including both P. W. A. grants and loans—these projects never can pay on a purely bookkeeping basis. But it must be recognized that they were undertaken as part of the Nation's great program of creating employment through the construction of useful projects, and that as such they have created a large amount of continuous employment for a great many people. And having been carried out by normal methods as undertakings of the public-power districts, the work being let out by contract under the supervision of regular engineering forces rather than as relief operations, the employment created has been altogether normal in character. And one cannot traverse the area in which this work has been carried out without seeing on every hand the evidence of intangible benefits which cannot be easily evaluated on a dollars-and-cents basis.

Charging off the P. W. A. grants against the intangibles, there is substantial evidence that income from the power developments and from the sale of irrigation water will repay the loans from the Federal Government. And it should be noted that the Government subsidies do not bring the power costs down to the point where the public power districts can take business away from the private companies by undercutting their rates; the success of the public power-development schemes appear to rest on the ability of the districts to build new business.

Looking upon these Nebraska projects as pioneering attempts to promote and coordinate the development of natural resources as public undertakings, little can be found to criticize and much will be found to commend. Though fostered by Federal aid, their major virtue lies in the fact that they are essentially local in character, unmistakable evidence of the willingness on the part of local people to risk something in the development of the region in which they live.

Seepage, bank slumping, and ice were the chief sources of early trouble in Nebraska's water-power developments that were described in the issue of April 27, page 546. They still are major sources of trouble, but the engineers are confident that their worst troubles are behind them and that such as remain can be eliminated. Silt was expected to be a big source of trouble on the Columbus project, but, due to the success of the silt-handling facilities put in when that project was built, silt disposal has become largely a matter of routine.

SUTHERLAND PROJECT

The Sutherland project of the Platte Valley public power and irrigation district was the first to be built. Its supply canal (fig. 2) takes water from behind a diversion weir across the North Platte near Keystone, carries the water through a winding canal of 1,750 second-feet capacity along the south side of the valley, then through a cut 140 feet deep to a 7,400-foot concrete siphon 14 feet in diameter which crosses under the South Platte at Paxton. The siphon discharges into an open canal in the hills to the south of the river which carries the water east again to Sutherland Reservoir, a total distance of 32.3 miles. The reservoir is a basin of 175,000 acre-feet capacity formed by rolled fill dikes. It was designed for a draw-down of 55 feet, that depth being used to store floodwaters to supplement the limited supply of irrigators taking water from the river below the confluence of the North and South Platte.

From the reservoir a canal of 1,400 second-feet capacity, 19.2 miles long, leads to a smaller regulating reservoir from which water is drawn for the Platte Valley power plant, where an average head of 204 feet is developed by two hydroelectric units of 13,000 kilowatt capacity. Below the power plant a 2½-mile tailrace returns the water to the river below the town of North Platte. Thus the water taken out at the diversion dam travels about 55 miles through canals and reservoirs before it is returned to the river.

One of the obvious difficulties of this long canal system is the light and porous nature of the soil through which the canals were to be built. The canals were too long to be lined throughout, hence seepage losses were expected to be large during the early period of operation, and slumping of banks at some points was anticipated. In sections where physical conditions called for a slope steeper than 1 on 1½, the canal was lined; in the other sections it was hoped that deposits of the fine silt carried by the river would reduce seepage losses to a negligible quantity within a few years after putting the project into service.

TROUBLES DEVELOP

The project went into service in December 1935, in a limited way to season the canals and reservoirs, but it soon had to be closed down due to partial failure of the drop structure in which water from the supply canals goes down into the Sutherland reservoir. During the three following years the project was out of operation most of the time due to numerous troubles, including two breaks in the siphon under the South Platte River, difficulties with ice in the canal and at the control structures, and seepage from the canal in regions where it is built above ground.

Ice troubles in the supply canal were due chiefly to the rapid changes that occur in the rate of flow of the North Platte River in winter when practically the whole volume of the river is diverted into the canal. Thus it often happens that a flow of 1,500 second-feet drops to 200 second-feet in 2 or 3 hours, and increases occur just as rapidly. Without control of the water level in the canal, ice that formed on the surface would drop to the bottom of the canal. The ice in falling pulled loose much of the 2-inch shotcrete lining in the lined sections. With an increase in flow it was picked up and carried downstream to form ice jams.

CAUSED PAXTON FAILURE

It was such a jam that was responsible for the failure of the Paxton siphon on February 3, 1937. Ice, piling up behind a control structure, caused a surge that overtopped the banks at the south end of the siphon scouring out the bank, undermining the siphon and causing the collapse of its southern end. This break was repaired and the system put into operation again on March 3, only to have the southern end of the siphon collapse again on March 30. The cause of the second collapse never was definitely fixed, there having been no ice in the canal and no abnormal hydraulic conditions. One theory put forward is that a large quantity of ice from the initial break fell into the hole scoured under the outlet end of the siphon, was buried there by the wash from the siphon, and was not discovered when the hole was refilled. Melting of this ice with the warmer weather resulted in settlement and collapse of the siphon.

The original control structures consisted of a series of openings about 6 feet wide in which operators could place stoplogs to keep the water surface nearly constant. As the piers between these openings checked the movement of ice they have been removed and levels now are maintained by the use of hand-operated steel gates placed in the wider openings.

In places where the canal banks have slumped badly the slope has been reduced from 1 on 1½ to 1 on 2, curves have been protected against erosion by a gravel blanket and where bad seepage developed clay blankets have been placed. Silt deposits are slowly reducing the minor seepage losses.

The damaged 2-inch shotcrete lining has been replaced with thicker slabs of concrete poured in place on the canal slopes.

SEEPAGE FROM RESERVOIR

The high embankments forming Sutherland Reservoir were built of carefully controlled rolled fill and were lined with concrete, but seepage developed when filling of the reservoir began. It was of such magnitude as to interfere with cultivation of land below the reservoir, hence the reservoir never has been filled to within 30 feet of its top.

Silting of the reservoir bottom is slowly checking the seepage. When visited this spring, the flow from under the main embankment amounted to about 2 second-feet.

Seepage may yet add materially to the cost of these projects, as the State supreme court recently upheld an award of $7,100 damage to a farmer whose land was put out of use by seepage from the Sutherland Reservoir.

Diversion of water into Sutherland Reservoir was resumed in November 1938, and the power plant was put into operation in December of that year. Production of commercial power was begun in February of this year and has been uninterrupted since then, despite partial failure of the lining of the stilling basin at the outlet of Sutherland Reservoir late in March. The lining has been repaired temporarily.

LOUP RIVER SILT

Silt has long been recognized as a major obstacle to the development of power on the Loup River because the stream carries from 0.05 to 2.0 percent of silt and it is planned to use almost the entire flow during periods of low water.

The Columbus project of the Loup River public-power district consists of a low-diversion dam and skimming weir about 5½ miles above the town of Genoa, a desilting basin 200 feet wide, 10,000 feet long, and 16 feet deep, and a second skimming weir at its lower end from which a canal 11½ miles long and having a capacity of 3,000 second-feet extends to a power station just north of the town of Monroe. This station contains three hydroelectric units of 3,200 horsepower each, developing a head of 32 feet. From this plant the low-line canal extends 13 miles to a regulating reservoir 3 miles north of Columbus, having a total capacity of 11,000 acre-feet, of which 6,000 acre-feet is usable for power generation. A supply canal 1½ miles long and having a capacity of 4,800 second-feet extends from the reservoir to the Columbus power station, which contains three hydroelectric units of 18,000 horsepower capacity each. Below this station a tailrace 5½ miles long carries the water to the Platte River just below the confluence of the Platte and the Loup.

Water is drawn into the Loup River over a long skimming weir along the north bank of the river. This provides the first step in the desilting operation. Sluice gates in the main river weir at the lower end of the skimming weir make it possible to flush silt from in front of the skimmer. The second and final stage of desilting is in the long stilling basin, which, according to the first plans approved by the P. W. A., was to be equipped with a dredge mounted on a gantry spanning the basin and capable of traveling its full length. This dredge was to pump silt from any point in the basin to a concrete and steel flume on the river side of the basin which would discharge it along the river bank below the dam at points where it would be carried away during high water. As now operated, a 28-inch floating dredge of the dust-pan type has been substituted for the gantry dredge of the dustpan type has been substituted for the gantry flume, but at the present time it is being discharged over the bank to fill low land along the river.

Present practice is to operate the dredge from March to December on one 8-hour shift per day. This is with a diversion of about 600 second-feet, or about one-quarter of the proposed rate of 2,400 second-feet when the power plant is up to capacity. Pumping 65 cubic feet per second, the dredge removes about 1,200 cubic yards per hour. As power is used during off-peak periods, the cost, based on a plant output of 200,000,000 kilowatt-hours, is about $0.00054 per kilowatt-hour.

To date the much-discussed silt problem of this project has given the operators little trouble. Samples taken from the canal below the desilting basin have a silt content of one-tenth of 1 percent.

Ice piled up in front of the intake last November and for a time reduced the amount of water that could be taken in. However, it did not cause a complete shut-down of the plant. An ice boom was installed in December, and no further ice trouble developed.

Little trouble has been experienced with the canals of the Columbus project. Learning from the difficulties of the Sutherland project, the engineers made the canal slopes flatter and avoided sharp changes which would disturb the ice cover. The results so far have been very satisfactory.

SEEPAGE LOSSES

A major problem in the operation of the Columbus project is seepage in areas below the regulating reservoir back of Columbus, and at some points below the supply canal. Parts of the canal system have been in service now for 3 years. In these sections the seepage has reduced materially each year and little further trouble is anticipated. Borrowpits that were full of water at first are now dry and some meadows that were too wet for crops the first year were used for crops last year. Water has been in the reservoir for 2 years but has been maintained at a low level to minimize seepage losses. About 1,000 acres of land in areas lying to the north and south of the reservoir have been affected by seepage, but here also the blanketing of the reservoir bottom with fine silt is materially reducing the seepage loss. Much of the area affected had little natural drainage. A drainage ditch, cut by the district, has materially helped the situation, and little trouble is anticipated during the growing season this year. Farmers whose lands are put out of production are paid on the basis of what the land would have produced in good years, which has been a very satisfactory arrangement for the farmers in the past two dry seasons.

LESSONS PUT TO USE

Lessons learned on the Sutherland and Columbus projects are being put to use on the tricounty project, now under construction. Most notable is the location of the canals far enough back into the hills to get the flow line below natural ground level, thus avoiding the long wet embankments of the Sutherland project that resulted from efforts to do the work at the lowest possible cost.

By carrying the canal back into the hills it has been found possible to use natural valleys for considerable lengths of the canal, closing off the lower end of valleys with a dam, taking the local drainage into the canal, and cutting through to an adjoining valley at the upper end. Flumes and siphons have been avoided wherever possible, as they are sure to cause rise or fall in the water surface of such long canals as are required for that project. Control structures have been designed to present the least possible resistance to the movement of ice that may be freed in the canal. The natural stilling basins where valleys are used for the canal are expected to be useful in controlling ice.

ENGINEERING

In the previous article the economic aspects of these power and irrigation projects were discussed. The projects are also interesting from an engineering angle as demonstrating what can be done in developing power on rivers having as flat slopes as the Platte and the Loup, and as showing the pitfalls to be avoided. Much has been said about the engineering mistake and failure of structures during the early stage of this work. Even those most directly concerned are frank to admit that mistakes were made, but they were due almost entirely to the speed that was demanded by the P. W. A. in order to get the work under way and to the consequent lack of adequate knowledge of underground conditions, soil behavior, and the like. Preliminary designs had to be hastily made and yet could not be extravagant on the side of conservatism because it was known from the start that costs would be high.

Taken as a whole, the engineering work has been skillfully done and there are many ingenious examples of doing what engineers are supposed to do, make a dollar go farther than it would in the hands of untrained men. Skillful planning of the grading and earth handling operation has resulted in remarkably low bids for the vast amount of earth moving involved in the Tricounty project.

One fact that impresses the outsider visiting the project is the extent to which the engineering work now is being directed by local men. In the past, Nebraska had few engineering projects, hence it was to be expected that outside engineering talent would be brought in on these large projects when they were first begun. Thus the firm of Parsons, Klapp, Brinckerhoff & Douglas, of New York, was engaged for the Sutherland project and the Harza Engineering Co., of Chicago, was engaged to handle the engineering work of the Columbus project. But now the engineering is largely in the hands of native Nebraskans. Hence the engineering set-up also serves to emphasize the local character of the undertaking, as contrasted with the T. V. A. where all the money and most of the engineering talent has been and still is imported.

On the two projects that have passed from the construction to the operating stage, I. B. Jones, long associated with irrigation work in the arid West, is now in charge of civil-engineering work of the Sutherland project and Fred C. Albert, a native Nebraskan, is in charge at Columbus. D. J. DeBoer is chief engineer.

On the tricounty project the engineering has been chiefly local since its start, but the district staff has had the advice of the Fargo Engineering Co., of Jackson, Mich., and numerous consulting engineers in special fields. George E. Johnson, former State engineer of Nebraska, is chief engineer and general manager, and R. O. Green is assistant chief engineer in charge of the field work. George N. Carter is resident engineer at Kingsley Dam, D. A. Buzzell was hydraulic engineer until a few weeks ago, W. J. Turnbull is soils engineer, and I. W. Barber is materials engineer. On the electrical side, E. E. Chilberg is electrical engineer, and Andrew McCall is resident engineer in charge of powerhouse construction. Johnson, Green, Turnbull, Carter, and Buzzell all are men who gained some or all of their engineering training in Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. So far as I know, this engineer is not a friend of public power. I do not know the man personally, but I have read his article. He does not agree with me all the way through. He does not throw many bouquets at the Nebraska project; but evidently he was out there and made an examination, and he wrote this article, printed in the Engineering News Record. From his viewpoint I presume it was perfectly fair. Disagreeing with him in some respects as I do, I still believe that it was an honest effort on his part to tell the truth about it.

Mr. President, I have probably not referred to all the things to which the Senator from New Hampshire referred in his address. As I said at the beginning, I do not consider any of it worthy of a reply. Considering the charges he made against everybody who does not like Mr. Willkie, I do not believe it is an address which has any place in the United States Senate. Mr. Willkie is a candidate for President. His record ought to be an open book. Men honestly disagree as to the qualifications he possesses to be President. I have no personal ill will against him. Many men do not like President Roosevelt. They have a right to dislike him. Never once have I raised my voice against any man who wanted to criticize him, even though I thought the criticism was unjust and unfair. But because one is supporting Mr. Willkie or fighting him, or supporting or opposing Mr. Roosevelt, is no reason why Members of this body, which ought to be above reproach, should point to him with scorn and derision. It seems to me that is what has been done by the Senator from New Hampshire. I protest it. I denounce it. It has no place in this Chamber.

Men are often driven away from expressing their ideas by the attitude of those who take the position which the Senator from New Hampshire takes. Intelligent, honest, patriotic, but modest men do not like to be called thieves or rascals, or ridiculed because they have expressed their opinions about a man running for public office. I can see no excuse for that kind of conduct, except to scare men away from expressing their opinions.

It is not pleasant or agreeable to have to be held up before the people of the country as almost a criminal, as one who lacks wisdom or patriotism, or, as in the case of the references to myself, as one who is injuring his own people at home, trying to rob them, deceive them, and have them engage in projects which are said to be doomed to failure. All that may be true. I do not know what nature has in store; but judging the future by the past, I wish to take my attitude as having respect for those who do not agree with me, but no respect for those who denounce me as a bad man because they do not agree with me. I have no respect for the man who carries that kind of allegations into politics.

After all, is it any defense for Mr. Willkie if I have robbed my people in Nebraska? Is it any defense for Mr. Willkie if Francis Biddle is not an honest man? Is it any defense for Mr. Willkie that he has killed one of the oldest newspapers in the South? Is it any defense for him that he is engaged, as the power interests have been engaged for 25 years, in destroying everybody and everything which stands in his way? If we call attention to it, if we cite the record, if we quote his own words, we are denounced as numskulls, idiots, and worse.

That is what I wished to answer in the address of the Senator from New Hampshire. I have no objection to him because he wants to do everything he can to help Mr. Willkie. That is his privilege. But it is not honest or fair to denounce as a rogue or a rascal everybody who disagrees with him.

Mr. President, on September 15, 1940, at 7 p. m., there was a joint debate in the American Forum of the Air. The Senator from New Hampshire was one of the speakers, as was Secretary Ickes. Secretary Ickes quoted a great many assertions which had been made by the Senator from New Hampshire with reference to President Roosevelt. They were just as far away from the truth as were some of the other statements to which I have been referring with reference to the men I have been talking about today. I listened to that address. I listened to the charge made against the Senator from New Hampshire by the Secretary of the Interior, in which he quoted what the Senator had said and then told him what the truth was and what the record showed. I expected, when the Senator from New Hampshire got his chance to speak at that forum—which I knew he would have following Secretary Ickes—that he would give some explanation of the statements he had made, and either support them or give some reason why he had made such misstatements about the President of the United States. He never referred to them in his reply. He made nothing except a cursory reference to the charges against him. They did not amount to anything. They did not score with him. It made no difference to him that he had made a misstatement about a public official. He went right on with other charges.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks the address of Secretary Ickes on the occasion to which I refer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN FORUM OF THE AIR

Subject: The New Deal and National Defense. The National Press Club, Washington, D. C., Sunday, September 15, 7 p. m.

REMARKS OF SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR, HAROLD L. ICKES, IN DISCUSSION WITH SENATOR STYLES BRIDGES AND OTHERS

THE NEW DEAL AND NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to assist in bringing, at long last, the distinguished senior Senator from New Hampshire, the official spokesman for Wendell Willkie and the Republican National Committee, before the microphone tonight. Recently I made a radio speech and Mr. Willkie announced in advance that the Senator had been detailed to reply forthwith. But when I had spoken, Mr. Willkie instructed the Senator not to reply and to cancel his radio time.

Now, this was a very hard thing for the Senator to do, because I understand that no radio time had been contracted for that he could cancel. It was just another bit of Mr. Willkie's showmanship. However, it was widely proclaimed by the partisan press that the nonexistent time of the Senator had been abandoned. Thus, Mr. Willkie truly left his "Bridges" burning behind him.

The subject that we have agreed to discuss is the New Deal and National Defense. On this subject there is much misinformation abroad in the land. The Republican platform—do you remember it?—viewed with alarm the New Deal record on defense, and Candidate Willkie, the refugee from Wall Street, did likewise in his speech back on the farm at Elwood. Senator BRIDGES, or the Republican National Committee for him, promptly issued a supporting statement—if a declaration that is barren of truth can be said to be supporting. I quote directly:

"Roosevelt slept as Germany armed. With $18,000,000,000 of blank checks, which he could spend wholely at his own discretion, he built with these funds not one battleship, not a plane, not an anti-aircraft gun, not a single tank."

You will note that the Senator's criticism is directed at the 7 years prior to 1940. It has nothing to do with the present defense program, on which you are all so well informed that I could add little.

Fortunately, I can help the Senator tonight to clear away whatever confusion and misapprehension he may have caused. I am sure that he will welcome my efforts in this behalf. I can do this readily because, as Federal Public Works Administrator for 6 years, I am personally familiar with the record.

First, let us take the statement that the President did not build a plane with these funds. I am sure, Senator, that, as a patriotic American citizen, you will be glad to be told that this is a total error, as you might have ascertained from detailed reports made to Congress and to the public. Nor are these planes on paper, as your Mr. Willkie says; they are in commission right now.

You said, "Not a plane," Senator. As a matter of fact, fleets of planes for both the Army and the Navy were built with Public Works Administration emergency funds allotted by the President. With just 1 allotment, more than 100 planes, not to mention spare engines, parts, radio equipment, and bombing and armament appliances, were provided for the Army. With the same allotment, 130 planes, ranging from bullet-swift fighters to giant flying-boat patrols and bombers were provided for the Navy. This allotment was made by the President from P. W. A. funds in November 1933, at a time when Mr. Willkie, the great utilitarian, considered it his most patriotic duty to devote himself to the preservation of public utilities, privately owned. Incidentally, Mr. Willkie's utilities are protected tonight by these very planes, while utilities in other lands, however owned, are being bombed.

Is it possible, Senator, that your chief, Mr. Willkie, who offers himself as an informed leader in these critical times, does not know this? Or is it possible that the statements attributed to yourself and to Mr. Willkie were made for political purposes with intent to mislead the country?

I might tell you also that President Roosevelt used emergency funds to build more than 50 military airports throughout this Nation. These funds were also used to construct naval aircraft carriers, to build hangars and production facilities all over the country, and to provide the vital instrumentalities of aeronautical research now serving so well at Langley Field, Va., and in other laboratories that have put American aviation out in front.

Let us continue, Senator. I remember one single P. W. A. allotment of $10,000,000 to begin the motorization and mechanization of our Army, including armored vehicles, thus actually laying the foundations for the motorized army that we are building today.

This $10,000,000 allotment was made in December 1933, years before German panzer divisions showed the world the tremendous striking power of such equipment. I might also tell you that the same emergency funds helped to provide the Army with a network of 74,000 miles of strategic highways, vital to industrial and military mobilization, and indispensable to a mechanized army, together with useful bridges, grade crossings, viaducts, and similar facilities.

In addition to airplanes for the Army and Navy, one single allotment of approximately $9,000,000 from P. W. A. emergency funds was provided by President Roosevelt in July 1933 for the manufacture and modernization of ordnance, the improvement of arsenals, and the renovation and preservation of ammunition. The President also made possible the reconditioning and modernization of our 75-mm. guns.

Don't they tell you these things, Senator? They report them in the papers. But we must be getting along.

You said, Senator, that the President had "$18,000,000,000 dollars of blank checks, which he could spend wholely at his own discretion." That, Senator, is probably the most barefaced distortion of them all—and one which, as a Senator, you should have known better than to make. You know full well that, with few exceptions, the Congress dictated the purposes for which emergency funds might be spent.

As to the first P. W. A. appropriation in 1933 under the N. I. R. A. Act, the President relied upon a permissive sentence and allotted funds for defense purposes. This action was met by a storm of criticism, much of it by the same newspapers and politicians who are now, as hindsighters, assailing the President for doing all that he could of what they now say he should have done more of.

As a result of this violent criticism, when another P. W. A. appropriation bill was before the Senate in 1935, an amendment, originally offered by Senator Borah, took away any possible discretion on the part of the President to make military or naval allotments. This is the distinguished body of which you are an energetic member, Senator.

The defense allotments that I am referring to were all made more than 5 years ago. Didn't you know that, Senator? Of course, it happened before you got here, but the proceedings of the Senate are not a closed book to you, and you owe it to yourself to investigate the record to avoid making a misstatement of fact. In relation to total armament needs, of course a billion dollars may not now seem like a large amount for defense. But when it is considered that the President allocated this total amount out of funds originally intended principally for public works and work-relief projects, it is an outstanding accomplishment. So much so that the Senate saw fit to prevent similar expenditures from 1935 on.

As a matter of fact, Senator BRIDGES, if you had been a stickler for the truth, instead of saying that the President had $18,000,000,000 in blank checks which he could have spent for any purpose, you would have made it clear that, from 1935 on, Congress, by stipulation, amendment, and specific legislation, made it illegal for him to use some $18,000,000,000 of emergency funds for military purposes.

Five years ago your Mr. Willkie may have been so busy fighting the Government development of electrical power that now serves defense needs that he did not know what the President was doing in the way of building up the Army and the Navy, but you, as a Senator, could have told him the facts. You know because you have voted on some of these matters. In fact, Senator, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD discloses that you and your partisan associates, who are now supporting Mr. Willkie, voted regularly for laws and amendments to prevent, or reduce, or curtail, or restrict these emergency-funds appropriations. Inasmuch as you have fought against providing such funds in any form for the President, one is bewildered that you should now complain that more money was not spent.

But let us proceed, Senator. As I have shown, long before the world found itself in its present plight, President Roosevelt's foresight provided funds for military airports such as Mitchel and Randolph Fields; for engine tooling; for arsenal tools, which today are being worked at top speed; for civil aviation, which is a vital corollary of military aviation; for naval shore works, such as bases, shops, water-front developments, piers, dikes, bulkheads, boilers, machine shops, cranes, storehouses, shipyards, and docks; for Army posts, National Guard armories and camps; for military and naval hospitals, for rifle ranges and proving grounds, and other defense purposes.

Senator, the fact is that, during the last 7 years, while President Roosevelt has expended over $1,000,000,000 of emergency funds in projects directly related to national defense, large additional sums were expended for facilities pertaining to defense, such as veterans' hospitals, railroads, drydocks, dams, and ocean terminals. And this is why, with no thanks to Mr. Willkie or his current party, tonight we have a stronger Nation, more capable of quick and efficient mobilization than if your personal theories of defense had prevailed.

But let us proceed, Senator. You said that the President, with these funds, had built not one battleship, nor could you find any other naval construction financed from emergency funds. Yet, tonight on the high seas and at American naval bases are a whole fleet of vessels constructed with emergency funds. These naval vessels guard our shores in a world gone mad. They protect your and my democratic right to debate here tonight. They also make it possible for Mr. Willkie to stage his "Me, too, but—" campaign.

Let us name a few of the vessels that were built as part of this P. W. A. fleet. Included are the Yorktown and the Enterprise, laid down in 1934 and launched in 1936. Each is a 34-knot, long-range ship capable of carrying 100 aircraft. Each has 120,000-horsepower turbines, driving quadruple screws, and each is manned by 1,788 men of the United States Navy, ready to go anywhere at any time. In this P. W. A. fleet there are also 4 cruisers—the Vincennes, the Philadelphia, the Savannah, and the Nashville, in full commission; 4 heavy destroyers—the Porter, Selfridge, MacDougal, and Winslow; 16 fully armed, 1,500-ton destroyers; 4 submarines; 2 gunboats; and 18 cruising cutters and patrol boats.

In fact, Senator, this P. W. A. fleet was the largest single peacetime addition ever made to the United States Navy. From Harding to Hoover, Republican administrations sent American men of war scuttling to Davey Jones' locker. Today, thanks to the New Deal, we have the biggest and finest peacetime fleet in our history.

Despite this official record, Senator, you have charged that "Roosevelt slept as Germany armed."

Apparently, Senator, neither Mr. Willkie nor yourself has ever heard that the first emergency funds made available to Franklin D. Roosevelt after he became President were those in the original National Industrial Recovery Act, which became law on June 16, 1933. And on that very day—in fact, simultaneously with the signing of this New Deal legislation—the President issued an Executive order allotting $238,000,000 for the construction of the naval vessels that I have referred to. Here, Senator, for your information, is a photostat of that order.

Senator, I have stuck to the text. Mr. Willkie and yourself, and all of your king's horses at Republican national headquarters, couldn't find that a penny of emergency funds had been spent during the past 7 years for defense. I have shown you that a billion dollars were spent directly on defense while the Wendell Willkies of the United States were fighting against all emergency expenditures.

Senator, you have not merely missed the boat; you have missed the whole fleet.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks a portion of an article published in PM, of Monday, July 8, 1940. The article refers to a Republican delegate to the Philadelphia convention, whom I spoke of, for which I received some criticism. I wish to call attention to the fact that the same man whom I previously mentioned, on the same day that I saw him, gave an interview to a representative of PM, the New York daily.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOUR TASTE

One important, though little-mentioned, subject Willkie may spend some time on today is the preconvention campaign that catapulted him over Dewey and TAFT. The high-pressure tactics of some of his followers have left a sour taste in the mouths of some of the hardiest and most loyal delegates, including a member of the committee appointed to notify him of his nomination.

Gould Dietz, of Omaha, a member of the Republican Notification Committee, talked frankly and critically during a week-end stop-over in the Capital, about what he described as the high-pressure campaign at the convention. He said friends had telephoned, telegraphed, and written in an effort to get him to vote for Mr. Willkie. Some of them even tried to influence him through his wife, he said.

Mr. Dietz, a retired businessman, said that although he was for Mr. Willkie now that he was the Republican nominee, he was not sure the support shown for the public-utilities executive in telegrams and letters to delegates represented the views of the average voter.

BLAMES SUPPORTERS

Blaming Mr. Willkie's supporters, rather than the nominee himself, Mr. Dietz was indignant at some of the tactics used. He said one petition with about 40 signatures, sent on paper with the letterhead torn off, was obviously from employees of the Omaha Power Co. The Omaha delegate was particularly incensed at this one, which said, "We demand that you vote for Willkie."

"I don't like to be told how to vote," Mr. Dietz commented bitterly. "I want to make up my own mind."

Another appeal for a Willkie vote, Mr. Dietz said, came to him from an American in Mexico, an official of the Standard Oil Co. He said most of the pressure came from similar sources.

Few men have served at more Republican conventions than Mr. Dietz. He has been on every notification committee since the nomination of Charles Evans Hughes in 1916. Mr. Willkie will be the seventh nominee he has helped to notify. He can hardly be classified as an upstart in the Republican ranks.

Mr. McKELLAR obtained the floor.

RIVER AND HARBOR DEFENSE IMPROVEMENTS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I submit the conference report on House bill 9972, being the river and harbor defense improvement bill, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9972) authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 7.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, and 6; and agree to the same.

JOSIAH W. BAILEY,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
HIRAM W. JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. J. MANSFIELD,
CLAUDE V. PARSONS,
ALBERT E. CARTER,
GEO. A. DONDERO,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have been requested to suggest the absence of a quorum at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then the Senator withdraws his yielding for the purpose of considering the conference report?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have already yielded for that purpose.

Mr. AUSTIN. I object, unless a quorum is present.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have already yielded to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. MALONEY. I thought perhaps I might help to clear up this difficult situation. I am wondering if it might have been as the result of a request I made that the Senator from Vermont is about to suggest the absence of a quorum at this time. I was temporarily called out of the Chamber.

Mr. AUSTIN. It may be; but I can clear up the question immediately. It was said that the Senator from Connecticut had requested a quorum call. I interpreted that statement as meaning the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], who is now present.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will not suggest the absence of a qorum at this time.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from North Carolina will wait until later to bring up the conference report. He can submit it at this time, and ask for its consideration a little later. I shall not object to the conference report, but I wish to make a few remarks in regard to it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, all I wish to do is to get this legislation through the Senate today, and, if possible, through the House today. I understand the chairman of the committee on the House side wishes to go home and will probably leave today. It is important that we undertake to secure final action. However, I am not in the humor to insist too much upon anything. If the proposed legislation should go over for the session, it would not very greatly disturb me, but I should like to have action upon it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, in view of the presence in the Chamber of the Senator who wished to have me suggest the absence of a quorum, I should like to withdraw my objection. I leave it to the Senator from Connecticut. If he is entirely willing to go ahead without a quorum, I certainly am.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will explain that the House receded on all the Senate amendments except two. Those two were the amendments concerning projects, one for Connecticut and the other for Nebraska. The conferees on the part of the Senate were greatly disappointed that they could not persuade the conferees on the part of the House to accept those amendments, but the House conferees frankly informed us that if we should insist on the amendments and they should go to a vote on the House side, they would be overwhelmingly defeated, and possibly the whole bill would be put in jeopardy. It was only in view of that situation that the Senate conferees brought back the report as it is. We could not induce acceptance of those amendments, although we made the effort in the best of faith.

I regret to disappoint the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Connecticut, but I wish to assure them both that the House position is that these two projects are essentially flood-control projects and should be referred to the Committee on Flood Control in the other House. The Flood Control Committee of the House also takes a similar position. I have assurance from the chairman of the Flood Control Committee of the House that each of these projects will be taken care of early in the next session, so I do not think any great amount of time will be lost. That is all I have to say. I understand that the Senator from Connecticut will speak very briefly, and also that the Senator from Nebraska will speak briefly.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I should like to say just a few words.

Mr. BAILEY. I have finished.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I appreciate very fully the position in which the Senate conferees found themselves. So far as the project covered by my amendment is concerned, it was not a new project; it was one already approved. As I said at the time, it was only to avoid any technical difficulty which might arise hereafter that I thought it was necessary even to present the amendment. As a matter of fact, if I should be asked whether the adoption of the amendment would increase the appropriation or authorization, I would say it would decrease it. The only thing the amendment would do would be to give approval to what probably does not need approval, namely, changing, in accordance with the report of the Army engineers, the location of a dam from one site to another. As a matter of fact, a dam at the new location would cost less than the other one, so I am informed. That does not go to the principle of it, of course.

The statement that the proposal should come from a different committee is a technical objection that I do not think at all applies to the amendment offered by me; but I have to submit to the inevitable; I realize that; and I appreciate that the Senator from North Carolina has done all he could; that he could not have done more. Because I cannot have made the change of location for which my amendment provided I would not, under any circumstances, be put in the attitude of defeating the entire bill.

I do not think the technical objection of the Member of the House that the proposal should come from a different committee is tenable; in fact, so far as the amendment is concerned, it did not come from any committee. The objection is technical, Mr. President, and, to my mind, in the first place it has no merit whatever; and, in the next place, it is likely to do a grave injustice to a people whose existence is already greatly jeopardized.

I know I am helpless about it, and so is the Senator from North Carolina. I am not finding any fault in any way. I think he has done the best he could; nobody could have done better, and I simply have to acquiesce and submit.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I should like to say that I am deeply in sympathy with the plight of the constituents of the Senator from Nebraska, and I am very much disappointed that the project provided for by his amendment did not remain in the bill. I am not only familiar with the project itself but I have seen at first hand the handicaps confronting the people of Nebraska as a result of unusual and unfortunate conditions.

All I want to say for my own amendment is that I feel about it as the Senator from Nebraska does about his amendment, and, under ordinary circumstances, would make an effort to have the Senate send the bill back to conference. I know, however, that the Senate conferees, and especially the able chairman of the Committee on Commerce, tried very hard. I also know the feeling in the House, and because I fear that we may be about to discontinue, for a short time, consideration of major legislation, I will not take any step that will jeopardize the other very important items contained in the bill. For that reason, I shall not now raise objection.

I find a little hope in the fact that my amendment is included in a separate bill now before a House committee, and I have done something that I have not heretofore done as a Member of this body; I have discussed the situation with Members of the House, and pointed out to them that the project covered by my amendment is vital to the national defense, and reminded them that it involved one of the principal national-defense plants in the country, a plant where 18,000 people are employed, and that the proposal passed the Senate unanimously. I know that the interest of Mr. Knudsen of the National Defense Council has been excited, that he asked for an investigation, and I have heard from Mr. Carmody, of the Federal Works Administration, that he feels that another flood there might prove very harmful to our national defense.

I wanted to make this statement a part of the RECORD to show that the National Defense Council, the head of the Federal Works Agency, and the administration are vitally concerned with this amendment particularly, almost, indeed, entirely, because of its national defense importance. I hope the chairman of the commiteee is right in suggesting that if the amendment or the bill which I have sponsored is not acted upon within the next day or two—and I am very hopeful that it will be—early in the next session of Congress we can secure action upon this matter, for, should another serious flood come to Connecticut, a very important and vital part of our national-defense program might be seriously jeopardized.

If I may reiterate, I should like to say that it is only because I think the bill is otherwise very important that I am making no further objection, and I share the hope and desire of the committee that the conference report will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

MR. WILLKIE'S POLITICAL ATTITUDE

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I note that the Republican candidate for President is to spend a large portion of the present week in New York and in New England, and at this time I desire to quote from a speech he made as a public address in Birmingham, Ala., November 7, 1934, just a few years ago. I quote from that speech for the purpose of showing how greatly interested the Republican candidate is in the industries of New York and New England. The candidate then said:

> The Alabama Power Co. can remove industries from the North because it is a business concern, but the T. V. A. cannot remove them because it is a part of our Government, and therefore has to think of the political effect on the community from which the industry is removed. * * *
> I can tell you why we maintain an office in New York. It is solely because of two reasons: first, to have a convenient and advantageous point from which we can work with the Alabama Power Co. and other companies to secure the removal of northern industries to this area. How successfully we have done this, perhaps you can judge by the fact that in the past decade the new industries division of the Alabama Power Co. aided directly or indirectly in the location of 245 industries in 129 different communities in your State.

So far as I am concerned, it is all right if Mr. Willkie has been engaged in removing northern and New England industries to the State of Alabama, for I was born in the State of Alabama, and certainly I do not object to his removing to that State industries from any other section. But I am wondering how the people of New York and New England, where Mr. Willkie is going to preach some sort of a political doctrine this week, feel about removing their industries down to Mr. Willkie's bailiwick in Alabama. They may be interested in it, or it may be that they do not mind that activity at all; but I thought this was a very appropriate time to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that this is a part of the Republican nominee's program.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I suppose the Senator has observed the type of speeches made by Mr. Willkie in his campaign through the country, and has observed that in each community he was for the particular thing that community wanted or was in favor of. So I make the prediction that now that Mr. Willkie is about to address the people of New York, he will promise them to bring back these industries from the South.

Mr. McKELLAR. That may be true; and I leave the matter right there for the people in New York and the people in New England to consider.

Mr. President, I also desire to call attention to an article written by the distinguished Republican candidate. It appeared in the Atlantic Monthly of August 1937, just 3 years ago. I call this matter to the especial attention of the postal employees of our country.

Mr. President, for nearly 24 years I have been a member of the Post Office Committee of the Senate. I take a great deal of interest in the postal establishment of the country. I think it is the best governmental organization in the world today. I do not think it has a superior, or even an equal, in any other country. It is a wonderfully well-managed governmental institution, with marvelously efficient employees, all over the country. I call the attention of the postal employees, however, to the fact that Mr. Willkie does not think very much of their organization. I do not know what he would do with them if, by some miracle, he should be elected President. It would take a miracle, it seems to me now, for him to be elected; but if by some miracle he should be elected, I am wondering how the postal employees would fare. I quote from his article, published in the Atlantic Monthly:

> If a corporation similar to the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. should take over the administration of the post office, it is my belief that we should have an even more efficient mail service, at present rates, without any deficit at all. It is more than likely that the rates could be reduced. That, of course, is merely a personal opinion which cannot be proved. But the illustration gives rise to this very important question: Would we consider it to be efficient operation if the Government were to run the light and power industry as it runs the post office?

I think it would be a godsend to the users of electricity in this country if the Government should conduct the power industry as it conducts the Post Office of the United States, which, as I said before, is one of the most efficiently run governmental organizations ever created.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. In just a minute. Let me finish the quotation from Mr. Willkie's article, and then I will yield to the Senator from Washington:

> Let us remember that the Postal System is still the chief source of political patronage and that postal officers have long been appointed on the basis of their party affiliations—despite the fact that every President within my memory has advocated that the merit system should be adopted. Aside from that, however, a business which operates at a loss—a loss which in the end must be paid by the taxpayer—is not a business that is efficiently and economically run. We may well ask ourselves the question, in considering public ownership, whether the power industry should be run in a business-like fashion or whether it should definitely be a Federal charity.

That is Mr. Willkie's idea of the Post Office. I ask that the entire article be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Atlantic Monthly of August 1937]

In countries at all comparable to the United States the record of public ownership is not impressive. Of course, Sweden is frequently cited as an example of what public ownership can do in the light and power industry, but the comparison is of little value because the objects compared are so dissimilar. Sweden is a small, compact, homogeneous country, simple in political, social, and industrial structure. In size it would fit along this country's Atlantic seaboard.

There are no large countries in which government ownership has finally demonstrated its efficiency on a large scale. Within the United States, Government operation of the railroads during the World War was obviously a fiasco from which the railroads have recovered only after years of effort. That may not be a fair illustration, however, since it took place in a war period and had to be handled as an emergency matter. We have at hand a more apt exhibit in the Postal System, a Government enterprise which is usually regarded with approval by public-ownership advocates.

As these last frequently point out, the mail in this country is delivered with reasonable promptness and reliability. Unfortunately for this record, however, the Post Office has been operated at a very considerable deficit ever since it was organized. Complete figures on the costs of the Post Office would have to be tracked down through a maze of Government reports of all kinds both legislative and executive; such figures are not given in the reports of the Post Office Department. But the 1936 report of the Department states that the operating deficit of the United States Post Office in the past 100 years amounts to $1,501,569,000.

That is simply the operating deficit. It does not include the enormous amounts of money spent on the capital investment in post offices, namely the money spent for the purchase of land and for the construction of post-office buildings. These were all taken out of other appropriations and were, therefore, not charged against the Post Office Department—which is one of the ways whereby a Government department achieves an apparent cost reduction. There were 13,730 post offices and 1,501 classified stations and branches on June 30, 1936. There are no figures for the capital expenditures herein represented, but the total must be enormous and the fixed charges thereon would have to be added to the operating deficit mentioned above.

If a corporation similar to the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. should take over the administration of the Post Office, it is my belief that we should have an even more efficient mail service, at present rates, without any deficit at all. It is more than likely that the rates could be reduced. That, of course, is merely a personal opinion which cannot be proved. But the illustration gives rise to this very important question: Would we consider it to be efficient operation if the Government were to run the light and power industry as it runs the Post Office?

Let us remember that the Postal System is still the chief source of political patronage and that postal officers have long been appointed on the basis of their party affiliation—despite the fact that every President within my memory has advocated that the merit system should be adopted. Aside from that, however, a business which operates at a loss—a loss which in the end must be paid by the taxpayer—is not a business that is efficiently and economically run. We may well ask ourselves the question, in considering public ownership, whether the power industry should be run in a business-like fashion or whether it should definitely be a Federal charity.

Mr. McKELLAR. I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I merely wish to suggest that it requires illimitable gall for any human being connected with the private power companies of America to talk about ineptitude or lack of efficiency in business; for if there is any outfit in this country which in and out of season has spent money belonging to the consumers in political activities of the most shady character it is the private power organizations of this country, including that run by the esteemed Mr. Willkie; and I take it that they are no better and no worse than the power gang out in my part of the country.

For 25 years out in the Northwest most of the corruption in public life could be attributed directly to the private ownership of government, exemplified by the control of the private power companies in that section of the country, for they ran the government out there for a long time. A man could not even be a candidate for office out there without going up to an office in some big building in the city and finding out whether the private power companies would graciously permit him to be a candidate; and if he met their qualifications, they were very generous in the matter of campaign funds.

What I am saying now has been charged a thousand times on platforms in the State. There is not a well-informed politician in my neck of the woods who did not know that the State of Washington, like other Northwestern States, was owned in a political sense by the private power companies; and it is an astounding thing, and certainly a reflection on Mr. Willkie's intelligence, for him not to know and understand that. He has been right in the inner holy of holies of that game, and I understand, from manipulations in the neighborhood from which the Senator from Tennessee comes, that the power companies have not been above dipping their fingers into politics down there.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. BONE. So, in the light of the revelations of the Federal Trade Commission as to the sheer crookedness of private power companies, it certainly is an odd thing to have a man running for President to assert that there is any purity or efficiency in private ownership of power.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think possibly the Senator from Washington does Mr. Willkie a little injustice.

Mr. BONE. That would be impossible. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator says he thinks Mr. Willkie ought to have knowledge of certain things from his experience in the power business. Mr. Willkie is not much interested in the power business, as the Senator will remember if he recall the facts of Mr. Willkie's career. He is interested in the holding companies, which means the watered-stock manipulation of the power companies—not the generation of power so much as the manipulation of watered stock in the several companies, to the great detriment of the Republic.

Mr. WAGNER. He has never been a businessman.

Mr. McKELLAR. As the Senator from New York has just stated, Mr. Willkie has never really been what is called a businessman. He has been a holding-company, power-utility, watered-stock manipulator.

I want to say one thing to the postal employees. I hope the postal employees will read this discussion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD tomorrow, because I do not want the present postal system interfered with. I do not think a private concern, such as the one Mr. Willkie wants to turn them over to, should have charge of the mail system of the country; and if the postal employees think as I do about the matter, they will certainly see to it that Mr. Willkie is not given a place which will enable him to turn over the great Post Office Department to a private concern like the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

Mr. President, much has been said in the newspapers lately about Mr. Willkie and the farm issue. I have in my hand an article written for the Nashville Tennessean by a very delightful, vigorous, and active newspaperman in my State by the name of Joe Hatcher, concerning Mr. Willkie and his farming operations, even giving the deeds, showing that he bought at foreclosure sales in Indiana a number of farms. In this connection it is a remarkable thing that Mr. Willkie never bought any farms until after Mr. Roosevelt became President in 1933. Mr. Willkie began his farming operations in 1935, and the story is that he has been drawing farm benefits from the Government ever since he has been in the farm business. I do not know how that is, but that is the story.

I ask unanimous consent that the newspaper article may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAVEZ in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

POLITICS—INDIANA EDITOR RAISES "FARMER" WILLKIE ISSUE

(By Joe Hatcher)

Not all Indiana is for Wendell Willkie, despite the fact he's the first native Indianan ever to be nominated for the Presidency.

In fact, it might be rather difficult to get a sizable bet that Willkie will carry Indiana, or even his home town of Elwood.

And Willkie's "hayseed farmer" propaganda is beginning to get about as big a laugh in Indiana as it has been getting on Wall Street, according to reports from that State.

Editor and Publisher Toney E. Flack, of the Marion County (Ind.) Messenger and the West Side Messenger, in Indianapolis, is authority for the challenges of Willkie in the farmer role.

Editor Flack has gone to the records to determine just how real are the Willkie farmer claims.

And, right off, he finds that Willkie didn't become a farmer until after President Franklin D. Roosevelt and Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace had established the A. A. A., Farm Credit Administration, and other farm-benefit provisions, and while he was fighting T. V. A. and Rural Electrification as president of Commonwealth & Southern.

EDITOR COMMENTS

Editor-Columist Flack says of the Willkie farm propaganda:

"Wendell Willkie, upon his arrival in Rushville after his nomination for Republican President, said, 'I am not a farmer and I never expect to be one.' However, his Republican advisers have him attempting to play the role of dirt farmer, while in reality Willkie is an absentee farmer, doing his dirt farming on Wall Street, where he plowed under the suckers he took in holding-company stock transactions.

"Many Hoosiers wonder why he did not buy farms in Madison County and conduct his campaign from his home town of Elwood."

And here's the record of Willkie farming operations as compiled from the deed transfers, starting with Farmer Willkie's entry in the farm business on March 13, 1935. And the Willkie start was a farm lost under a mortgage from the last Republican administration before President Roosevelt got farm relief started.

The record shows, according to Flack's report:

March 13, 1935, the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., conveyed 352 acres in Walker Township, Rush County, Ind., to Edith Willkie, for $25,000. This was the Thomas K. Mull land lost under mortgage to the insurance company.

July 5, 1935, Chester Cross, administrator of the estates of John F. Cross, deceased, conveyed 386.86 acres in Jackson Township, Rush County, Ind., to Edith Willkie; consideration, $28,000.

December 26, 1936, Maud Bohannon conveyed to Edith Willkie 294.41 acres in Posey Township, Ruth County, Ind. The deed recites $1 and other considerations, and a $10,000 mortgage was assumed. The deed had $19 in Federal tax stamps affixed, which would indicate actual consideration of approximately $29,000.

November 16, 1938, Thomas H. Lee and Ruth M. Lee conveyed to Wendell L. Willkie 140 acres in Posey Township, Rush County, Ind.; consideration, $14,000.

April 29, 1939, Mary E. Williams et al. (2 deeds) conveying 189.79 acres in Posey Township, Rush County, Ind., to Wendell L. Willkie. The deed recites $1 and other considerations, and Federal tax stamps were attached in the amount of $1 on one deed and $14 on the other, which indicates that the total consideration did not exceed $17,000.

Anyhow the utility business was not so bad through this gap and Willkie must have had a lot of confidence in President's Roosevelt's and Secretary Wallace's farm program, so the records indicate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me refer to another matter.

As everybody knows, the present Secretary of the Navy, Colonel Knox, is a Republican and is one of the owners of a great newspaper in Chicago called the Chicago Daily News.

Everyone knows that the News is supporting the Republican candidate for President. There are times when the scales may fall from the eyes of the Chicago Daily News.

I now quote from the Washington Evening Star, one of the representative and splendid papers of this city, in its issue of Saturday last, on page 10. It shows a manifest awakening to just what the Republican candidate is preaching in this country. I shall take the liberty of reading the article, it is so important. I voted for the confirmation of Colonel Knox. I think he is making an excellent Secretary of the Navy. I have no criticism of him whatsoever, or of his paper. I am merely reciting the facts. I read from the article in the Star:

[From the Washington Evening Star]

COLONEL KNOX'S PAPER ASSAILS WILLKIE'S CLEVELAND SPEECH—ATTACK ON ROOSEVELT'S FOREIGN POLICY CRITICIZED IN EDITORIAL

CHICAGO, October 5.—The Chicago Daily News, owned by Secretary of War Knox, said in an editorial yesterday that Wendell Willkie's "peace" speech at Cleveland last Wednesday night was "an insult to the people's intelligence."

The newspaper, the direction of which was turned over to a board of three staff members when Mr. Knox entered the Cabinet, criticized the Republican Presidential nominee for some of his charges against President Roosevelt. Mr. Knox was Republican Vice Presidential candidate in 1936.

The Daily News editorial said in part:

"In the grave crisis confronting this Nation, in the grave decision that the people must make next November 5, we have supported, and we shall probably continue to support, the candidacy of Wendell Willkie. But we did not like the "peace" speech he made at Cleveland last Wednesday night. In fact, we think it was an insult to the people's intelligence. Either Mr. Willkie actually believed what he said, or he said it for political reasons without believing it, or he listened to some very bad advice, and we don't know which is worse.

"Mr. Willkie is on record, again and again, as favoring aid to Britain and China, and a strong national defense. Only a few hours before making the Cleveland speech he took credit—deservedly—for his efforts 'to give unity to certain important aspects of our foreign policy,' and 'to avoid any risk or any suspicion in foreign minds of a disagreement in this country on our fundamental attitude toward aggression.' Yet, at Cleveland, he strongly attacked the defense and foreign policies of the present administration, thereby deliberately undoing whatever good he may have done by his earlier statement.

Mr. President, I hope the Daily News of Chicago will continue to keep abreast of what is being said by Mr. Willkie as he goes over the country, and I hope that on maturer reflection they will not think it advisable to continue supporting a man about whose statement they say, "In fact, we think it was an insult to the people's intelligence."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I am not quite clear what the attitude of the News is or was in the editorial referred to, whether they were criticizing Mr. Willkie because he favored, as they said he did, giving aid to Great Britain in this terrible conflict, or because of some other views which he entertained. I do not know what his views are with respect to the matter, but if he favored the position taken by a large number of Americans—and I am among the number—that we should give some aid to Great Britain in a contest which involves not only the life of Great Britain and other democratic nations, but which will have repercussions, if Great Britain shall be destroyed, to the disadvantage of the United States, I praise him for it. Personally, I applauded the President when he obtained bases in the Western Hemisphere from Great Britain. I applauded the President when he approved the plan to dispose of 50 of our ships to Great Britain, and I should be very glad if the American people would take some steps to aid Great Britain, not only morally, but in a material way, in the present contest, in which she is not only defending Great Britain, but is defending democratic nations throughout the world.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I thank the Senator, and for his information I will hand him a copy of the speech referred to, and he can easily see why the Chicago Daily News criticized Mr. Willkie.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I did not intend to make any comment upon the views which the paper entertains. I was just wondering whether it was condemning him for various of his policies, or merely because he expressed approval of the President's giving some aid to Great Britain.

Mr. McKELLAR. It had nothing whatever to say about the ships, as I recall.

Mr. President, when historians come to review the politics of this period there will undoubtedly be a chapter on the strange case of Wendell Willkie.

Our history has had cases of a somewhat similar kind before. Everyone remembers that the Whigs in 1840 nominated William Henry Harrison, a Whig, for President, and John Tyler, a Democrat, for Vice President. Harrison died within 30 days and John Tyler's administration became a Democratic administration.

Andrew Johnson, though a Democrat, was elected as a Republican Vice President in 1864, and upon Lincoln's death it was not a great while before he again became a Democrat, to the great disappointment of the Republicans.

However, there was never such an unusual mistake made by any political party as when the Republicans nominated Wendell Willkie in Philadelphia. Mr. Willkie, it seems, was born a Democrat. He had lived a Democrat all his life. He had voted for President Roosevelt twice for President. He had never foresworn his party allegiance until some time in 1939 or 1940. I have heard it was May, although the exact time I do not know. No one seems to know exactly when it was. For a while he had been a member of Tammany Hall and held some official position with the Democratic Party in New York. Certain it is that he had never affiliated in any way with the Republican Party until a few months ago. He had never supported any Republicans. He had never been a Republican officeholder. He had never voted the Republican ticket. He had never worked for Republican candidates. He had never worked for Republican policies. Insofar as is known, he had never contributed money to Republican causes. He had never done the slightest thing for the Republican Party.

When, on May 23, 1940, he announced that he was a candidate for the Republican nomination for President at the Philadelphia convention he had not sought the support of any delegates. He had not undertaken to have any delegates elected to support him when the convention came on. However, he got very busy accumulating delegates who had been pledged to other Republican candidates for the Presidency or obtaining the votes of such as were not pledged.

Dewey was the leading candidate, with about 300 pledged votes. The Senator from Ohio, Mr. TAFT, was the next in order, with nearly 200 votes. The Senator from Michigan, Mr. VANDENBERG, had a large number of votes, and various other lifelong Republicans had votes instructed for them.

These Republican candidates were men who were born Republicans. Their fathers before them were Republicans. Nearly all of them had distinguished Republican records. The leading candidate, Mr. Dewey, had built up a fine record as a public prosecutor in New York. He had long served his party and was apparently in a commanding position in his party.

The Senator from Ohio, ROBERT TAFT, as we all know, is a son of a Republican ex-President and an ex-Chief Justice of the United States. He himself had done the party valiant service for many years. He was a regular Republican Senator of high standing and popularity.

The Senator from Michigan, Mr. VANDENBERG, was a newspaperman of the highest standing and ability. He had fought the battles of the party faithfully all his life. He is a distinguished Republican Senator, and in every way qualified for the high office to which he aspired.

The Senator from Kansas, Mr. CAPPER, was a candidate at that convention, a life-long Republican, a noted Senator, and a strong supporter of his party.

The Senator from New Hampshire, Mr. BRIDGES, is a young Republican Senator from the State of New Hampshire, where all his life he has supported the Republican cause. He was an active, ambitious, and vigorous candidate.

As I recall, the various other candidates were men of high standing, long identified with the fortunes of the Republican Party, and all workers in the Republican cause. All had been faithful to their party. All had been true to its principles. All had been workers in the Republican vineyard. All had reason to expect that they might be called upon to lead the Republican cause. The delegates had all been selected, and for quite a while the idea of a candidate being nominated who was not a Republican, who had always been a Democrat, who had never done a thing for the Republican Party in his life, was about as farfetched an idea as any person, Democrat or Republican, ever entertained.

But when the convention met, mirabile dictu—wonderful to relate—Mr. Willkie turned up at the beginning with about 100 votes. Even then there were few who took his candidacy seriously. However, the galleries were packed with his supporters. Each ballot he gained more and more Republican votes, and after a short fight he literally ran away with the nomination. The old-line Republicans were shunted aside. The faithful followers of the party were utterly disregarded. The workers in the Republican vineyard were laid off from their work, and the representative of watered utility stock, the president of a utility holding company, a life-long Democrat, a supporter of Franklin Roosevelt for two terms, a representative of big business, a man who had never been in the Government service, who had been fighting the Government for several years in the interest of his utility holding companies, a man who had never held political office, was then victor in this National Republican Convention.

The rank and file of the Republican Party had been outwitted. The old-line Republicans had been double-crossed. The faithful followers in the party had been disregarded. What was the answer to this marvelous situation? Of course there could be but one answer: Big business wanted its own man as President. It mattered not a particle whether he was a Democrat or a Republican. And big business nominated its man.

The stock and bond gamblers of New York had been out of the picture for the last 8 years. They had not been allowed to control and run the Government of the United States. They wanted to get back into a position of control. They tried to get back with Landon in 1936 and failed, so this time their edict came to nominate Willkie, a Democrat, but he was their Democrat, and they had him nominated. At first their joy was unconfined. Their newspapers spread the glad tidings to the world. Their radios worked overtime. Then something happened. This bright, attractive young man whom they picked to do their bidding as President for the next 4 years apparently lost his head. He was a talker. He had seen his name in the headlines during the convention and immediately afterward, and he wanted to continue to see it there. He tried to get in every morning, and every time he opened his mouth he put his foot in it. Every time he talked he made a mistake. When he came to write his speech of acceptance, he accepted substantially all the Roosevelt policies. He committed himself to everything that the old-line Republicans were against. He endorsed all the Roosevelt policies, and pitched his campaign on the two proposals that he was an abler and better administrator of Mr. Roosevelt's policies than was Mr. Roosevelt himself, and besides, Mr. Roosevelt had been President for two terms and he ought not to be allowed a third term.

Then things began to happen. France caved in and turned herself over to Hitler. Almost immediately Hitler announced that he was going to take over Great Britain, and things looked serious for America. Mr. Roosevelt announced a gigantic preparedness program. Mr. Willkie, not daring to oppose it, approved it in a left-handed way, intimating that he could have prevented the fall of France and Great Britain if he had been President. Mr. Roosevelt announced the selling to Great Britain of 50 old destroyers, the pay being eight splendid air and sea bases. Again Mr. Willkie approved this trade in his left-handed way, and intimated he could have made a better one.

About that time the Congress took up the consideration of defense measures. Two of the most important of these measures were the drafting of men to fight and the drafting of industries when needed. Mr. Willkie was strong for the drafting of men, but he balked on the drafting of industry. He denounced it. He even went so far as to say that those who voted for it in the Senate were sovietized Communists, or words to that effect. He even applied this epithet to a majority of the members of his own party in the Senate, and when I say his own party, I mean the Republicans in the Senate. Ten Republican Senators, two of them his competitors for the Republican nomination, had voted for the Russell amendment, drafting industry under certain conditions. Ten Republican Senators voted outright for it, and three were paired for it, while only eight voted against it. These 13 Republican Senators were denounced by their candidate for President as men who had voted to sovietize America.

Ah, my Republican colleagues, I sympathize with you. Your new Democratic leader did not treat you right. It was only shortly after this denunciation of these 13 Republican Senators that the newspapers stated that 22 party leaders met Mr. Willkie in Indiana and urged him to modify his position on the drafting of wealth, and he attempted to do so, but, as I recall his modification, it only made matters worse and, of course, every informed man in America knows that this minion of the power companies in America was not in favor, and is not in favor, of drafting any industry in time of war or any other time. We all know that he thinks more of industry than of anything else under the sun except only holding companies.

Then Mr. Willkie made his speeches in Chicago. After his visit there the papers quoted him as saying, "To Hell with Chicago." What a statement from the candidate for the high office of President of the United States. He was angry, of course. It would be better to say he was mad, for no one but a mad man would thus express himself about the people of a whole city, and surely no one would want a President to feel that way toward a city of more than 3,000,000 people. But our Republican friends must get used to this kind of language from Mr. Willkie. It is just what he had been giving us Democrats down in Tennessee for a long time. During the early part of this year, when asked if he favored a bill for the Tennessee Valley Authority to repay the taxes which the State, counties, and cities had lost by the T. V. A. sale, and said "No," he was not in favor of the bill. On the contrary he wanted the State, counties, and cities to stew in their own juices, and that it would teach them a valuable lesson, meaning it would teach them not to get into a fight with the power monopolies that he represents. He said he thought that bankruptcy—bankruptcy—was the best thing for those counties which had opposed him in Tennessee. Think of a Presidential candidate wanting counties to become bankrupt. We people of Tennessee want to congratulate Chicago that she has been put under the Willkie ban. It is true he did not say where our cities and counties were to stew, but we imagine it was in the locality of the place to which he verbally sent Chicago.

Daily he is accusing Mr. Roosevelt of all kinds of high crimes and misdemeanors. He accused him of having brought about the Munich Conference. He accused him of being responsible for the downfall of democracy in Europe. He accused him of being a dictator. He accused him of not representing the American people. He accused him of inability to govern America properly. He accused him of being unable to protect American institutions, and he has even gone so far as to say that while he endorses all the President's foreign policies, that the President has made a failure of administering the foreign affairs of our Government, and he tells all the people in every speech how much better he could do the job than Mr. Roosevelt can in the next 4 years. The truth of the business is that in his own estimation Mr. Willkie is about the biggest man there is in this country.

Mr. President, Mr. Willkie's peculiar attitude of mind, which makes him believe he would better administer the Presidency than Mr. Roosevelt, reminds me of an old, old story which fits his case very well, indeed. An English cotton buyer visited the plantation of a South Carolina cotton farmer near Charleston. It was a delightful southern home, and the Englishman was cordially welcomed. The family had a butler who had served them for a long time. The first night at the table the colored butler heard the boasting of the Englishman. They had been out hunting that afternoon, and he said that while South Carolina quail were pretty fair, they were nothing like the quail in England. They were not half so large or half so sweet or half so good.

The next day the host took the Englishman out shooting pheasants. They killed a goodly number, but the Englishman said they were only fairly good and that the English pheasants were so far superior that the American pheasants were hardly comparable.

The host then took the Englishman out duck hunting, and again he was disappointed in the American ducks, as the British ducks were so much more palatable, and their meat was of a much higher order.

With respect to everything that came upon the table, the Englishman benevolently stated that it was very good, but that in England they had much better. All this time the colored butler was thinking very actively, so he made up his mind to bring the matter to an issue with the English visitor. That night he went out and got a snapping turtle that weighed two or three pounds, and very carefully laid the turtle between the sheets of the Englishman's bed, and awaited developments. The Englishman went to bed about 11 o'clock. As was the custom in those days, he wore a long nightshirt. About 12:30 the turtle began to investigate his bedfellow, and clamped down on the Englishman's back, waking him up and terrifying him. He tried to pull the turtle off, but the turtle was the kind that would not turn loose. The Englishman began to yell and scream, and woke everybody up. He came bounding down the stairs, his nightshirt flying, and the turtle hanging on to him.

Uncle Mose was at the door. The Englishman said, "My God, take this animal off me!" Uncle Mose stopped him and separated the Englishman from the turtle. When this was done the Englishman turned around and said, "My God! What sort of animal or thing is that?" Uncle Mose said, "That is a South Carolina bedbug. Have you any bigger bedbugs than that in England?" [Laughter.]

I think the Republican Party may have a South Carolina bedbug hanging on to it, in the person of Mr. Willkie.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10127) to amend the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I should like to return to the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I had suggested to several of my colleagues on this side of the aisle that when the unfinished business was to be dealt with I should suggest the absence of a quorum. I ask the Senator to yield for that purpose.

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Holt	Schwartz
Andrews	Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Sheppard
Austin	Ellender	King	Shipstead
Bailey	Frazier	McKellar	Stewart
Barkley	George	Maloney	Thomas, Idaho
Bone	Gerry	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Gibson	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Burke	Gillette	Norris	Townsend
Byrd	Glass	O'Mahoney	Tydings
Byrnes	Green	Overton	Van Nuys
Capper	Guffey	Pepper	Wagner
Caraway	Gurney	Pittman	Walsh
Chavez	Harrison	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Clark, Idaho	Hayden	Reed	White
Clark, Mo.	Herring	Russell	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10127) to amend the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, this bill was discussed some 4 weeks ago and was then laid aside. The junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] was then in charge of the bill, but he is unable to be present today, and that is why I am undertaking to press the bill for passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] proposed as a substitute for the House bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. As I understand, the House bill was considered and the Senator from Michigan offered an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and to substitute in lieu thereof the Senate bill reported by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. As I understand, that is the amendment now pending, and that amendment, of course, is subject to further amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. DANAHER. Is the question before the Senate pending in that form?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is pending in that form.

Mr. DANAHER. Just as stated by the Senator from New York, so that we are now proceeding actually to consider Calendar No. 2043, Senate bill 4174?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is proceeding to consider Calendar No. 2045, House bill 10127, and the particular amendment before the Senate is the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN]. The amendment has been printed and is on the desks of Senators.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, in view of the parliamentary situation, let me say to the Senator from New York that I have, as he knows, an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the Brown amendment. Perhaps I should submit it at this time and have it pending.

Mr. WAGNER. I did not understand that the Senator's proposal was a substitute for the Brown amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. It includes the Brown amendment and other features. It is a substitute for the Brown amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. I did not so understand.

Mr. ADAMS. It is a complete restatement of the bill embracing the Brown amendment and certain other provisions.

Mr. WAGNER. The amendment which I saw I understood was to include banks which are not now included in this proposed legislation, and was an amendment to the Senate bill. Perhaps if I may examine it, it would expedite matters.

Mr. ADAMS. If I may interrupt the Senator to make an explanation, in its original form the amendment I submit simply would have modified the bill so as to include private, insured banks; but the General Counsel of the Federal Reserve System visited me and said the Federal Reserve Board would prefer to have the amendment redrafted in a form which would include the Brown amendment. The amendent I am offering was drawn by Mr. Wyatt, and, in view of the parliamentary situation, I shall offer it as a substitute for the Brown amendment, which is a substitute for the entire bill.

Mr. WAGNER. I wonder if it also includes another amendment which I have in mind?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair should like to be advised whether the Senator from Colorado is now proposing his amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. ADAMS. I was asking the Senator from New York whether or not the amendment was in a form which would suit him.

Mr. WAGNER. Before expressing an opinion I should prefer to examine the amendment. I wish to be sure, Mr. President, that it also includes an amendment I was going to offer to the pending amendment, making very clear that nothing in the proposed act in any way limits the powers conferred under the Trading with the Enemy Act, prohibiting the transfer of any credits or properties without a license. I wanted to make very sure of that, and I should like to examine the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Colorado to see whether that is included. [Examining.] I understand now the amendment includes everything which was desired.

Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan has already been explained by him, but I should like briefly to go over some of the salient features of the bill.

The Federal Reserve System now holds assets belonging to foreign governments or to central banks which are the fiscal agents of foreign governments. Those assets are in the shape of gold; that is, earmarked gold amounting to some $1,780,000,000. We must not confuse that with gold which is purchased by our Government and deposited; but it is earmarked gold belonging to foreign governments which has been deposited with Federal Reserve banks. Foreign governments also hold deposits in our Federal Reserve banks to the extent of $820,000,000. So, we are considering a measure involving a very large amount of gold and deposits belonging to foreign governments, principally to governments which have been invaded, such as Holland, Belgium, Norway, Denmark, and France.

The pending bill is merely intended to protect the Federal Reserve banks from liability in case of rival claims to these assets. Many of the countries for which the Federal Reserve System holds assets have been invaded; in some cases the governments are in flight, and in other cases, of course, where there is complete invasion, they are under the control of the invaders.

Take the case of Holland: The Central Bank of Holland is still situated, as I understand, in Holland, but the Government itself has been transferred to London and is operating there through its legislative and executive departments. The head of the government, the Queen, is living now in England. Because of that situation, there may be asserted conflicting claims to the funds credited to the Bank of Holland.

The Federal Reserve banks might be presented with an embarrassing choice between a claimant to funds and the existing government. If I may give a supposititious case, assume that a government has been invaded; its central bank which was the fiscal agent which made the deposit of gold or cash, remains within the country invaded and under the control of the invader, while the government itself has moved to some other place. A decree might be enacted by the government, though not functioning within the invaded territory, as to the disposition of the moneys or gold belonging to the government; for it must be remembered that while in some cases the bank has been, perhaps, induced, if I may use a mild term, to make a claim for those funds, nevertheless, we all know that the central banks are mere agents of the government, and whatever they do they do simply in behalf of the government. We have had several cases of the government issuing decrees transferring the money from the bank to the government itself; that is, to the actual owner of the gold or the money.

As we all know, our courts generally recognize the extraterritorial effect of decrees of foreign governments as they affect rights of foreign nationals in our own country, unless such recognition would interfere with our domestic policy.

What we are doing in this legislation, because our public policy may require the payment and transfer of the money or the gold at once, is to provide that when the Federal Reserve bank pays or transfers this money or gold to one who is the accredited representative of a government which is recognized by our country, such payment shall be conclusive against any adverse claimant; and in enacting that policy into law we are simply carrying out what is the law of the land as it has been decided time and time again by the United States Supreme Court.

That, in effect, is the purpose of this particular enactment, because, as I say, we generally, as a matter of comity, recognize these foreign laws; that is, they have extraterritorial effect, and we carry them out unless it is against our public policy to do so.

That is a simple statement of the effect of this legislation.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator does not wish to be understood as saying that this bill applies only to the central banks of countries which have been invaded, does he?

Mr. WAGNER. No. What I meant to say—and I think it is very obvious to anybody—is that this question rarely arises, and has rarely arisen in the past, except when there are situations such as we have at the present time, in which, while these governments exist as governments, and we recognize them as governments, we know the influence under which many of them are now compelled to conduct their affairs.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. DANAHER. The fact of the matter is that if we pass this bill, unlike present law, we shall be including every foreign state within the powers thus extended; shall we not?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; but that is the present law. I am sure the Senator from Connecticut is familiar with the cases. The present law is that our Government usually carries out the laws of recognized foreign governments when such laws affect the rights of the foreigners in this country, as long as such laws are not contrary to our own public policy. Authority under a foreign law for the delivery of foreign assets would be a complete defense to any action which might be brought regarding these foreign assets.

The only reason for enacting this legislation now is this: I suppose I am not at liberty to state exactly some of the situations which may arise, though I know something about them; but suppose a foreign government needs its money, it ought to have it. Why should we deprive a foreign government of its moneys or its gold deposited in our banks if they belong to that government, and if, by carrying out simply the edicts or the laws of that land, we can transfer that money? It may be a great injustice to withhold the use of that money for some months or even some years, which may result if we permit injunction suits and other kinds of litigation to be instituted simply to embarrass those governments, because in the end the decision will have to be that the government which we recognize is the government which is entitled to the funds.

Mr. KING. Both the de jure and the de facto government.

Mr. WAGNER. Both; and, as the Senator well knows, I am sure, the test is, Is the particular individual the accredited representative of the government we have recognized? That is the entire test; and that is about all that this bill does. It relieves an embarrassing situation which may arise, and it may be to the interest of our public policy that the payment be made at once. That is all that this legislation proposes.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. DANAHER. Of course, there is one important thing which the bill does, and which differs from existing law. I read:

> No court shall have jurisdiction to restrain or enjoin a Federal Reserve bank from making any payment, transfer, delivery, or other disposal of property in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph.

In other words, we deny to our courts jurisdiction to determine the conflicting claims; do we not?

Mr. WAGNER. We do; yes.

Mr. DANAHER. That is new; is it not?

Mr. WAGNER. We do that for the very reason I stated a moment ago, because we want to do away with the embarrassments which may be created as a result of a world situation for which these governments are not at all responsible; and we may be doing them a great injustice in these critical times if we should withhold these funds from them for their use because of some adverse claimant who in the end, of course, would have no standing at all in court; but unless this bill should be passed, a determination of his claim would require the prosecution of litigation. It is simply that situation which we are avoiding; but I am sure the Senator must agree that we are enacting into law what has been held by the Supreme Court to be the law of the land with reference to the extraterritorial effect of the laws of foreign countries.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator yield, or has he concluded?

Mr. WAGNER. I have concluded.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, there are a few particulars in which the case for this bill, as presented to the Banking and Currency Committee, left some of us, it seems to me—at least, left me—completely unconvinced.

When the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] says there might be embarrassments—and I quote him, using his own terms—when he says some question of public policy of the United States might be involved unless we should enact this bill into law, he is stating precisely the only reason why the bill is brought here. Before we look into the matter of enacting into law any bill, it seems to me the first inquiry should be, "What is the need for the bill proposed?"

If, as the Senator says, the existing law, as decided by our Supreme Court time and time again, already does everything that this bill would do, then why pass it? Why should we have it? Why should we clutter up our lawbooks and pass one more statute giving one new phase of an extension of the powers of the Federal Reserve System, if there be no other need, and if the law today be adequate for all the purposes sought by the bill?

Mr. President, I am willing to say that the fact may be, and I have not any question it is, that under the law as it now stands the State Department, as a political question, has before it time and time again the duty of deciding what government is de jure or what government is de factor in a foreign country. I have no question that the courts of this country will honor the government which is recognized by the State Department, because that is a political function, and the duty of the State Department. But, Mr. President, if we are to pass this particular bill, and if we are to deny access to the courts to conflicting claimants with reference to investments, or the avails thereof, or the evidence thereof, or gold in this country, we shall not be making decisions as to who owns this money on the basis of the justice of the claim, but we shall be enacting this legislation so that our Government may play foreign politics with the money. That is where the difficulty arises with reference to it.

To take a patent instance, consider the situation which arose only a few weeks ago in Europe when the DeGaulle government was recognized by certain countries, including Great Britain, following the downfall of France. Until the DeGaulle government was recognized, of course, the official Government of France was that which had been described as the ally of Great Britain; and then there was the DeGaulle government. But, Mr. President, in just a very few days there was a third government in the field, that which is commonly described today as the Petain or Vichy government.

If the DeGaulle government had been recognized under this measure, and some billion and a half dollars of French gold had been turned over to somebody who was certified as the representative of the DeGaulle government and hence of the Government of France, in what position would that have left the United States? Suppose General DeGaulle had in fact gotten the avails of this fund, and utilized it to organize the Dakar expedition, and then it had developed that General DeGaulle did not represent a recognized government of France. If we undertake to give domestic effect to this bill, if it shall be enacted into law, we can give to it no extraterritorial effect. There is no reason why any foreign country should recognize it, and I predict that the day will come when the United States of America will be called to account for having disposed of assets in this country which had been sent here by foreign banks.

There are certain things involved, it seems to me, in maintaining the honor and the integrity of the country. Among them is the security and fidelity of its own banking system. There are central banks abroad which have sent their funds to this country, believing that this is the safest place in the world in which to deposit funds, and we accepted them as trustee. Under the terms of the pending bill we take the funds of those entrusters and turn them over to someone without even requiring that the Secretary of State shall certify to the Federal system that the individual who is to get the money is entitled to it.

We do not even ask him to do it. What we do in the bill is to ask the Secretary of State merely to recognize the authority of the person who is to get the money. That is what he is to do. He is to accredit the representative of the country. He recognizes him and accepts his credentials—as it is put in international law—and the President in due course, on the representations of the Secretary of State, will recognize a given individual as the formal representative of a given country, yes; but does he certify that fact to the Federal Reserve System under the bill? An examination will disclose that the bill does not provide for any such thing. The bill provides that the authority of the person to act is accepted and recognized by the Secretary of State. It does not provide that the Federal Reserve System shall even get any such certificate. Quite the contrary from the Federal Reserve System acting on a certificate from the Secretary of State which would give political effect to the person recognized, and thereupon, under the theory of the bill, the Federal Reserve bank thereafter would stand discharged of all claims if it paid that person, it does not provide that. There is no "shall" in it, there is no "may" in it. The fact of the matter is that, by the very terms of the bill, if we enact it into law, the Department of State, through one person, the Secretary of State, is to say what government he recognizes, what representative he accredits, and he holds over such representative constantly the wand of transformation into acquiescence or compliance by his willingness to certify or his refusal to certify whether the representative will or will not get funds in this country belonging to the central bank of the country which sent him here. Let me say, furthermore, that it does not even mean that the ambassador of a country must be picked. It can be any legal representative.

Above all, we would deny to conflicting claimants the jurisdiction of our courts to determine their claims as a matter of justice and of right. That is the way the bill is drawn. It is for such reasons, looking into the future, and realizing what may happen, that it seems to me attention should be called to this point, to the end that the Senate, if it passes the proposed legislation, shall do so with its eyes wide open.

It is all very well for us to say that the Federal Reserve Bank will not be liable in any court of the United States, but that does not absolve the United States of America as a corporate entity, as a sovereign nation, from having recognized what is in effect its central bank, the Federal Reserve System, and having authorized payment to a political entity which may be repudiated by its own country in time to come. Thereupon there arises a demand against the United States for payment to such a country of the millions of dollars whose payment we may have authorized under the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. KING. Perhaps the suggestions I am about to make are an ad hominem argument rather than a legal argument; but, in order that I may have my mind cleared a little with regard to the facts, let me invite attention to two or three countries. Take Norway, for example.

Mr. DANAHER. Yes.

Mr. KING. The Nazi government invaded Norway and, by force, took charge of the Government. They put a man named Quisling in control. The executive and legislative departments were banished from the country. The King took refuge in Great Britain, and some of the members of the royal family are now in the United States. Quisling is a mere protegé, a mere figurehead, doing exactly what Hitler tells him to do. Quisling undoubtedly will demand, if Norwegian funds are found in the United States, that such funds be turned over to him. Suppose the able Senator were in charge of our Government, or of the State Department, or of our central bank, and demand were made by Quisling upon him for those funds; would he feel, morally or legally, that he should then turn them over to Quisling?

Mr. DANAHER. Let me answer the question in the words of the hearings, at which State Department representatives were present, and Federal Reserve officials, including Chairman Eccles, and counsel for all the departments affected were present. They must have anticipated the question of the Senator from Utah, for they told us, as appears on page 5 of the hearings, just what they did. I read:

> When Norway was invaded, the Norwegian Government passed some legislation or decrees whereby the right of the officers of their central bank to operate this fund and to withdraw funds from the balance in the Federal Reserve banks here was vested in the Norwegian Minister to this country. That decree was passed to the State Department by the Norwegian Minister, who certified that, under the laws of his country, he is the one who is now authorized to operate that account. The Secretary of State accepted that authority, and upon that the Federal Reserve banks are to honor the orders of the Norwegian Minister rather than those of the officers of the Central Bank, who apparently are still in Norway. In the case of the Norwegian bank that was done.

So answering the Senator's question specifically, they have operated to the complete protection of the Norwegian Minister, and the rejection of the Quislings, and they did not need this bill to do it.

Mr. KING. Take the case of Holland, or take the case of Belgium.

Mr. DANAHER. Let us take one at a time, and see if I cannot find the answer in the record.

Mr. KING. They have funds in the United States.

Mr. DANAHER. Which country?

Mr. KING. Let us take Belgium, whose King is now imprisoned in some fortress, who is under the control of the Nazis, and whose movements, of course, are not voluntary, but are involuntary. He has not been recognized, I am advised, by those who might have some authority in his country. Suppose his country should have funds in the United States, and assume that the Nazi government claims to be the de facto if not the de jure government of Belgium, and the de facto government set up by Mr. Hitler should demand, of our banks here which have the funds, possession of them. Does the Senator say that we should deliver them?

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say to the Senator from Utah that we anticipated that question, too.

Mr. KING. I am glad there was so much anticipation. I hope there will be some genuine realization of the justice of things, rather than anticipation of the supposed legality of an injustice.

Mr. DANAHER. Before I answer the Senator specifically in the terms of the record, let me say that the lack of a decision based upon justice is the very point upon which the bill breaks its back. It is the very point, I think, on which the bill loses the force and the character and the integrity legislation of this character should have. There is no reason in the world why we should deny claimants the right to come into our courts and establish their respective claims, and thereupon rely upon the record as established by the Secretary of State as to naming a particular political person entitled to recognition.

Let me answer the Senator from Utah by recalling to him specifically that we had before us a few months ago a measure which was passed by the Senate, and which was signed by the President on May 7, 1940, providing as follows:

> During time of war or during any other period of national emergency declared by the President, the President may, through any agency that he may designate, or otherwise, investigate, regulate, or prohibit, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, by means of licenses or otherwise, any transactions in foreign exchange, transfers of credit between or payments by or to banking institutions as defined by the President, and export, hoarding, melting, or earmarking of gold or silver coin or bullion or currency, and any transfer, withdrawal or exportation of, or dealing in, any evidences of indebtedness or evidences of ownership of property in which any foreign state or a national or political subdivision thereof, as defined by the President, has any interest, by any person within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof.

I read so much of Public Resolution 69, adopted in the Seventy-sixth Congress. Let me point out that under it, since the President has the power to prohibit, and also to regulate these transactions, he may extend or withhold, under a license, as much or as little permission as he chooses, to whatever bank he chooses. He may make it as narrow as he wishes to make it, even, let me say to the Senator from Utah, to the point of remitting an annuity to a resident of Brussels today, to the end that the State Department shall ascertain who is the right payee of American funds; and if and when it is established, and the Secretary of State so certifies, then the license is issued.

Mr. President, the control is so complete that, regardless of the extension of this particular proposal into fields not hitherto encompassed within legislation as to countries not necessarily the victims of invasion—quite the contrary—it operates as to every foreign power and as to every central bank.

If the Senator did not know it, I respectfully invite his attention to what section 1 of the bill provides. He will find that we would amend existing law by striking from it the relationship under which an agency was created so that counterclaims could be considered. We make it possible, under this bill, from now on, actually to impugn the integrity of American banking institutions in the eyes of bankers throughout the world.

If that is the position the United States is to take in order to execute a degree of control of foreign policy—and that is the purpose of it—then I say that the justification for the bill absolutely vanishes into thin air, and that we should definitely reject it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I assume from the very able and forceful explanation just made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] that his views and mine, so far as the objectives sought are concerned, are not very far apart. I assume from the last part of his statement that we have a statute now which is broad enough to protect the governments which are now under the iron heel of a despotic Hitler, to protect the de facto governments, to protect the inhabitants of those countries from any injustice or from being robbed by some autocratic dictator who has usurped power and authority.

Mr. DANAHER. That is correct.

Mr. KING. If we assume we have authority by which we can deal with that situation and we can interdict Hitler or any of his satellites from coming into our courts and under color of right or authority, de facto or de jure, set up a claim to that which had been deposited here by a legitimate and de jure government before the advent of Hitler; if we assume we have sufficient statutes to protect our Government, that is one thing; but if Mr. Hitler, or any of his satellites, or any of those who have usurped authority and put legitimate governments under the iron heel, can come into our courts, can assert a right to these funds which can be enforced anywhere under heaven, then I would favor a law which would prevent them from asserting it, even if it necessitated the repeal of existing law.

Hitler is now stealing funds from France. He is sending his emissaries into homes and stealing the people's property. He is taking everything he can get his hands upon that is portable, taking it to Germany and disposing of it to the advantage of his country. If he may do that, or if Mussolini may do that, or the Bolshevik Government may do that, or the Government of Japan may do that, and yet may come into our courts and assert a right, I am in favor of passing a measure which will deny them the right to enter our courts for the purpose of asserting any claim they may make to the legitimate earnings of individuals or property of governments which may temporarily be in the United States.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator for the expression of his views, but let me add to anything and everything he has said, in the first place, that the bill deals with money in deposit accounts in the Federal Reserve System of the United States, and does not at all deal with avails of the spoliation abroad.

Mr. President, there was one point upon which the Senator from Utah could have dwelt, it seems to me, with great force, and I now wish to invite his attention specifically to one phase of my attitude on this matter which I have not yet discussed. Sooner or later—I do not know when but it cannot be too soon to be right and just and moral—there will be a peace. There will be an end to the bloodshed and the loss of millions of lives. There will be some economic readjustment. There will be participation by the United States, and there should be. At that time, when our diplomats sit down at the table, and there are in our possession millions and hundred of millions of dollars, yes, billions of dollars, of the funds of other countries, we enter that international poker game, let me call it for a minute, with a stake in the game. We enter it with, as they say in that particular game, some kitty with which to play. We enter it, in other words, with the funds in our hands, and in control of that much of the situation. It seems to me the very least we can do to protect against the very dire evil, which has been so thoroughly outlined by the Senator from Utah, is to sequester these accounts, to forbid the disposition of these funds under the Presidential license power, and to hold them to abide the event of an economic conference to follow, or to be a part of a peace. That, Mr. President, it seems to me, would enormously implement our diplomacy in any such meeting, to the end that there shall not again be a scuttling of the economic conference, such as happened in 1933, to the end that in the future we may assist in laying the foundation of a worthy and worthwhile economic situation throughout the world. But where will we be if, looking forward to that day, we say, "You cannot take your money out of our banks. You will not get your money out of our banks. You will not be able to come into our court to assert a claim to them. We will recognize the man downtown, whom we acknowledge to be the legitimate representative of your government, and we will turn over millions of dollars to that payee, and there will be no liability in the courts of the United States."

Where will we be if, as a matter of policy, we take a position of that sort? Yet that is precisely what we are doing under this bill.

Mr. President, Marriner Eccles testified further as to yet one previously unmentioned phase of this matter. There are foreign governments which owe our manufacturers large sums of money, who have, through their central banks, sent funds here which are on deposit to pay American manufacturers. Mr. Eccles testified:

> These funds that are here are naturally the funds that are being used to purchase not only war materials but also many essential commodities and other materials in this country. Contracts have been made not only for war materials but, no doubt, for many other necessities, including relief necessities, so if it is found that even though the Treasury does not freeze the funds and there is still the legal question as to who should be recognized as having the right to use the funds, the whole thing may be tied up, and our own people in this country would be unable to receive payment, for an indefinite period possibly, on contracts involving many millions of dollars.

That quotation is found on page 26 of the Senate hearings.

Mr. President, in other words, if we sequester the fund, and under license we permit to be paid out only such sums as necessarily ought to be paid to American creditors, and if we sequester the balance of the fund to abide the event in due course, it seems to me we will have been doing everything that is right and proper for the protection of the claimants. Particularly should we not deny access to our courts to ascertain the justice of the claim, for even there the court will take judicial notice of the political entity recognized and accredited by the Secretary of State, which, of course, is the function of the executive department.

Mr. President, I submit these considerations to the Senate. I feel that we should not leave this matter solely on the basis as outlined by the chairman of the committee, for whom I have great respect as a distinguished lawyer and an able colleague, but I feel there are phases of this particular matter which we ought to consider very carefully before we go to the length of taking this position.

If we can do this now, it is only a short step before we can convert private debts into public debts, before we can undertake to take public debts in our country owing to other countries, and set them off against American claims. That is an unheard-of principle, Mr. President, and yet inevitable if we adopt this line of action.

I submit that this particular matter ought to be handled as the law now provides it shall be handled, as the able chairman of our committee told us the law has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, and as the proponents of the bill appearing before the committee told us it would be handled in the case of war.

Mr. President, this matter came up in June, I understand, at a time when it was said there was an emergency, and here it is October, and I submit whether or not the emergent conditions have been such as to require this action hitherto. It is perfectly obvious on its face that here is a brand new extension of power, with brand new remedies, brand new principles involved in our dealings with foreign countries, and I submit that the bill is neither necessary nor desirable, and I hope it will be rejected.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, to begin with, we should have asserted previously that the State Department, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Federal Reserve Board all not only favor this legislation, but urge its enactment.

The Senator referred to an amendment which we passed to the Trading With the Enemy Act, in which our Government was given the right, under certain circumstances, to refuse to grant a license for the transfer to the nationals of foreign governments of credits or properties which they may have in this country. As I recall, when that matter was under consideration the Senator from Connecticut opposed the legislation. We enacted it for a very simple reason.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator will recall that an amendment was offered to include the words "certificate of indebtedness and certificate of ownership of stock or securities." Does the Senator recall that?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator from Connecticut opposed that amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. That was opposition to the legislation. Why did we enact that legislation? I shall be very brief. It was simply because we wanted to take care of nationals of the countries which were invaded by the Nazis who had deposits in this country. We feared that in some instances they might be compelled by duress to make a request upon the bank in this country to transfer their properties to the invader. In order that we might inquire into the facts and ascertain whether or not duress were involved, or whether the transfer were voluntary, we provided for the license system. That has nothing to do with this situation.

The Senator says that the bill controls the transfer of funds. It does; but after the licenses are granted in the cases involved in this particular bill, payment by the Federal Reserve bank is required. Because the sums are so large the Federal Reserve bank would not pay if there should be any dispute as to who should receive the money. Under like circumstances, a bank in an invaded country, as a result of duress, might make claim upon the funds, and ask for a transfer to some person, which transfer would be against our public policy. So the argument of the Senator is not applicable to the present situation.

There is only one other statement which I wish to correct. The Senator says that the bill does not provide that the accredited representative shall be the only one authorized to receive the funds. If the Senator will read the bill carefully, he will find that it covers every possible point. In the first place, the government must be one which is recognized by us. Secondly, the representative, whether he be a minister or an ambassador, must be accredited from that particular country. The Senator complains because the word "ambassador" is not used. The term "representative" includes ministers, ambassadors, and other representatives sent to this country by a foreign government.

First, the government must be recognized by us. Second, the representative must be accredited from that particular country. Third, the particular individual who is to receive the money must be certified by the Secretary of State as having been certified by the government and by the accredited representative.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Let us see. I am certain the Senator has missed the point. Let me point out to him that on page 2, line 8, of the bill the provision is that we are to deal with the agent whom the representative of the foreign government "has certified to the Secretary of State." The language does not provide that the Secretary of State shall certify anything.

Let us come down to line 12, on page 2. If the Senator wishes to be wholly correct—and I am sure he does—after the word "State" we should insert "and so certified by him to the Federal Reserve bank." The language would then read:

(3) The authority of such person to act with respect to such property is accepted and recognized by the Secretary of State and so certified by him to the Federal Reserve bank.

As it stands, it does not say anything about the Secretary of State certifying to the Federal Reserve bank, so after "State", we should insert "and so certified by him to the Federal Reserve bank." Does the Senator oppose that amendment?

Mr. WAGNER. I have no objection to that particular amendment. That is very clear.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator yield while I offer it?

Mr. WAGNER. The certification is of the person who is to receive the money. When he goes to the Federal Reserve bank and asks for the funds on behalf of his government, of course the Federal Reserve bank will ascertain whether, as the result of a certificate from the Secretary of State, he is the accredited person. That is very plain. I think the Senator is now playing with words.

The point I wish to make is that this enumeration is exactly what the law of the land provides. All we want to do by this legislation is to avoid the same injustice that we intended to avoid when we provided for the license system. We wanted to be sure that the accredited person would receive the funds, and that they would not be tied up or diverted contrary to the public policy of our country. If we should pursue any other policy, it might involve a delay of 6 months, or a year, as the Senator from Utah said. It may be that one of the countries might want to utilize some of the funds. A country which we recognize may have been invaded. Nevertheless, we still recognize the government; and it may be very necessary for the public welfare of that country that some of the money be utilized. Anyway it belongs to that country or its nationals; and so long as we pay it in accordance with the law of the land, nobody can have any objection. All we are doing is avoiding a delay of 6 months or a year, because in the end we must pay it. The Senator knows what the law of the land is. In the end the person who would receive the money would be the person certified by the Secretary of State. That is the law of the land, and it has been so held by the courts time and time again.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. If we were saying that the Secretary of State shall certify the person who is to receive the money, whereupon the Federal Reserve bank shall pay the money over to such person so certified, we should have a situation which would be covered by the Senator's closing argument. As the Senator puts it, some country might need its money. It might need its money, but it could not obtain it under the terms of the bill. The bill does not provide for compulsory payment.

Mr. WAGNER. I think it clearly does.

Mr. DANAHER. Show me where.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not wish to be technical about matters of this kind. What are the words which the Senator wishes to insert?

Mr. DANAHER. On page 2, line 12, after the word "State", insert "and so certified by the Secretary of State to the Federal Reserve bank." I send that amendment to the desk in order that it may be stated.

Mr. WAGNER. Let us see how it would read:

(3) The authority of such person to act with respect to such property is accepted and recognized by the Secretary of State——

Mr. DANAHER. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. What is next?

Mr. DANAHER. I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 12, after the word "State", it is proposed to insert "and so certified by the Secretary of State to the Federal Reserve bank."

Mr. WAGNER. What does the Senator propose to do with the words "the payment, transfer, delivery," and so forth?

Mr. DANAHER. Those are the subjects of the verb in line 15—"shall be conclusively presumed to be lawful," and so forth. In other words, clause (3) should read:

(3) The authority of such person to act with respect to such property is accepted and recognized by the Secretary of State, and so certified by the Secretary of State to the Federal Reserve bank—

Mr. WAGNER. I wish to look at the Senator's amendment. He does not make it very clear to me. Does the Senator intend to omit any words?

Mr. DANAHER. No.

Mr. WAGNER. I should like to see how the language would read:

(3) The authority of such person to act with respect to such property is accepted and recognized by the Secretary of State, and so certified by the Secretary of State to the Federal Reserve bank—

Mr. DANAHER. Then follows a comma.

Mr. WAGNER. Then follows a comma.

Mr. DANAHER. And the language continues——

Mr. WAGNER. The language continues:

the payment, transfer, delivery, or other disposal of such property—

And so forth.

Mr. WAGNER. I see no objection to that.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator. I offer the amendment and ask that it be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill as originally introduced was to protect the Federal Reserve banks in the event of a controversy between factions or groups within a discordant nation. The plan was to provide that the official determination by the Secretary of State shall be the authority upon which the Federal Reserve bank may rely in making payment. If two agents should come to the Federal Reserve bank, each demanding payment of a deposit made by the central bank of a foreign country, and each claiming to be the duly authorized representative, the country being in discord because of factions and divisions, the Secretary of State, as the head of the agency having more information and better access to foreign records, foreign policies, and foreign facts than any other agency, would make a finding as to who represents the central bank or the central government. Then the Federal Reserve bank would be protected in making payment.

That being accepted, as I accept the measure as prepared, it occurred to me that it was even more essential that the private, insured banks of the United States should have the same protection. In other words, if, for instance, a large deposit has been made by a foreign government in the First National Bank of Casper two agents may appear demanding of the First National Bank of Casper the money. If they should go to the Federal Reserve bank under this proposed act the bank would be protected. If the bill is correct in its fundamental purpose of making the Secretary of State the official to determine who is the accredited representative for payment by the Federal Reserve bank, the same protection should be afforded to a privately owned bank in the United States. The privately owned bank is less able to get the information, less able to protect itself than is the Federal Reserve bank.

So I am offering an amendment which will afford such protection to the private banks as well as the Federal Reserve banks.

This exception is made: The original measure exempts the Federal Reserve banks from suit; the amendment does not exempt State banks from suit; but it does make such demands Federal questions so that the claimants may go into a Federal court and have it determined, and it gives to the privately owned bank the protection of the certificate of the State Department.

Therefore, I offer the amendment, which, I may say, in this form has been drawn by the general counsel of the Federal Reserve System, is acceptable to them, and, I understand, to the senior Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] in the nature of substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of the amendment of Mr. BROWN, it is proposed to insert the following:

That subsection (e) of section 14 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end of the first sentence thereof the following: ", or for foreign banks or bankers, or for foreign States as defined in section 25 (b) of this act."

SEC. 2. Section 25 (b) of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"Whenever (1) any Federal Reserve bank has received any property from or for the account of a foreign state which is recognized by the Government of the United States, or from or for the account of a central bank of any such state, and holds such property in the name of such foreign state or such central bank; (2) a representative of such foreign state who is recognized by the Secretary of State as being the accredited representative of such foreign state to the Government of the United States has certified to the Secretary of State the name of a person as having authority to receive, control, or dispose of such property; and (3) the authority of such person to act with respect to such property is accepted and recognized by the Secretary of State, the payment, transfer, delivery, or other disposal of such property by such Federal Reserve bank to or upon the order of such person shall be conclusively presumed to be lawful and shall constitute a complete discharge and release of any liability of the Federal Reserve bank for or with respect to such property. No Federal Reserve bank shall be subject to any suit or other proceeding in any court, in its own name or in the name of any of its officers, directors, agents, or employees, as a consequence of any action taken by such bank, or with respect to any property disposed of, in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph. No court shall have jurisdiction to restrain or enjoin a Federal Reserve bank from making any payment, transfer, delivery, or other disposal of property in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph.

"Whenever (1) any insured bank has received any property from or for the account of a foreign state which is recognized by the Government of the United States, or from or for the account of any national of any such state, and holds such property in the name of such foreign state or such national; (2) a representative of such foreign state who is recognized by the Secretary of State as being the accredited representative of such foreign state to the Government of the United States has certified to the Secretary of State the name of a person as having authority to receive, control, or dispose of such property; and (3) the authority of such person to act with respect to such property is accepted and recognized by the Secretary of State, the payment, transfer, delivery, or other disposal of such property by such bank to or upon the order of such person shall be conclusively presumed to be lawful and shall constitute a complete discharge and release of any liability of such bank for or with respect to such property. Any suit or other legal proceeding against any insured bank or any officer, director or employee thereof, arising out of the receipt, possession, or disposition of any such property shall be deemed to arise under the laws of the United States and the district courts of the United States shall have exclusive jurisdiction thereof, regardless of the amount involved; and any such bank or any officer, director, or employee thereof which is a defendant in any such suit may, at any time before trial thereof, remove such suit from a State court into the district court of the United States for the proper district by following the procedure for the removal of causes otherwise provided by law.

"Nothing in this section shall be deemed to repeal or to modify in any manner any of the provisions of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 (ch. 6, 48 Stat. 337), as amended, the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 (ch. 674, 48 Stat. 1178), as amended, or subdivision (b) of section 5 of the act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat. 411), as amended, or any actions, regulations, rules, orders, or proclamations taken, promulgated, made, or issued pursuant to any of such statutes. In any case in which a license to act with respect to any property referred to in this section is required under any of said statutes, regulations, rules, orders, or proclamations, notification to the Secretary of State by the proper Government officer or agency of the issuance of an appropriate license or that appropriate licenses will be issued on application shall be a prerequisite to any action by the Secretary of State pursuant to this section, and the action of the Secretary of State shall relate only to such property as is included in such notification. Each such notification shall include the terms and conditions of such license or licenses and a description of the property to which they relate.

"For the purposes of this section, (1) the term 'property' includes gold, silver, currency, credits, deposits, securities, choses in action, and any other form of property, the proceeds thereof, and any right, title, or interest therein; (2) the term 'foreign state' includes any foreign government or any department, district, province, county, possession, or other similar governmental organization or subdivision of a foreign government, and any agency or instrumentality of any such foreign government or of any such organization or subdivision; (3) the term 'central bank' includes any foreign bank or banker authorized to perform any one or more of the functions of a central bank; (4) the term 'person' includes any individual, or any corporation, partnership, association, or other similar organization; (5) the term 'national' includes any person who is a citizen or subject of a foreign state or a resident of the territory of a foreign state and any corporation, partnership, association, or other similar organization organized under the laws of, or having its principal place of business in the territory of, a foreign state; and (6) the term 'insured bank' shall have the meaning given to it in section 12B of this act."

Mr. WAGNER. I think there ought to be, if it is not now in the proposal of the Senator from Colorado, the amendment which was proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER]. The pending amendment is a substitute for the Brown amendment we have been considering, and the Senator from Connecticut had better see whether his amendment is in the amendment now proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I wish to know, first, if we are now considering the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN]?

Mr. WAGNER. The pending amendment is in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Michigan. It strikes out everything after the enacting clause and incorporates the proposal of the Senator from Colorado. The Senator from Colorado incorporates the provisions which were contained in the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan, but it is a complete restatement of the bill.

Mr. DANAHER. Where do the provisions of the amendment of the Senator from Colorado appear in the proposed substitute?

Mr. WAGNER. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado is a complete substitute. Has the Senator the amendment prepared?

Mr. DANAHER. I am writing it now.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, while the Senator from Connecticut is preparing his amendment, I desire to amplify very briefly the observations I made a moment ago.

I think that any legislation we enact dealing with deposits or credits in the United States, owned by foreign nations or by groups or organizations or individuals in foreign nations——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I thought the Senator from Colorado had the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. No.

Mr. KING. I assumed that the Senator from Connecticut had the floor and was preparing an amendment. While he was preparing it, I took the liberty of proceeding for a few moments, and, if I am recognized by the Chair, I shall continue. If not, I shall suspend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Utah while the Senator from Connecticut is endeavoring to perfect his amendment.

Mr. KING. In other words, I have a conditional recognition and my observations will be conditional with respect to approving this bill.

I was about to observe, Mr. President, that, in view of confused conditions throughout the world, and the rape of so many democratic governments by Hitler and his collaborators, when we are dealing with credits and funds which such governments or their nationals have in the United States, we ought to adopt every possible means for the protection of those governments and their subdivisions and their nationals against the greed and the ruthless exactions and demands of the governments that have conquered and are conquering them.

I have in mind that a short time ago Austria was an independent government. The Nazis took over the Austrian Government, took possession of its chief of state, and imprisoned him. Whether he has been killed up to this moment we do not know; but, undoubtedly, the Nazi government took possession, according to the information we have, of Austria's bank, of her credits, the property of the state, and made such disposition of it as tyrants usually make of the properties and individual liberties of those whom they have conquered.

Denmark was conquered; Norway was conquered. As I stated a few moments ago, the King of Norway was driven from his throne and his family driven from their country; the Government was destroyed and turned over to a mere puppet, who voices only the words of Mr. Hitler.

France is not an independent government now; the Vichy government is merely a tool in the hands of Hitler. We hear from time to time, statements to the effect that more of France will be incorporated within the Reich, and, indeed, before the mad ambitions of Hitler have been fully satiated, he may have the entire territory of France, the Vichy government will be wiped out, and whatever funds France had—and she had considerable money in the United States—will of course be demanded by Mr. Hitler and he will demand the funds of private persons of French nationality who have funds in the United States.

I have had instances brought to my attention of persons who have relatives residing in Germany and who have properties here in their own name or in the names of their relatives being coerced to make disposition of such properties and to turn over the funds received therefrom to Mr. Hitler.

So France having funds here, and other nations and other countries which have been conquered having funds here, their political subdivisions having funds here, their nationals having funds here, I feel that we should use every possible means to protect those funds, so that even if Hitler shall dominate and his government shall finally become the de jure government or the de facto government, his demand for those funds shall not be respected, the moral and equitable demands of the owners of the property shall have precedence, and our courts may be invoked, if necessary, for their protection against the demands of Mr. Hitler or those governments which are destroying democracies and superimposing their will upon formerly independent peoples.

If this bill fully protects against those robberies and thieveries and thuggeries of the Nazi government, and those collaborating with it, I shall be satisfied; otherwise I shall feel disposed to vote against it. But, knowing the care with which the able Senator from New York addresses himself to these questions, I am inclined to accept his view and to believe that this bill affords ample protection for those who are the victims of the aggression of tyrannous governments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. DANAHER. I offer to the pending amendment the amendment which I previously offered and which was then adopted.

The amendment is in the first paragraph of section 2, after the words "accepted and recognized by the Secretary of State", to insert a comma and "and so certified by the Secretary of State to the Federal Reserve bank."

Mr. ADAMS. I accept the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], as modified, in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment, as modified, to the amendment, was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act relating to foreign accounts in Federal Reserve banks and insured banks."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4174 will be indefinitely postponed.

NATIONAL DEFENSE HOUSING—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CONNALLY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10412) to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, and 13.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 14, 15, 16, and 17, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "and that such housing would not be provided by private capital when needed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

TOM CONNALLY,
THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
FRITZ G. LANHAM,
EUGENE B. CROWE,
PEHR G. HOLMES,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

Mr. WAGNER. Is the Senator going to speak on the report?

Mr. CONNALLY. Not if it can be agreed to without discussion.

Mr. WAGNER. I should like to ask a question about the report.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senate broadened the powers of the administrator to enable him to use any of several agencies for the purpose of constructing the housing under the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Those provisions were retained.

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PROGRAM FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC, UNDERGROUND, BOMB-PROOF SHELTERS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, there is on the table Senate Resolution 316. The resolution calls for no appropriation. Being a Senate resolution, it could not do so. I ask that the resolution be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read Senate Resolution 316, submitted by Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma on September 19, 1940, as follows:

Whereas the United States is taking steps to increase and strengthen our several miltary defense units; and

Whereas in the prosecution of this program it is deemed advisable to give major consideration to defenses against airplanes and airplane warfare; and

Whereas the European war discloses that the major part of the military activities are conducted in the air and take the form of airplane attacks against cities, railways, water supplies, and such military establishments as airplane factories and factories engaged in the production of ammunition and military supplies; and

Whereas in the present attack upon England planes of a bomber type are used to transport bombs to be released over vital points; and

Whereas in this kind of warfare it is necessary to protect the civilian population against bomb attacks by the construction of bomb retreats consisting of underground rooms and spaces; and

Whereas in order to perfect our military-defense program it is deemed advisable to give consideration to the construction of rooms and spaces underground, so that in case of an air attack the civilian population may find places of comparative safety against such attacks: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the United States Senate that our military authorities and those in charge of developing our defense program should give consideration to the location and construction of adequate public retreats and shelters to accommodate the people; be it further

Resolved, That our military authorities and those in charge of our military defense program be requested to consult and confer with the constituted legal authorities of the States and cities located along the border of the United States to the end that they may be advised and induced to take proper steps in cooperation with the Government in the establishment of such retreats and shelters; be it further

Resolved, That in the event legislation and funds are found to be necessary in carrying out this program, the said War Department and those in charge of our defense program be and are hereby requested to prepare and submit to the Congress appropriate recommendations on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, after introducing the resolution I sent messages to a number of Governors of States and mayors of cities along the seaboard and along the border of the United States seeking to secure information as to whether or not any provision has been made anywhere for building such shelters. I am not anticipating that the United States is to be attacked, that New York is to be attacked, or that Washington is to be attacked; but since we are spending a vast sum of money in building up a defense program, it occurs to me that the question at least of building shelters for people in cities where they may be attacked is worthy of consideration. The resolution only asks that the War Department and the National Defense Council take this matter under consideration.

At this point I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a number of very brief telegrams and letters received from mayors and from Governors. With the single exception of New York State and New York City, I think no State and no city has taken any steps whatever along this line, or even investigated the matter. The State of Maryland has and is doing something along the line of making surveys for airplane raid shelters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegrams and letters are as follows:

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR,
CITY OF RICHMOND, VA.,
September 26, 1940.

Senator ELMER THOMAS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: In reply to your telegram addressed to Governor Price, of Virginia, concerning the construction of air-raid shelters, I will say that no steps have been taken in this city for such shelters, but we wish to keep abreast of the necessities of the occasion and of what other American cities are doing.

I trust that this answers your inquiry.

Respectfully yours,

GORDON B. AMBLER, Mayor.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., September 20, 1940.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS:

Jacksonville has taken no action relative to providing air-raid shelters for public. If Army or Navy authorities request, we shall, of course, cooperate in every possible manner.

GEORGE C. BLUME, Mayor.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., September 23, 1940.

ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senator from Oklahoma:

In Governors' absence, I am replying to your wire 19th. Nothing being done in this State in regard to construction of air-raid shelters.

ROLAND MUSHAT,
Secretary to the Governor.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., September 20, 1940.

United States Senator ELMER THOMAS:

All matters in connection with military defense are being handled in cooperation with Federal military authorities.

ROBERT S. MAESTRI, Mayor.

SANTA FE, N. MEX., September 20, 1940.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senator:

No provisions have been made for any air-raid shelters New Mexico.

JOHN E. MILES, Governor.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, September 20, 1940.

ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senator from Oklahoma:

In absence of Mayor Harold H. Burton acknowledge receipt your telegram September 20 and in reply advise that no specific steps have been taken in Cleveland thus far for construction of air-raid shelters.

FRANK E. BUBNA,
Executive Assistant in Charge of Federal Relations.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., September 20, 1940.

ELMER THOMAS:

No steps looking toward the construction of air-raid shelters for the public have been taken in Phoenix, nor are such contemplated at the present time.

R. T. JONES,
Governor of Arizona.

ATLANTA, GA., September 20, 1940.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

There has been no development on defense matters mentioned in wire. However, appreciate your suggestion and think it well that you pass it on to the President and the Defense Council.

E. D. RIVERS, Governor.

RALEIGH, N. C., September 20, 1940.

Senator ELMER THOMAS:

We have no air-raid shelters for the public in North Carolina, and no steps are being taken to construct any shelters anywhere in this State.

CLYDE R. HOEY, Governor.

COLUMBIA, S. C., September 20, 1940.

Senator ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senate:

Your telegram has been received. There are no air-raid shelters in South Carolina. It is my opinion that the first constructed should be in Charleston and Florence. However, the Army knows better than I do. I concur in the administration developing these military-defense units as soon as possible.

BURNET R. MAYBANK,
Governor of South Carolina.

JACKSON, MISS., September 20, 1940.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

No steps have been taken to provide air-raid shelters in the State. This matter is being turned over to Maj. Gen. Tom Grayson for consideration.

STATE OF MAINE,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Augusta, September 20, 1940.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: Replying to your wire dated the 20th, I am not aware of any plans being made in this State at the present time relative to the provision of air-raid shelters for use of the public.

Very truly yours,

LEWIS O. BARROWS, Governor.

MARYLAND COUNCIL OF DEFENSE AND RESOURCES,
Baltimore, Md., September 21, 1940.

Mr. ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senator, Oklahoma, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your telegram to the Governor of Maryland has been referred to me for answer.

This matter had been brought to the attention of the Maryland council some time ago and was referred to our committee on housing works and transportation, which intends to develop a plan for cities of sizeable population so that construction should be accomplished with a minimum of delay if needed.

Very sincerely,

ISAAC C. GEORGE,
Executive Director.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Tallahassee, September 21, 1940.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: Your telegram of September 20 received in regard to developing and strengthening our military defense units. So far as I know nothing has been done toward providing air-raid shelters for the public in Florida.

The State of Florida is unable financially to take care of a building program of this nature at this time, so it would seem that it will have to be done by the local communities.

I am today writing our Representatives in Congress requesting information as to what the Federal Government intends doing in regard to this situation.

Very truly yours,

FRED P. CONE, Governor.

STATE OF WISCONSIN,
EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Madison, September 20, 1940.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: In reply to your telegram, you are advised that as yet no steps have been taken toward the construction of air-raid shelters in Wisconsin.

Your telegram will be brought to the attention of the defense committee.

Yours very truly,

MAURICE P. COAKLEY,
Secretary to the Governor.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND & PROVIDENCE PLANTATIONS,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Providence, September 23, 1940.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: In reply to your wire of the 20th, I wish to advise you that the construction of shelters is not contemplated here at the present time.

With best wishes, I am,

Very sincerely,

WILLIAM H. VANDERBILT,

SEATTLE, WASH., September 24, 1940.

ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senator, Oklahoma,
Washington, D. C.:

No steps being taken to provide air-raid shelters in this city.

MAYOR ARTHUR B. LANGLIE.

CITY OF BUFFALO,
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR,
September 24, 1940.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: No steps have been taken in Buffalo for the construction of air-raid shelters.

Mayor Holling, however, will be very glad to receive any ideas you may have on this subject.

Very truly yours,

HARRY S. MULLANY,
Secretary to the Mayor.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,
GOVERNOR'S OFFICE,
Richmond, September 24, 1940.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: Your recent telegram concerning the subject of air-raid shelters has been received.

Our State planning board has made some preliminary surveys so far as the State is concerned, and I am forwarding your telegram to the mayor of the city for further attention.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES H. PRICE, Governor.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT,
Austin, Tex., September 30, 1940.
Dictated September 28.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senator, Oklahoma,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: Only yesterday I returned to my desk here in Austin from Washington. I find your telegram of September 20 addressed to Governor O'Daniel, together with a copy of the reply thereto by the Governor's secretary, Mr. Lawson.

I have no knowledge of any steps being taken in this city toward the consideration of air-raid shelters for the public, nor do I know of any contemplated action being taken along that line at the moment.

If any definite action is being taken by any other cities with respect to this matter I shall be very glad to know of it, although the construction of such shelters would not, in all probability, come under the supervision of my department.

Yours very truly,

J. WATT PAGE,
Brigadier General, The Adjutant General of Texas.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Governor of the State of New York states that the matter is having some consideration. I ask that the message from the Governor of New York be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the telegram will be read.

The legislative clerk read the telegram, as follows:

ALBANY, N. Y.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Referring your telegram of 19th beg to advise you that neither the State administration nor the State council for national defense has taken any steps to provide air-raid shelters. We are devoting ourselves among many other things to increasing industrial production throughout the State, strengthening our military and police protection, and in giving vocational training to thousands of additional workers.

HERBERT H. LEHMAN,
Governor of New York.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, following the message from the Governor of New York, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD a letter received from the mayor of New York City. I do not ask that the letter be read but request that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

CITY OF NEW YORK,
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR,
September 26, 1940.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I was glad to get your telegram. We have spent about a year in a survey and study of proper air-raid shelters. We have not commenced constructing shelters, although we have given that subject study. We believe we must await Federal action for shelter construction. I say I was glad to get your telegram because you will recall that I was called to task and severely criticized by my good friend VANDENBERG for taking early precaution.

I can send you our preliminary report, if you will treat it confidentially. I think it will be well for you to see it in order to glean an idea of how much preliminary work must be done. I would greatly appreciate it if you would reply on the floor of the Senate to brother VANDENBERG'S remark.

Let me know if you care to look over the preliminary report.

Sincerely,

F. LAGUARDIA, Mayor.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Then I submit for the RECORD a number of news items which appeared in the current press. I ask that the portions marked be printed at this point in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matters referred to are as follows:

AIR RAID SHELTER SURVEY IN MARYLAND

BALTIMORE, September 19.—Maryland's Defense Resources Council yesterday announced the State would be surveyed immediately for air raid shelters.

"There is not even a subway available and probably very few subterranean chambers susceptible of use," explained C. W. Galloway, a committee chairman of the council.

Mr. Galloway said his committee would "immediately undertake to lay the groundwork of a comprehensive plan" for air-raid shelters in the State's largest cities because of "the importance of planning for every eventuality."

The survey will determine "whether any potential shelters already exist" and be "supplemented by plans for construction wherever needed."

SHELTERS ARE POOR BUT LONDON'S COCKNEYS MAKE BEST OF THEM—REPORTER FINDS THEM EVIL SMELLING AND DIRTY, BUT REFUGEE SAYS: "WHO CARES—IT'S LIFE WE ARE SEEKING TO KEEP"

In cold, clammy, dingy hovels thousands of London's East Enders huddle on single blankets on bumpy paving bricks and try to keep out of the drafty gusts until daylight chases away the German air invaders.

People are admitted only after 5 p. m. for the night, but during the day admittance is allowed for the duration of raids. There is a scurry to be the first out, just as there is to be in line when the raids are coming.

MANY HAVE "SHELTER THROATS"

"Shelter throats" were prevalent. Coughing was almost continuous while I was there.

Expectoration was frequent, and it seemed a perfect breeding place for disease.

A litter of dirt had been swept out of the way into nooks and corners to accommodate every description of deck chairs, stools, and seats.

DEEP SHELTERS URGED FOR LONDON'S MORALE—LLOYD GEORGE SEES MENTAL PERIL IN PERSISTENT BOMBING

(By David Lloyd George)

The prize gained from these bombardments from the air is not so much in the actual casualties obtained as in the nervous strain created by the noises and constant apprehension from which a bombarded city is never free. This makes unbroken sleep almost impossible in bombed areas, and the human system is worn out if the experience is long continued without periods of relaxation.

Troops were never kept in the line more than a few days' time. They were then withdrawn to areas where they enjoyed comparative repose. That cannot be done in a vast city with a population of 7,000,000. There ought therefore to be measures taken by the Government to eliminate this incessant sense of fear, fright, and strain in the hearts of people who are now subjected to these harrowing experiences.

As I pointed out in my last article, this can be done by providing deep shelters within reach of everyone—well underground where noise will not descend or interrupt sleep. Once everyone knows that safety is at hand the dread and horror will disappear altogether and these raids will cease to undermine the morale of the nation.

WOULD END REIGN OF TERROR

The Government ought to see, before winter is upon us—and it is not far off—that every man, woman, and child will have a safe refuge at hand at which they know they will be secure from these murderous raids. As soon as that is accomplished the reign of terror will be at an end. In these impenetrable fortresses the occupants can afford to laugh at the efforts of their baffled assailants.

I am glad to know that the war Cabinet at last has been roused to an understanding of the importance of this too long neglected duty. It is an undertaking which, if it is to achieve its purpose, must not merely be half done. Ample provision must be made for the security, comfort, and health of the whole population, and not merely a portion of it, however considerable that part may be. They must be certain that even if the Germans intensify fivefold their bombardment, and turned on the whole of their bombing resources, our towns and inhabitants would be reposing in safe emplacements dug deep in the soils their sons were so valiantly defending in the skies above.

ARMY SENDS DEFENSE PLANTS PLANS FOR AIR-RAID PROTECTION

Air raid precaution suggestions—four pages of them—went out from the War Department today to firms expanding their plants for defense orders.

The suggestions dealt with the proper location of factories, their protection and concealment against bombing attacks, and included an offer of plans for air-raid shelters.

At the same time, the Department disclosed that it was contemplating proposals for underground airplane hangars and storage dumps for ammunition and vital supplies, such as aviation gasoline.

Taking account of the wholesale destruction of industry in Spain, Poland, Finland, Holland, and now England the Department sent American manufacturers a memorandum outlining minimum passive-defense protection.

Complete protection against direct bomb hits was not judged to be economically or militarily justifiable at this time, but measures for reasonable protection were outlined.

Manufacturers building plants with the aid of Government orders, loans, or grants will not be required to make protective installations, but Secretary Stimson told his press conference yesterday, "We are making every effort beforehand by warning them of what the dangers may be."

Assistant Secretary Patterson added that "no extensive changes in existing plants are contemplated," since the Department does not wish to impede important production.

Introducing a grim new note into American industrial planning, the Army memorandum recommended that—

1. Plants be located to take advantage of protective terrain.
2. Buildings be dispersed.
3. Black-out provisions be made.
4. Protection be provided against bomb splinters, fire, and damage to power, telephone, light, and gas lines, and
5. That buildings be concealed as much as possible.

Secretary Stimson said those precautions, as a result of the threat of modern long-range bombing, had been added to previous strategic principles dictating the location of munitions plants in the interior, behind mountain ranges.

Meanwhile the United States Housing Authority disclosed that air-raid shelters, with which it is experimenting, may be added for the convenience of tenants in future low-rent housing projects.

Experts are now studying two types, somewhat on the idea of "pill boxes." One is oblong with a parabolic cross-section tapering toward the top. The other is dome-shaped and should give more protection from gunfire and flying fragments, the experts say, adding that "no 'pill box' yet devised provides much protection from a direct bomb hit."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, inasmuch as the resolution is simply a Senate resolution, and only asks for information, I ask that a vote be taken at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will not urge action on the resolution at this time. It is a matter which probably ought to go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It asks only for information.

Mr. BARKLEY. The resolution declares it to be the sense of the Senate that these air retreats ought to be provided; and it is a matter which it seems to me ought to be given the consideration of the committee. I am willing to let the matter lie over on the table for the day.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that it has been on the table now for almost a month.

Mr. BARKLEY. This is the first time I have had my attention called to it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have no objection to its going over until tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let it go over until tomorrow, and let me look into it, if the Senator please.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will go over until tomorrow.

INVESTIGATION OF CONDITIONS IN COMMERCE AFFECTING NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 309. I do not think it will call for any debate. Its consideration was objected to by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] the other day when bills on the calendar were being considered by unanimous consent. I have spoken to the Senator from Vermont about the resolution. As proposed to be amended, it does not call for the expenditure of any money by the Government in any way, shape, or form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read Senate Resolution 309, submitted by Mr. Wheeler on September 9, 1940, as follows:

Whereas authentic reports indicate that German and other foreign corporations enjoy a measure of control over some of our most important defense industries; and

Whereas an American corporation which supplies glass for instruments and weapons for the Army and Navy has been shown to have close relations with a German concern involving disclosure of secret processes; and

Whereas one of the most important metals, invaluable in the manufacture of airplanes, is controlled by a corporation half of whose stock is reliably reported to be owned by the German Chemical Trust; and

Whereas information has come to hand that some large concerns important to national defense have deferred national interests to monetary considerations by giving preference to foreign munitions orders; and

Whereas national defense, with which the American people are vitally concerned, demands the elimination of any such abuses and foreign controls which are contrary to our national interests: and

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make, and to report to the Senate the results of a thorough and complete investigation of acts, practices, methods, and omissions to act, by persons, partnerships, associations, corporations, other entities, and foreign governments, in interstate or foreign commerce, and of conditions of interstate or foreign commerce, which may or do delay, interfere with, or obstruct the national defense, including, among other things:

(1) Part or entire ownership by stock or otherwise of influence in, control of, and power over, domestic business and production related to national defense, by any foreign person, partnership, association, corporation, foreign government, or agents or instrumentalities thereof, or other entity.

(2) Pooling arrangements or other contracts or agreements between any one or more of the foregoing, and any American person, partnership, association, corporation, or other entity, for interchange of business or trade secrets or other information, for interchange of patents or processes or patent rights, for allocation of sales or places of doing business or production, for restriction of production, or for fixing of prices.

(3) Sale, directly or indirectly, in or for foreign commerce, of materials or products, whether raw, semifinished or finished, used or usable in war industries or war activities or preparations by any foreign person, partnership, association, corporation, or other entity.

(4) Financial arrangements and demands therefor with respect to profits, taxes, or other matters, affecting national defense.

(5) Restraints of trade by foreign or domestic persons, partnerships, associations, corporations, or other entities, whether through monopolies or otherwise, affecting national defense.

The Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to obtain such facts as other Government agencies may have, and to secure the assistance of other Government agencies in the investigation hereby authorized.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places, either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-sixth and subsequent Congresses, to employ such experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production and impounding of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator the purpose of the resolution.

Mr. WHEELER. I have the floor. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I have tried to find out enough about the purpose of the resolution to indicate the necessity for immediate action, if there be such. The result of my inquiries is that there may be a useful purpose for such a committee at a time when we are not engaged in a fight for political success on one side of the aisle or the other, and at a time and under circumstances when such an investigation could be conducted with calmness and fairness, and with nothing in view but the public interest. By that I do not mean that the Senator from Montana has any other interest in view. My own opinion is, however, that this is a bad time to adopt this resolution, and, that being so, I feel bound to object to its consideration at this time.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator from Vermont that I have not any desire at all to hold hearings under the resolution, or anything of that kind, until we come back here after the 1st of January. I am only asking for the adoption of the resolution in order to cooperate with the Department of Justice, and not with the idea of taking it up during this period, when political discussions are on, in any way, shape, or form. The adoption of the resolution is desired by those who are interested in defense, for the purpose of helping the defense measures.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have not the slightest doubt of the good faith of the Senator from Montana. It is just a question of difference between him and me about the expediency of taking up the resolution. If he should move to proceed to its consideration, probably he would overwhelm us.

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the Senator that I shall have to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution if the Senator objects to its consideration.

Mr. AUSTIN. Holding the views that I do, I cannot take any other position on this floor than to object to the immediate consideration of the resolution. I do not want to reflect on the Department of Justice or any other department of the Government; but the Department of Justice has a certain objective and a certain duty to perform and we have another one. I do not think we ought to be led off from our own diagnosis of the case. We ought to treat the case according to our own diagnosis.

I realize what the Department of Justice is trying to do, and I am not trying to interfere with that or to make it more difficult in any way at all. On the other hand, I do not want to see Congress at this particular juncture undertake to furnish the Department of Justice with material to club industrial enterprises over the head, at a time when we want harmony in the country and want complete cooperation in building up the national defense.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator from Vermont thinks for one moment that this resolution is to be used for the purpose of clubbing industry over the head, he is entirely mistaken. Some industries find themselves in a very peculiar position with reference to contracts which have been entered into with some German concerns and with other concerns throughout the country. The matter ought to be studied with a view to passing legislation so that we shall not again find ourselves in the position in which we now are. I am told on very good authority that Great Britain found herself in the same position, and that she passed some laws to obviate their recurrence in time of war or in time of an emergency such as exists today.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a statement?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the force of what the Senator from Vermont says. Nobody desires to use any resolution or any law or any act of Congress to club business over the head. Being a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I am familiar with the facts connected with this resolution and the statements which were made before the committee resulting in its report.

I can state to the Senator from Vermont that there is no politics in the resolution. It is not a political matter at all, except in the sense that everything the Government does is broadly political, because it has to do with the Government.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question at that point?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does it not occur to the Senator from Kentucky that without any intention on the part of the Senate in passing the resolution, nevertheless politics might get into this matter?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think the kind of politics the Senator has in his mind would get into it. It is not contemplated that there shall be any hearings under the resolution at present. Certain facts connected with certain contracts heretofore entered into, before anybody got into any war, may very seriously handicap our own industries in the matter of national defense. The facts may be developed in a quiet way. There will probably be no publicity about the matter. As the Senator from Montana says, in January, when the facts have been gathered through the activities of the committee—it has no money; it cannot hold hearings or summon witnesses without any funds—it is hoped that the committee, or any subcommittee that might be appointed, cooperating with the Department of Justice and other Departments, might gather facts upon which, if necessary, later on there might be legislation, or, if necessary, hearings; but it is not at all certain that it ever would be necessary to hold any public hearings on the subject. There is, however, a situation of such a nature that the matter ought to be gone into, and we ought to be in a position, when the time comes, if it does come, when legislation is needed, to legislate in view of the facts developed.

The resolution has not remotely any political connotation; and I do not think there is a remote chance that any partisan politics will be injected into it. Even if anyone attempted that, it would be difficult to prophesy to whose advantage it would work.

Mr. WHEELER. There will not be any politics after January anyway. Politics will be over at that time, will be adjourned, we hope, for 4 years.

Mr. AUSTIN. All the learned Senators say supports my opinion that we would do well to put this off until after the first of January.

Mr. WHEELER. What we want to do is to gather the information between now and January.

Mr. AUSTIN. In that view of the matter, I feel bound to object to proceeding.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2286, Senate Resolution 309.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Senate may proceed to take a vote on that motion, but I wish to ask unanimous consent to take up another matter about which I do not think there will be any controversy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The parliamentary situation is that Senate Resolution 309 is before the Senate. The Senator from Montana has the floor, and he temporarily yields to the Senator from Georgia, who desires to present a matter.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Chair.

CHICKAMAUGA AND CHATTANOOGA NATIONAL MILITARY PARK

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I was about to ask unanimous consent that, without displacing the pending matter of business, the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8512, Calendar No. 2328, in order that the Senate may have an opportunity to agree to an amendment recommended by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8512) to provide for the acquisition of additional lands for the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys has amended the bill by providing that the total amount which may be authorized for the acquisition of the additional lands desired in this military park adjacent to Fort Oglethorpe shall not exceed $125,000. That is the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The amendment was, on page 2, line 9, after the word "appropriated", to insert "a sum not to exceed $125,000", and in line 10, after the word "act", to strike out "such sums as the Congress may from time to time determine", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to acquire on behalf of the United States, by purchase when purchasable at prices deemed by him reasonable, or by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, the following tracts of land or any part thereof for addition to Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park: All of lots of land Nos. 86, 87, 88, 95, 123, 165, in the ninth district and fourth section, Catoosa County, Ga., and such parts of lots of land 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 124, 125, 128, 129, 160, 161, 164, 196, and 197, in said district and section as lie west of Chickamauga Creek. When title to any such lands shall have vested in the United States they shall be added to and become a part of said park and shall be subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated a sum not to exceed $125,000 to carry out the purpose of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION OF CONDITIONS IN COMMERCE AFFECTING NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Senate resumed consideration of Senate Resolution 309, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Montana whether he desires that we proceed with the consideration of the resolution today. I have been promising the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] an executive session for some days in order that we may dispose of a Nebraska postmastership, which will take probably 20 or 30 minutes.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think the consideration of the resolution will take much time. If there is indication that it will take considerable time and that there will be discussion, I shall not object to it going over. I think we have had all the discussion that is necessary about the resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am willing to have a vote on the resolution now.

Mr. WHEELER. So am I.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I understand that the resolution asks for some investigation to be made by the Committee on Interstate Commerce with reference to certain contracts which have been entered into largely, or, in part, at least, with German companies.

I recall that a number of years ago the Committee on Finance conducted some investigations which demonstrated that a number of German corporations, vast German organizations dealing with all sorts of chemical compounds and chemical preparations, had very large holdings in the United States, and controlled, in part at least, if not entirely, some of the German companies in the United States.

I assume that perhaps the situation throughout the world today, under the dominance of Mr. Hitler and the Nazi regime, in the absolute control which Mr. Hitler exercises over all forms of German industry, makes it advisable that we make some inquiry to ascertain to what extent Mr. Hitler may control or seek to control some chemical or other corporations in the United States, and if that is the purpose of the resolution, I am in entire sympathy with it.

Mr. WHEELER. That is the purpose of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments of the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The amendments of the committee were, on page 2, line 16, after the word "arrangements", to insert "affecting national defense"; on page 3, line 7, after the word "entity", to insert the words "affecting national defense"; and on page 4, line 8, to strike out "The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make, and to report to the Senate the results of, a thorough and complete investigation of acts, practices, methods, and omissions to act, by persons, partnerships, associations, corporations, other entities, and foreign governments, in interstate or foreign commerce, and of conditions of interstate or foreign commerce, which may or do delay, interfere with, or obstruct the national defense, including among other things—

(1) Part or entire ownership by stock or otherwise of, influence in, control of, and power over, domestic business and production related to national defense, by any foreign person, partnership, association, corporation, foreign government, or agents or instrumentalities thereof, or other entity;

(2) Pooling arrangements affecting national defense or other contracts or agreements between any one or more of the foregoing, and any American person, partnership, association, corporation, or other entity, for interchange of business or trade secrets or other information, for interchange of patents or processes of patent rights, for allocation of sales or places of doing business or production, for restriction of production, or for fixing of prices;

(3) Sale, directly or indirectly, in or for foreign commerce, of materials or products, whether raw, semifinished, or finished, used or usable in war industries or war activities or preparations by any foreign person, partnership, association, corporation, or other entity affecting national defense;

(4) Financial arrangements and demands therefor with respect to profits, taxes, or other matters, affecting national defense;

(5) Restraints of trade by foreign or domestic persons, partnerships, associations, corporations, or other entities, whether through monopolies or otherwise, affecting national defense.

The Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to obtain such facts as other Government agencies may have, and to secure the assistance of other Government agencies in the investigation hereby authorized.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places, either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-sixth and subsequent Congresses, to employ such experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production and impounding of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, are we considering the resolution itself?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thought I learned on inquiry that the motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution was pending. I must have misunderstood the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion was put and agreed to that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. AUSTIN. The motion was declared agreed to, was it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution as amended. (Putting the question.) The "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask for a division.

On a division the resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 3266) to provide pensions, compensation, retirement pay, and hospital benefits for certain Air Corps Reserve officers who were disabled while on active duty with the Regular Army.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2103) to exempt certain Indians and Indian tribes from the provisions of the Act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), as amended, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma, Mr. HILL, and Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7738) to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease or sell certain lands of the Agua Caliente or Palm Springs Reservation, Calif., for public airport use, and for other purposes"; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma, Mr. CARTWRIGHT, and Mr. BURDICK were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 844. An act to simplify the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States, and for other purposes;

S. 3990. An act to transfer the essential language of section 518, title IV, of the Tariff Act of 1930, approved June 17, 1930, into the Judicial Code of the United States and to provide for its reenactment as part of said Judicial Code, to take effect from the date of its passage, including the allowance to the judges of the United States Customs Court for traveling expenses incurred for maintenance while absent from New York on official business and to repeal all acts inconsistent therewith to the extent of such inconsistency, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5053. An act for the relief of Verdie Barker and Fred Walter;

H. R. 5937. An act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Lamborn & Co.;

H. R. 8621. An act to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act and other retirement acts;

H. R. 9654. An act to extend, for an additional year, the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937 and the taxes with respect to sugar;

H. R. 10539. An act making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10572. An act making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 225. Joint resolution relating to the conditions for payment with respect to sugarcane harvested from certain plantings in the mainland cane-sugar area.

SURVEY OF CARTER COUNTY, TENN., AND OTHER COUNTIES

Mr. BARKLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to call up a matter on the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. I may say to the Senators that I hope that we may have a call of the calendar tomorrow for bills which have been reported since the call of the calendar on September 30, so that bills on the calendar may be disposed of. I do not know whether that would include the Senator's matter or not.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I am referring to Senate Resolution 302, found on page 16 of the calendar, under the heading, "Subjects on the table." I merely desire to call the resolution from the table and have it agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The resolution (S. Res. 302) submitted by Mr. STEWART on August 24, 1940, requesting the Secretary of War to make a survey of Carter and adjoining counties in Tennessee which were damaged by flood on August 13, 1940.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, which was read, as follows:

Whereas Carter County, Tenn., was subjected on August 13, 1940, to a disastrous flood, which caused extensive damage to roads and bridges in such county, and to the streets and the sewerage system of the city of Elizabethton in such county; and

Whereas Carter County and the city of Elizabethton are so burdened with indebtedness as to be unable to raise the necessary funds to repair such roads, bridges, streets, and sewerage system, and to take such action as may be necessary to prevent similar damage in the future; and

Whereas it is essential to the maintenance of the health and safety of the people of such county and city that such roads, bridges, streets, and sewerage system be repaired, and that action be taken to protect such county and city from floods: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is requested to immediately make a survey of that part or portion of Carter County and adjoining counties in Tennessee which were subjected to a flood on August 13, 1940, with a view to and for the purpose of determining the extent of the damage to public and other property caused by the flood and the cost of repair, and to report to the Senate thereon at the earliest practicable date.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire whether the information desired has not been obtained, and is not now available.

Mr. STEWART. It is not.

Mr. KING. Is the Secretary of War the proper person to make the survey?

Mr. STEWART. I think so.

Mr. KING. Has not the State or its political subdivisions made any survey?

Mr. STEWART. They had not at the time this resolution was offered, at least.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I feel that in good faith I must now move for an executive session, because I asked the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] earlier in the day to postpone the matter in order that we might dispose of the bill the Senator from New York had in charge. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nomination of William E. Flournoy, Jr., of Virginia, now a Foreign Service officer of class 7 and a secretary in the Diplomatic Service, to be also a consul.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion, or appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army.

Mr. VAN NUYS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

William J. Campbell, of Illinois, to be district judge for the northern district of Illinois, to fill a new position; and

J. Albert Woll, of Illinois, to be attorney for the northern district of Illinois, vice William J. Campbell (appointed district judge).

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

He also, from the same committee, reported adversely the nomination of Eva L. Herndon, to be postmaster at Warrensburg, Mo., in place of A. T. King, removed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Harvey M. Johnsen to be judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTER—FRANK S. PERKINS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frank S. Perkins to be postmaster at Fremont, Nebr., which had been passed over.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President——

POSTMASTER—THOMAS E. TRULOVE

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may not the other nomination be confirmed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will state the other post-office nomination.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Thomas E. Trulove to be postmaster at Inglewood, Calif.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. JOHNSON of California subsequently said: Mr. President, I have received many protests concerning the nomination of Thomas E. Trulove to be postmaster at Inglewood, Calif.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, does the Senator desire that the vote by which that nomination was confirmed be reconsidered, and to leave the nomination on the calendar until the Senator has had an opportunity to look into the matter?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the nomination of Thomas E. Trulove to be postmaster at Inglewood, Calif., was confirmed, be reconsidered, and that the nomination be returned to the Executive Calendar. Or does the Senator from California wish to have the nomination returned to the committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No; I should like to have it placed on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the nomination of Thomas E. Trulove to be postmaster at Inglewood, Calif., was confirmed, is reconsidered, and the nomination will be returned to the calendar.

WILLIAM J. CAMPBELL

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska will yield to me a moment, today the Committee on the Judiciary reported favorably a nomination for United States district attorney and for district judge in Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations may be considered before the Senate proceeds with the other matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the first nomination.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William J. Campbell to be United States district judge for the northern district of Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

J. ALBERT WOLL

The legislative clerk read the nomination of J. Albert Woll to be United States attorney for the northern district of Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of these two nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be immediately notified.

FRANK S. PERKINS, POSTMASTER—NOMINATION PASSED OVER

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, the nomination of Frank S. Perkins to be postmaster at Fremont, Nebr., has been passed over several times at my request, because I desire to make a brief statement as to the situation. I have no objection to Mr. Perkins on grounds that he is personally obnoxious at all; in fact he is a friend of mine, and I have a great deal of respect for him; but there are certain circumstances and conditions in reference to the situation at Fremont which seem to me to make it necessary that I should make a brief statement, so that no member of the Senate may say that he voted not only to confirm this nominee but replace the postmaster who is there, without knowing the facts. For that reason I ask the Senate's indulgence for a very few moments.

Fremont is a thriving city. I see before me a Senator who, I think, is interested in Fremont, the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. If I remember correctly, Mrs. White was born and brought up in Fremont. In any event, Fremont is a thriving city some 35 miles from Omaha, with a population of between fifteen and twenty thousand, a prosperous, forward-looking city, with many things of which it is proud, and nothing of which it has been more proud than the fact that for many years the operation of its post office has been outstandingly successful. I shall in a moment offer some evidence to show the condition is as I have stated it to be. The reason why it has been so will also be made evident.

The present postmaster, Frank W. Fuhlrodt, who would be replaced if the Senate should act favorably upon the nomination of Mr. Perkins, has had a very interesting career as the postmaster of Fremont. In September of 1903 he was appointed clerk in that post office as a very young man. He worked his way up through all the departments, to be city distributor, mailing clerk, registry clerk, and 10 years later, in July 1913, he was promoted to be superintendent of mails in the Fremont postoffice. In June 1915 he was appointed assistant postmaster. In March 1919 there was a vacancy in the office—the postmaster died, I believe—and Mr. Fuhlrodt, the assistant postmaster, was appointed as acting postmaster.

I may say in passing that the Fremont district was then represented by a Democratic Representative, the Honorable Dan B. Stephens, who served for a number of years in the other House and is known to many Members of this body.

In due course of time examinations were held, and when the Civil Service Commission submitted the eligible list of three names, Mr. Fuhlrodt stood at the top of the list, and on May 11, 1920, he was appointed postmaster by President Woodrow Wilson. In 1924 he was reappointed. In 1928 he was reappointed. In 1932 he was reappointed. I may say that I had never met Mr. Fuhlrodt, in fact knew nothing about him, but in the early part of 1936 I was notified by the Post Office Department that the term would expire, and my recommendation was asked; so I investigated the matter then; ascertained these facts and, of course, promptly recommended the reappointment of Mr. Fuhlrodt.

At that time there was some objection raised—not objection to the competency of Mr. Fuhlrodt, but objection by some local Democrats, who said that this was an office which ought to be thrown open to examination, because they said Mr. Fuhlrodt had been registered through all the years as a Republican, and I assumed that that was the fact, although no one has ever made the contention that he has taken any part in politics at all. He has attended strictly to the duties of his office. I insisted upon my recommendation, and I may say that the Honorable Dan Stephens, who had long since retired from Congress, and was the leading citizen of Fremont, was very anxious that Mr. Fuhlrodt should be reappointed, and as those matters go, the executive committee of the county central committee of Dodge County listened to the leading Democrat of the county, Dan Stephens, and joined in the endorsement, and the appointment was made.

Four years having passed, and Mr. Fuhlrodt having continued to give his outstanding service as postmaster, in January of this year I was again notified that the term was about to expire. Mr. Stephens meanwhile had passed away, but the chairman of the executive committee of the Democratic county central committee, who had been a very intimate friend of Mr. Stephens, and who himself felt that the post office was being handled in the right way, urged that Mr. Fuhlrodt be reappointed, and I urged his reappointment.

However, by that time the political situation in Nebraska had become somewhat complicated, and the demand was made from other sources that a competitive examination be held, instead of giving Mr. Fuhlrodt the noncompetitive examination, which is clearly called for if we live up to the spirit of the new post-office law which was passed a few years ago. I freely grant that it is not absolutely obligatory on the Department to provide for a noncompetitive examination. Instead of doing that, the Department called for a competitive examination, and the Civil Service Commission gave out the results of it in May. Mr. Fuhlrodt, under the law, was entitled to take the examination, and did so, and stood head and shoulders above the other two who qualified out of a large list of those who took the examination. Mr. Fuhlrodt's grading by the Civil Service Commission was well up in the nineties, and Mr. Perkins, a very estimable gentleman, a man against whom I say not a single word, was second on the list, in the very low eighties. After holding the matter for a couple of months longer, the Post Office Department finally sent up the name of Mr. Perkins.

Mr. President, at this time, as bearing out what I have said about Mr. Fuhlrodt's standing, and the way he has handled that office, I should like to read a copy of a letter written by Mr. W. M. Coble, who for quite a number of years served as chief postal inspector for the district in which Fremont is located, and I believe for all Nebraska and probably the surrounding territory. Mr. Coble on June 27 of this year wrote to Hon. J. M. Donaldson, deputy first assistant to the Postmaster General, Washington, D. C., as follows:

DEAR MR. DONALDSON: It appears that an unfair fight is in progress at Fremont, Nebr., over the selection of someone to succeed Mr. Frank Fuhlrodt, who has been the postmaster since about 1916. Mr. Fuhlrodt was selected at that time for the reason that he was believed to be the most competent applicant. During his long tenure the Fremont post office has been considered a model of efficiency, and there seems to be legitimate reason for his retention simply on merit. I am told that about a score of persons have made application, regardless of ability or knowledge of the service. It seems to me that to select a successor without the consideration of the efficiency of Mr. Fuhlrodt would constitute return to the old spoils system, regardless of the welfare of the service, and I am addressing this letter to you in his interest because I believe in recognition of loyalty and competency. I know that any aid you may see fit to render in this instance will be greatly appreciated.

To that letter Mr. Donaldson sent this answer to Mr. Coble, addressing him as "Dear Bill":

With reference to the postmastership at Fremont, there is nothing the Department can do at this time, as the Civil Service Commission has announced, and will conduct, an open competitive examination. When the papers have been graded the Commission will certify the names of the three highest eligibles, and under the law we are required to select for appointment one of these three eligibles.

It is very likely that Mr. Fuhlrodt will make a grade sufficient to place his name among the first three—

He certainly did, as I have already stated, running far ahead of any competitors—and then consideration can be given to his appointment. However, the Department will consult Hon. James C. Quigley, of Valentine, Nebr., who is our adviser in this particular case.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I wonder if, perhaps, the Senator may attribute the change in personnel to the laudable principle of rotation in office?

Mr. BURKE. I will say that for those who are unable to draw a distinction between the necessity for rotation in office of a postmaster and for President of the United States that would be a very valid argument with which to go before the country, but I think it would not win very many converts.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. KING. Who is the Mr. Quigley who was to be the arbiter and dictator in the appointment?

Mr. BURKE. He is the Democratic national committeeman from Nebraska, and until this spring was also Democratic State chairman; but he has given up the office of State chairman, and is now simply Democratic national committeeman.

So far as Mr. Quigley is concerned, I do not want to be considered as saying anything against him. He managed my campaign in 1934, when I was elected to the Senate; and we have been good friends, and are good friends, although we have had some very serious differences in recent years. In general, I had no objection to the Department taking the recommendations of Mr. Quigley; but we have had no trouble about other post offices in districts represented by Republicans. We have had a few little difficulties in districts represented by Republicans and have ironed them out.

However, in this particular case, because of the fact that a postmaster was appointed by a great Democratic President, and was once reappointed by the present President—and I will please my friends by going so far as to say the present great Democratic President—and in view of the fact that we recently passed a law the spirit of which was to place the Post Office Department of the country strictly under civil service, it seems to me that I should be utterly unfair to the Members of this body if I should permit this matter to go through without comment, and if Senators should vote to oust a postmaster of Mr. Fuhlrodt's standing without knowing the facts.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not wish to interject myself into this Nebraska matter, except to say that I have a letter from Judge Quigley, which I have shown to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. I shall be glad to have it read into the RECORD.

Mr. BARKLEY. He cites an instance in Nebraska in which the Senator himself asked for an open, competitive examination after we passed the civil-service law applying to postmasters. He states that the competitive examination was held, and that the Senator himself recommended eligible No. 3.

Mr. BURKE. That is a fact.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator recommended eligible No. 3 over eligible No. 1, who was the postmaster seeking reappointment. I wonder to what extent the Senator from Nebraska has observed the rule which he now invokes, of giving preference to the encumbent postmaster over an eligible who qualifies under the rules which apply to an open competitive examination.

Mr. BURKE. I shall be very glad to address myself to that point. Two questions are involved.

First, as to the distinction between eligible No. 1 and the other eligibles, I have always felt that there was much merit in the Executive order issued by President Wilson, which I believe was in force for a short time during this administration, that, unless there was some strong reason to the contrary, eligible No. 1 should receive the appointment. But that has not been the practice; and while in many cases that has afforded a proper ground upon which to stand, instances have come to my knowledge in which I have been asked to make recommendations when all parties were agreed that there ought to be a change, and I have made such recommendations. In the instance cited by Mr. Quigley, that of South Sioux City, Nebr., I believe, 4 years ago an examination was held, and there was a great row about it. I recommended Mr. Heffner, the man who has been serving as postmaster. He was inducted into the post office. He was not brought up in the post office, as was Mr. Fuhlrodt, which makes quite a little difference, I should say.

In the second place, a very considerable amount of evidence was submitted to me, in the form of letters and otherwise, indicating that the patrons of the office thought conditions would be improved by a change. So when the matter came before me this spring, upon the recommendation of all the local parties, who said they wanted an examination, I asked for it at their request. There was no dissent except from the postmaster himself.

In the case of the Fremont situation, I recently saw an editorial which appeared in the Lincoln Star, written by one of our very great editorial writers, Mr. James E. Lawrence, in which he referred to the fact that it appeared from an examination conducted by his own newspaper or some other newspaper in Fremont that nine-tenths of the patrons of the post office in Fremont wanted Mr. Fuhlrodt reappointed. So I think that while the point made is correct, that I have not always recommended number one on the list, or the incumbent for reappointment, such departures have been under circumstances so greatly different from those which prevail at Fremont that I do not think any serious charge of inconsistency could be urged against me; and, even if it were, I should still feel it my duty to present these facts to the Senate.

I was talking about the qualifications of Mr. Fuhlrodt, and I read a letter from a man who probably knows more about his qualifications than does anyone else, a man who has been chief postal inspector for all that area for many years. He says the Fremont post office under Mr. Fuhlrodt has been held up as a model of efficiency.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Kentucky cited a prior case in which the recommendation of the Senator from Nebraska had been followed, and the third man on the list had been appointed. Why was not the recommendation of the Senator from Nebraska followed in this case, in a district represented by Republicans?

Mr. BURKE. I think I am safe in leaving that to the imagination of the Senator from Texas; but conditions have somewhat changed. I have no grievance arising from the fact that my recommendation has not been accepted. Being a citizen of the State, and familiar with the facts, I recognize much merit in the position that my recommendation should not be asked, although it having been asked in January, and I having recommended the appointment of Mr. Fuhlrodt, I should not be willing to go so far as to say that the fact that I recommended Mr. Fuhlrodt ought to be sufficient ground for rejecting him and putting in a new and untried man after Mr. Fuhlrodt's many years of service.

Mr. CONNALLY. In other words, the Senator believes that Mr. Fuhlrodt is the same Mr. Fuhlrodt, and would be just as capable, whether or not the Senator had recommended him.

Mr. BURKE. He is the same Mr. Fuhlrodt.

Mr. CONNALLY. As I understand the patronage practice, when I was in the House, under President Wilson's Executive order the high man got the job, whether he was a Republican or a Democrat, white or black. He got the job, no matter what his political affiliation was.

Mr. BURKE. That was true as long as that Executive order remained in force.

Mr. CONNALLY. I was in the House, and I recommended the appointment of only one postmaster prior to the Executive order. After the Executive order I was out the window. I thought the practice was, however, that when there was a Democratic Senator from a State, his recommendations were followed in the districts represented by Republicans.

Mr. BURKE. That has been true.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought that a Senator, who votes upon a confirmation under the constitutional provision for advice and consent, was of rather more consequence than a national committeeman, who has no vote in the Senate, and whose chief duty is to rake up a little finances during the campaign.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator is entirely correct. That has been the practice in Nebraska until very recent times. There are now three districts represented by Republicans. In those districts, until a very few months ago, the Department has always asked my recommendation, and followed it in every case; but conditions have somewhat changed.

Mr. CONNALLY. However, Mr. Fuhlrodt is the same Mr. Fuhlrodt.

Mr. BURKE. He is the same Mr. Fuhlrodt, the same efficient postmaster.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was in Congress at the time President Wilson adopted his practice of appointing the highest man. If we are to have an honest civil service, of course that is the only way to do. We all recognize that. President Wilson appointed the highest eligible on the list, regardless of politics. In my State the highest-ranking eligible was appointed. I think there was not a single, solitary exception to that rule. If we are to have an honest civil service that is the only way to do, and it ought to be the rule. That is my judgment about it.

Mr. BURKE. I thank the Senator very much for that comment. It seems to me he is so clearly absolutely correct that we at least ought to strive for that in every instance.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has not been done in the past, and under the present rule it need not be done. Any one of the three may be appointed; and when the Department sends in the name of one, if he is a man of good character and standing, there is nothing for us to do but to confirm him.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

Mr. BURKE. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. Apropos of what the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] has inquired about, of course we know that when we have a Democratic Congressman from the district he always looks to the Democratic Senators to aid him in picking out a man for postmaster. We all know that the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] takes no interest at all in post offices or patronage of any kind; and, of course, we have recently lost our Democratic Senator from Nebraska. He went over to Mr. Willkie; so we have not any Democratic Senator from Nebraska to advise us. Therefore, we are in the predicament of having to look elsewhere for advice about the post office at Fremont. Is not that true?

Mr. BURKE. I accept the statement, with one slight correction. The Senator referred to my colleague [Mr. NORRIS], whose word would certainly carry weight if he chose to exercise it, but he does not do so in post-office matters. Leaving my colleague out of consideration, there is not now a New Deal Senator from Nebraska. It is my contention that there is still a Democratic Senator from Nebraska, and I myself claim to be that individual; but I freely admit that there is no New Deal Senator masquerading under the cloak of a Democrat in Nebraska.

Mr. MINTON. But there is one masquerading out there as a Willkie Democrat. Is that it?

Mr. BURKE. The Senator may put on the matter any interpretation he desires. I am supporting Mr. Willkie for President, and if time permitted I should like to read to the Senator a very able brief on the question which I have before me, but it would take a little too long to do that.

Mr. MINTON. I should like to read the Senator an article from Look of June 4, 1940, in which Mr. Willkie said that President Roosevelt should run for a third term.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, would it be agreeable to the Senator from Nebraska to postpone action on this matter until after January?

Mr. BURKE. I should not be particularly interested in doing that; no.

I think we should come back to the serious matter before us, and it is a serious matter. I have read from the letter of the chief post-office inspector for that area referring to the qualifications of Mr. Fuhlrodt; and in order that there may be no question about the matter I present the result of the latest inspection of the post office at Fremont, Nebr., by the Post Office Department. This is under date of June 11, 1940. That is the latest they were able to supply me. The two inspectors, Mr. Cordts and Mr. Barnum, who made that inspection, rated Mr. Frank W. Fuhlrodt 97.6 percent, which I understand is about as near perfection as they go in rating any postmaster. At the same time, he also being the custodian of the Federal building and property, and since they rate separately on that, on June 11, 1940, Mr. Fuhlrodt was rated 98 percent on the excellence of his custodial service.

While we are on that subject, let me read to you from a pamphlet issued in December 1939 by the United States Civil Service Commission, containing information regarding postmaster positions filled through nomination by the President for confirmation by the Senate. I turn to page 5, and find this under the heading "Politics and religion":

> In all cases selection for appointment shall be made with sole reference to merit and fitness and without regard to political or religious considerations.

In the light of the facts I have given, and which, so far as the statements I have made in reference to this post office are concerned cannot in the slightest particular be refuted, how can any Member of this body—Democrat, New Dealer, Republican, Independent, or whatever he may be—say that it would be proper practice in this country for any individual or any party to claim that we were operating the Post Office under civil service, to sanction putting out printed matter stating that appointments of postmasters shall be made with sole reference to merit and fitness, and, in the face of that, vote to oust this man appointed by President Woodrow Wilson, reappointed by all succeeding Presidents, and by President Roosevelt himself, and now clearly being ousted not because his efficiency is failing—he is at the very peak of his efficiency right now—but merely because the one who recommended him has fallen somewhat from grace?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The reply is perfectly simple. We passed a law providing for it. We are to blame for it, if anybody is to blame. I think we are to blame, because I think the rule that the highest man on the civil-service list ought to get the place is a good rule; but that is not the rule which the Senate itself adopted. That is not the rule which the Congress adopted. That is not the law today. Any one of the three highest may be selected, and that ends the matter.

Mr. BURKE. Yes, my dear friend from Tennessee, but we have never passed any law, and there is no such law on the statute books now, which requires any Member of the Senate to vote to confirm the nomination of a man, no matter how good, the effect of which confirmation will be to oust a postmaster with the qualifications and experience so clearly attributable to the present postmaster at Fremont.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. KING. May I ask a question of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], for whom I entertain a very high regard?

Suppose three persons took the examination; one received a rating of 99, one a rating of 85, and one a rating of only 45 or 50. Suppose the man having the rating of 45 or 50 were appointed. Does the Senator from Tennessee say it would be our duty to confirm that man's nomination?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; that could not happen, but I will change the question and put it as it should be put by the Senator from Utah, namely:

Here are three men, one with a rating of 99, one with a rating of 98, and one with a rating of 97. Under the law, the Department sends in the name of the man with the rating of 97. As I look at the matter, under the law as it is today—not that I approve the law, but it is the law—if there is nothing the matter with the character and fitness of the applicant whose name is sent in, if he is an honest man, as I understand the Senator from Nebraska says this appointee is an honest man, that there is nothing the matter with his fitness, I do not think we are called upon under the law to select a man for the place. The Department may select one of the three highest. It has sent in his name, and I think it is our duty to confirm his nomination unless there is something the matter with his character or fitness.

Mr. KING. I differ with the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have a very high esteem for the Senator from Tennessee, but I must take issue with him, not on behalf of myself, but on behalf of the prerogatives of the Senate. There is no law requiring the Senate to confirm the nomination of anybody.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; of course not.

Mr. CONNALLY. There is no law requiring us to select anybody. The Constitution gives the Senate the right to reject or confirm without regard to any matter except the individual consciences of the Senators voting. The Civil Service Act cannot control the Senate in the matter of confirmation.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is entirely correct about that.

Mr. CONNALLY. What the Senator meant was that under the practice heretofore——

Mr. McKELLAR. Under the practice and under the law.

Mr. CONNALLY. We have had a practice here that when a nomination comes in, if the nominee can get by, and has not committed any wrongs, and is a good man, and the Senators from the State do not object, we automatically confirm him, but I should not want the RECORD to stand with the statement of the Senator from Tennessee, because the Senator from Texas individually proposes to stand by the prerogatives and the power of the Senate. We have given away, by practices such as these, a great deal of our prestige and authority. In many cases in the Senate in passing on nominations, I have voted with the Senator from the State when probably, if I had not been conscious of that sort of obligation to respect the Senate, I might have voted otherwise.

Mr. McKELLAR. When the Department has selected one of the three highest eligibles under the law as we have passed it, and there is no objection to the appointee on account of character or fitness, I see no reason why we should attempt to select another man.

Mr. KING. I do not agree with the Senator at all.

Mr. BURKE. On that very point I should like to read, if I may be pardoned for doing so, from a copy of a letter written by a distinguished Member of this body, who has always been very much interested in the civil service, on the particular point as to the effect of this last law:

> When, at the last session of Congress we passed the law, the effect of which was to remove the post offices of the country from partisan political control, at least to a very great extent, by making the tenure one of good behavior instead of a term of 4 years, there was a great deal of discussion with reference to the postmasters who were in office. It was argued on the one hand that it would be unfair to legislate those postmasters into holding office for a permanent term, and it was finally agreed that the postmasters then in office could be reappointed, after taking a noncompetitive examination, and that such reappointment should be without term, and, in effect, should place them on a permanent roll. However, the Post Office Department was given a leeway in such cases. In addition to the method of reappointment without a competitive examination, the Department was allowed to make the appointment by promotion with the service, as provided by the civil-service law, or to throw the matter open for public examination, the same as though the law had not been passed.
> It has always seemed to me——

The writer of this letter says:

> It has always seemed to me the real intent of the law was to provide for a permanency of tenure for postmasters, provided they passed a noncompetitive examination, which was, in reality, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not they possessed the qualifications necessary to hold the office.
>
> Whether or not the law should be applied in this way was left to the Department, and it in turn, as a matter of practice, has been almost universally controlled by the wishes of the Senator or Representative who has political control of the post office in question.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Was this matter presented to the committee?

Mr. BURKE. A nomination comes in regular order, of course, to the committee, and then, as the Senator knows, under the direction of the chairman of the committee, the cards are sent to the two Senators from the State. When I received my card containing this nomination I wrote upon it, and I think I can quote the exact language, this statement:

I have no personal objection of any kind against the nominee, Mr. Perkins. I consider him an able and efficient person. But I have contended from the beginning that the incumbent should be reappointed; and if the matter comes before the Senate for confirmation, I expect to avail myself of the opportunity to present the reasons for that opinion.

I was not asked to come before the committee and to state my reasons. After all, it is a matter on which the Senate should pass.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, while the Senator takes that position now, I think he stated a while ago that there had been cases in which he had asked that the second or third man be appointed, instead of the man who was holding the office.

Mr. BURKE. I agree fully with the position taken by the Senator from Tennessee a little while ago that it would be much better, and the only way to have real civil service in the Post Office Department, to appoint the man the Civil Service Commission gives as No. 1 on the list. I think that should be the practice followed. But, as the Senator also stated, that practice has not been followed, and we have followed the practice of taking any one of the first three.

I have endeavored, so far as possible, as previously stated, to give my approval always to the No. 1 man on the list, but for various reasons I have not always followed that rule. But I do say, and repeat, that in no one of the cases which might be found in which I had recommended the ousting of an incumbent postmaster and the appointment of another man, however good, were there circumstances bearing the remotest resemblance to those in this case, in which we have a man tried and experienced, tested by a quarter of a century of actual service in his community, who, the Post Office Department itself, through its chief postal inspector, says, is a man of commanding experience, a model of efficiency in the position.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator referred a little while ago to some of the cases where local considerations, the popularity of the candidate, and the choice of the people were considered by him. Did I understand him to say that in this case the reports were that the people of Fremont by a very large majority preferred the retention of the incumbent postmaster?

Mr. BURKE. I quoted an editorial from the leading Democratic paper, one of the very few Democratic daily papers in Nebraska, the Lincoln Star, whose editor is Mr. James E. Lawrence. I do not recall whether he stated there was an investigation made by the Lincoln Star itself or made on behalf of some other newspaper in Fremont, but he stated this conclusion—that the investigation showed that nine out of every ten people served by the Fremont office wanted Mr. Fuhlrodt reappointed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is that report substantially confirmed by the Senator's own knowledge and investigation? I am willing to accept the Senator's statement about it.

Mr. BURKE. I would not attempt to give any figures, but I would say that the only people served by the Fremont post office who have ever communicated any contrary opinion to me could be numbered on the fingers of both my hands, and they were all either Democrats who wanted to take the examination and get the place themselves or were particularly interested in city politics in Fremont. I say that out of a population of 20,000 I do not believe 10 have indicated any other desire than the wish to have Mr. Fuhlrodt reappointed.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the Senator's pardon, but I wish to make a short observation.

Mr. BURKE. Very well.

Mr. CONNALLY. It seems to me to be highly important in post-office matters that the people who are to be served, the people of the community, should have, at least indirectly, some choice and some opportunity of being served by a person satisfactory to them.

The Federal Government is a vast piece of machinery, but the post office is a contact which every citizen has with the Federal Government, and frequently the attitude of people toward the Government is more or less affected by the conduct of some Federal official, such as a postmaster or other local authority of the Federal establishment.

It seems to me that that being true this incumbent being efficient and being number one, and having served there for years, since the people of Fremont really want him as postmaster, it is as important to satisfy the people of Fremont as to satisfy some national committeeman who lives on the other side of the State, and who will not buy a postage stamp or mail a postal card at that office.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. BURKE. It is 400 miles from Fremont to the place of residence of the man who makes the recommendation.

I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The trouble is in ascertaining the sentiments of the people.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am willing to trust the Senator from the State himself. He is here with us, and I would rather trust the Senator's judgment as to that than that of some fellow away off yonder over the mountain range.

Mr. McKELLAR. I believe the Senator voted with me when we opposed very vigorously putting first-, second-, and third-class postmasters under civil service. It should never have been done, but the Senate and the House did it.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator will yield, that is merely advisory to the Senate. It has no binding effect upon the Senate. We are merely calling on the Civil Service Commission to give us this information, and when it comes here we are just as free to exercise our judgment as we were before.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true, but at the same time, since we passed the law—and I am sorry we passed it, I have never believed in it—if we are to have civil service, we should have an honest-to-God civil service.

Mr. CONNALLY. We have not got it.

Mr. McKELLAR. We should not have any civil service in connection with first-, second-, and third-class postmasters, but the Senate and the House voted that as the will of Congress, and we must take it as it is.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I understand the Senator from Nebraska he stated at the outset that the nominee is a qualified man; that there is nothing against his reputation, his character, or his efficiency.

Mr. BURKE. He has no experience in post-office matters. He has been in the publishing business, and is a very good friend of mine. I have nothing but the kindest words to say for him, and I have no doubt that he can start at the very beginning now, where Mr. Fuhlrodt started 25 years ago, and in time probably be able to render somewhere near the same measure of efficient service that Mr. Fuhlrodt has now qualified himself to render.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, no one has any experience in a post office until he is appointed.

Mr. BURKE. Of course, if I may interrupt there, in the case of Mr. Fuhlrodt he started as a clerk in 1903, and made that his life work, and by the time he was appointed postmaster in 1920 he had had 17 years experience in every department of the Fremont post office.

Mr. BARKLEY. I, of course, know nothing about that.

Mr. BURKE. Those are the facts.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure the Senator is telling the truth about it. But the point is that, even though we reject the nominee, that does not mean that the present postmaster will be retained. The Commission either will hold or can hold another competitive examination, and from a list of three from which to make the appointment, the second man may be chosen. So that to deny confirmation to the man who has been appointed by the President, does not guarantee that Mr. Fuhlrodt will be retained as postmaster. We do not gain anything by defeating the nominee except to let the present postmaster hold on a few more months until another nomination can be sent in. I do not know whether Mr. Fuhlrodt would be reappointed if we rejected the present nominee. I have no information about that.

Mr. BURKE. Let us examine that suggestion a moment. Assume that upon the statement of facts made, which will not be disputed, the Senate rejects Mr. Perkins. It being clear that the rejection was not because of any deficiency of Mr. Perkins himself, but that the Senate of the United States, as would be clearly evident from the RECORD, had rejected Mr. Perkins because it did not want Mr. Fuhlrodt ousted from office, the post office at Fremont tomorrow, and every other day until the Post Office Department took some other action, would continue to be run by Mr. Fuhlrodt. Does the Senator from Kentucky, our majority leader, mean to say that, in the face of decisive action that might be taken by the Senate, saying that we, as the confirming body, do not approve the ousting of this efficient postmaster, that we are striking this blow for the maintenance of civil service—does the Senator from Kentucky mean that the nominating branch would say, "We care not what the Senate thinks about this matter. There are political considerations involved which make it necessary for us to go against the wishes of the people of Fremont, against all our own declarations with respect to the merit system in the Post Office, against the action of the Senate itself, and we will oust this man at the first opportunity"? I do not think they would say that at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator knows I made no such statement. I was simply stating the practical effect of rejecting the nominee, against whom the Senator himself has no personal objection; that the rejection of the nomination sent here by the President on the recommendation of the Postmaster General would not guarantee that the present postmaster would continue in office. I do not mean by that, and the Senator knew that I did not mean by that, that the appointing power would disregard the will of the Senate.

Mr. BURKE. What else could the Senator mean?

Mr. BARKLEY. I meant exactly what I said, that the rejection of the nominee sent here by the President does not mean that the present postmaster would hold automatically. I do not know whether he would or not. I have no information upon that subject, but I imagine that the same reasons for objection to him on the part of the Post Office Department would apply again if a new appointment had to be made. I do not know about that. I have not talked to the Post Office Department, I have not talked to the President, or to anyone in Nebraska, or anyone else about it. I have a letter from Judge Quigley, who managed the Senator's campaign at the time when I flew out there to help him. I am glad I did, but sorry that the circumstances are not such that I can do it again. The only information I have is a letter from Judge Quigley which I shall read later.

Mr. BURKE. Without attempting to imitate the Senator's voice——

Mr. BARKLEY. I was attempting to imitate the Senator from Nebraska, and if I succeeded I am greatly complimented.

Mr. BURKE. Without going into the merits of the matter, of course, the rejection of Mr. Perkins as nominee would not mean that the spirit of the civil-service rules at least would automatically be complied with. It certainly would mean exactly what I said, that unless the nominating department wanted to ignore all that has been said, Mr. Fuhlrodt would be continued in office. We know that this matter certainly has never been called to the President's attention. There has been a change in the Postmaster General's office, and I do not know what other considerations have operated in that department; but when all these things are before them, and it is known why the Senate acted in rejecting this nomination, it could mean only what I stated, that Mr. Fuhlrodt would continue in office, and in due course his name would be sent to the Senate.

I was reading a letter written by a distinguished Member of this body to the postmaster at Fremont. This is what he said:

If the real intent, as I understand it, of the law had been carried out, you—would have been required to pass a noncompetitive examination, and would, as a matter of fact, have been reappointed during good behavior. In my opinion, this course should have been followed.

Mr. Fuhlrodt—

Certainly that course should have been followed. If we are to carry out the spirit of the law we have passed, which applies in actual fact to all appointments, we certainly should apply it to the first appointment that comes under it.

In connection with that I read from a copy of a letter which on April 30 I addressed to Mr. Donaldson, Deputy First Assistant Postmaster General:

MY DEAR MR. DONALDSON: On the 3d day of January 1940 I recommended the reappointment of Frank W. Fuhlrodt as postmaster at Fremont, Nebr. I called attention to the fact that Mr. Fuhlrodt had been holding that office for more than 20 years with entire satisfaction to the patrons thereof. On at least two other occasions I had renewed my endorsement of Mr. Fuhlrodt.

I understand the reason for the delay in submitting his name has been caused by the fact that from other sources there was submitted a request that the matter be thrown open for examination. To that I have and am opposed.

I, therefore, urge that Mr. Fuhlrodt's name be submitted to the Senate at once—

Of course, as the result of a noncompetitive examination—in order that action may be had before this session of Congress adjourns. I feel so deeply on this subject that I have been considering the necessity of making a statement on the floor of the Senate concerning the application of the merit system to the Post Office Department in the event there is any disposition not to act favorably upon my recommendation.

I have read that primarily to indicate that as long as 6 months ago I had notified the Department that this was not one of the matters that could be put through without having the facts stated. I am not taking them by surprise at all in now insisting that they made a mistake in not giving Mr. Fuhlrodt a noncompetitive examination, and if he passed it with flying colors, as he certainly would, reappointing him to that position.

I said a few moments ago that I could not see how any Member of this body—the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, or the majority leader, or any other Senator—could vote under these circumstances to oust this capable, efficient postmaster after his long years of service, for purely political reasons in the inception, and then go forth and make any claim about being an adherent of the merit system.

I call attention to the fact that a week ago today at Cleveland, Ohio, there was held a meeting of the civil-service assembly, and to that assembly President Roosevelt sent a message, from which I quote:

"It is becoming increasingly clear," the President wrote, "that the major objectives which we have set for ourselves can best be realized if governments are administered with the aid of personnel groups that are squarely based on the merit principle.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Roosevelt recalled that he had extended the provisions of the Civil Service Act to an increasing number of positions in the Federal service during the last several years and wrote:

"Virtually all positions have now been included within the framework of the Federal competitive civil service excepting"—

And he lists a very few exceptions.

I ask at this point that the entire newspaper article be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ROOSEVELT AND WILLKIE PRAISE MERIT SYSTEM—BOTH SEND MESSAGES TO SECTION OF CIVIL SERVICE ASSEMBLY

CLEVELAND, September 30.—President Roosevelt and Republican Presidential nominee Wendell L. Willkie emphasized today the importance of the merit system in the present crisis for democracy in messages to the thirty-second annual meeting of the Civil Service Assembly of the United States and Canada.

"It is becoming increasingly clear," the President wrote, "that the major objectives which we have set for ourselves can best be realized if governments are administered with the aid of personnel groups that are squarely based on the merit principle."

Mr. Willkie said that "this Nation will surmount the crisis which it faces, but if it is to do so we must bring the methods of government to such a level that it can do immediately and effectively those things which the American people decide to have it do," adding:

"No fact is more important in the achievement of this objective than the extension of the merit system to cover the administrative service of every level of government."

Mr. Roosevelt recalled that he had extended the provisions of the Civil Service Act to an increasing number of positions in the Federal service during the last several years, and wrote:

"Virtually all positions have now been included within the framework of the Federal competitive civil service excepting: (1) Policy-determining positions; (2) certain other positions which special circumstances require should be exempt; (3) positions now being surveyed and considered by the special committee (which he appointed to survey the system); and (4) positions which the Congress has specifically exempted in this fourth category."

The President added that he hoped a bill passed by both Houses of Congress, and now in conference, extending civil service to "thousands of positions which the Congress has heretofore exempted" would be given final passage at this session.

Mr. President, so long as we have gone into the political aspect of this matter, let me say that in whatever political activity I may engage between now and the 5th of November I expect to confine myself strictly and exclusively to the effort to maintain the anti-third-term tradition; but I can well imagine that anyone who wanted to attack the party in power on other grounds could very well strip from this administration every pretense of faithfulness to the civil service if the Senate should now take action which would mean the ouster of a postmaster whose qualifications I have described.

Mr. President, I have talked much longer than I intended, and I shall conclude by reading a copy of a letter which I wrote to Mr. Perkins in August, before his name had been submitted, but when it appeared very likely that it would be submitted. I read:

AUGUST 26, 1940.

Mr. FRANK S. PERKINS,
Care of Perkins Printing & Stationery Co., Fremont, Nebr.

MY DEAR MR. PERKINS: You have a great many friends over the State of Nebraska. During the past few weeks I have had letters from a large number of men in various parts of Nebraska in whose judgment I have very great confidence. All of them speak in highest terms of your qualification to serve as postmaster at Fremont. They know you well and like you and respect you. I accept their judgment as being a correct appraisal of you.

I have no doubt that you understand my position in reference to the appointment of a postmaster in your home city. I have a very slight acquaintance with Mr. Fuhlrodt and no interest whatever in his reappointment unless under all the circumstances he is entitled to it. Four years ago when his term expired, Dan Stephens and other Fremont citizens made a strong plea to me for his reappointment. They set out the facts that he was appointed originally by President Wilson and reappointed each term thereafter; that he had attended strictly to the duties of his office, and had taken no part in political affairs; that his handling of the important position assigned to him had met with general approval of the citizens of Fremont, and that he was highly rated by the Post Office authorities in Washington. Personal investigation convinced me of the truth of the statements made. Mr. Fuhlrodt's reappointment followed.

This year the same situation arose again. Over my protest the Department conducted a competitive examination. Mr. Fuhlrodt stood well at the top of the eligible list. If the merit system means anything, Mr. Fuhlrodt is entitled to reappointment. If those charged with the responsibility of conducting this great business institution, which we know as the Post Office Department, have been merely speaking pleasant words when they talk about the merit system, I think it is time the country knew it. If an issue is made of this matter while I am a Member of the Senate I shall feel it my duty to set forth the facts.

I assure you that I have no personal objection to your appointment. In fact, except for the circumstances above set forth, I would heartily endorse you and urge your appointment. I have no doubt that you would fill the place with credit to you and the community. If you are inducted into office, you will have my best wishes for continued success. But until the postal authorities announce publicly that the merit system no longer applies in the selection of postmaster, I shall continue to urge the reappointment of Mr. Fuhlrodt.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD R. BURKE,
United States Senator.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say on this subject. It seems to me a clear case in which all the elements of decency, fair dealing, and living up to our protestations, require us to reject this nomination. I trust the Senate may take that action. I am very sure that if it should be taken it would result in the perpetuation in office of a most efficient postmaster.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 258) to provide for the use and disposition of the bequest of the late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes to the United States, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2627) to empower and authorize special agents and such other employees of the Division of Investigations, Department of the Interior, as are designated by the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose, to administer oaths in the performance of their official duties, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4270) to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States; insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. RAMSPECK, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. FRIES, Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts, and Mr. REES of Kansas were appointed managers at the further conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7283) for the relief of Frank Hall.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 9972. An act authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 10094. An act to require the registration of certain organizations carrying on activities within the United States, and for other purposes.

FRANK S. PERKINS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Frank S. Perkins to be postmaster at Fremont, Nebr.?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have not been consulted about the appointment of a postmaster at Fremont, Nebr. I was not expecting to be consulted. I did not want to be consulted. However, I think I ought to say something in regard to this question, because I have had a great amount of correspondence from Fremont in regard to it.

I was very much interested in the law which we passed at the last session to take postmasterships out of politics. I have always believed in it, and I think I have been consistent since I have taken that attitude. It seems to me I ought to state frankly how I feel about the matter.

I think it can fairly be stated—so far as I know, there is no denial of the statement—that both these men, together with the man who stood third on the list, are amply qualified. They are competent, able, honest, respectable citizens of Fremont. I think I can say the same thing about the Democratic national committeeman at Valentine, who, until he resigned one of the positions a year or so ago, was both Democratic national committeeman from the State and chairman of the State democratic committee. He had held those offices for some time. He is a very fine gentleman. I think he is perfectly conscientious. In my judgment he is trying to do the best he can, particularly for his party.

I have received a great many letter from persons whom I know in Fremont. Some are Republicans, some are Democrats, and with respect to others I do not know their political affiliations. Many persons have written me, and many of them have seen me in my office, in regard to this appointment.

I think I was somewhat interested in the matter because originally Mr. Fuhlrodt was appointed to office, and reappointed afterward, at the suggestion of a Member of the House from that district for whom I had an extremely high regard, although we were not of the same political party. I knew him and his family well. I was well acquainted with his wife. The man to whom I refer is now dead. I received a letter from his wife asking that Mr. Fuhlrodt be reappointed.

I have received so many letters in regard to the matter from persons of influence and standing that I felt it was my duty to write to the Post Office Department and tell the Department how I felt, not particularly about this post-office matter, but about any post-office matter. I think Mr. Farley, the head of the Post Office Department, knew my attitude. I told him that I was a warm supporter of the law which we enacted at the last session of Congress providing for eventually getting post-office positions out of politics, and that I had done everything I could to obtain favorable consideration of the measure by the committee and to bring about its passage; that while I was not satisfied with the results of it I thought it was a wonderful step in the right direction, and that in time it would put the Post Office Department practically on a merit basis. That time would come when all the then postmasters should have served out their terms of office, and appointments should have been made under the new law. That law provided for the appointment of postmasters for an unnamed term, practically an appointment for life, after civil-service examination and as to post offices in which the positions were already filled at the time of the enactment of the law, it was provided that when the terms of the incumbents expired the Post Office Department might do one of two things. First, it might give the postmaster holding office a noncompetitive examination, and then, if he passed the examination, appoint him under the new law without term. If the Department did not want to follow that practice, the law gave it the right to hold competitive examinations, as had been done before, and provided that an appointment then should be made of one of the three highest persons on the list.

I should have liked the law better if the latter part of it had been stricken out; but it brought about eventually, in 4 years' time, a complete reorganization of the Post Office Department, and took it out of politics, as I understood; and I wrote to the Postmaster General to that effect. I had written the same thing, in substance, in other cases which had been brought to my attention in such a way that it seemed to me I had to do something in regard to them.

I think, although I do not know this—but the result came out that way—that Mr. Farley followed the advice of the Democratic National Committeeman of Nebraska. He wrote me about the matter, and when he was in the city he came to see me about it. He was very strongly in favor of the appointment of the man whose name has been sent in. While I told him in substance what I have now told the Senate, and wrote in substance to a great many persons who had written me about the matter that I thought the Department ought to take the course of holding noncompetitive examinations, that that was the real spirit of the law as I construed it, I said the law specifically gave the Department the right to pursue the course they pursued in this instance.

Since the appointment was made I received letters from the same persons who were friendly to Mr. Fuhlrodt, and I then said I would not have done what Mr. Farley has done. I would not have taken that course, and I frankly said so. I still think so. I think the right way to carry out the spirit of the law would be to hold noncompetitive examinations. I have always believed in it; and there are no exceptions, as far as I know, in my case. Whenever it has seemed proper for me to express that opinion I have expressed it in one way or another, as best I could. I said, however, "The Post Office Department has done what the laws of Congress specifically provide it may do. It may take a course that will not result in holding a noncompetitive examination, and hold the old kind of an examination, and then select one from the three highest persons on the list."

That is what the Post Office Department did. If I had been conducting the Post Office Department, I would not have done that, but I concede that they had a right to do what they did; and they made this selection. They have appointed a good man. So far as I know, he is perfectly qualified for the place. If the rejection of this nomination would automatically bring about the appointment of the other man, I should feel more like voting to reject the nomination; but if we should do that it would not put Mr. Fuhlrodt into office. Every time we create a feeling, here or elsewhere, that we have taken certain action because the Departments have not followed the suggestion of some Senator, it gives rise to friction; and it is doubtful in my mind whether the Department would reappoint Mr. Fuhlrodt if we should reject this nomination. I have no knowledge whatever on that subject; but the more excited and worked up about it we get, the more apt the Department would be to drift away from him.

As a Senator, when an appointment is made, I have felt that it is not a sufficient reason for me to vote against the confirmation of the appointment, because I would have appointed somebody else instead of the man who has been named. If the appointee fills the bill, if the law has been complied with in making the appointment, and he is efficient, I consider it my duty as a Senator to vote for his confirmation, without regard to either one of the great political parties and without regard to all this falderal that you Democrats and the Republicans also, when they were in power, always had about politics. You do not recommend the top man on the list if he is not your friend. The Senators on this side of the Chamber did not do it. I would not have done it if I had had an opportunity. It is human nature to put in office somebody who will help you when you need help; and this idea of having three persons on the list was just a method by which you let politics get into the appointment of postmasters.

I understand that for a time, at least, under Woodrow Wilson, the top man was appointed. That rule, I think, was set aside by President Harding.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was.

Mr. NORRIS. He said, "Appoint from the three highest." What does that mean? Every Senator knows what it means. We all know what it means. We all know what you Democrats right here, listening to me, have done under that rule. My colleague [Mr. BURKE] did the same thing. I do not find fault with him for it. That is your business—not mine. You have not followed the rule of appointing the top man. You followed the rule, as a general thing—I do not say that it is always done; I do not mean to say that you disregard qualifications, or anything else—but, everybody being qualified, you pick the fellow who is the best friend to you. That is human nature. That is natural. It always has been true, and if you make that kind of a rule it always will be true.

We in the Senate cannot appoint anybody. We cannot name a postmaster. What some Senators want, it seems to me, if they are consistent, is to change the Constitution of the United States and turn over the appointment of postmasters to Senators. That might be an improvement. I do not think it would be, but when I hear the argument made as it always is made every time this question comes up, I know there are many persons who think it would be an improvement to take the power of appointment away from the President, and let Representatives or Senators have the obligation and the duty of appointing postmasters. If you ever did, you would not stay here more than one or two terms, anyway, because in my judgment the patronage that you have and which you love so well has defeated more good men for office, more Members of the House and more Senators, than any other one thing connected with the Government service.

I do not mean to be harsh. I think I am telling the truth. I think it will be admitted that I am.

I am responsible only for my own vote, but I feel that when an appointment is made, whether I like it or not, if the appointee possesses the qualifications for the office, I am honor bound to vote for his confirmation, especially in view of the theory that if I vote against confirmation I will get someone else who, I think, should have been appointed put into the office. I think that is illogical. It seems to me to be wrong. As I see it, it is not the duty of a Senator or Member of the House of Representatives to take that kind of a position, because the Constitution of the United States places the power of appointment somewhere else, and the man in whom it is placed we all know cannot give consideration to individual cases.

I do not know that the President of the United States now knows that there is a vacancy in the office of postmaster at Fremont. Perhaps he knows all about it, but I am inclined to think he does not know anything about it. Mr. Farley was handling the matter and I suppose he followed the advice of a man for whom I have a very high regard, the Democratic national committeeman at Valentine, Nebr., and he made this recommendation.

I told this national committee just exactly how I felt about a matter that I did not think the right course was taken by the Post Office Department, but I admitted they had a right to take it, and they have taken it, and, so far as I am concerned, I deem it my duty to vote for the confirmation of this appointee, not because I would have appointed him—because I would not have done so if I had had the power—but because it is admitted that he is qualified and competent, and because if I should succeed in having him rejected I would not get the man I think they should have originally appointed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate at this late hour in discussing this postmastership. I have not talked to anyone in the Post Office Department about it, I have not talked to the President about it. I do not know anything about what the President's views are in the matter, or whether he has any with regard to it, or whether he knows anything about it. Postmasters usually are appointed by the President, and a mimeographed list of those who have been picked by the Department is sent to the Senate.

Mr. BURKE. I think we could go even further than the statement which has been made in absolving the President. I would be willing to say that not only does he not know that there is any controversy at Fremont between Mr. Fuhlrodt and Mr. Perkins, but I should be willing to say that, except for the fact that the President is a great biographer, I would even doubt that he knows there is a town of Fremont, Nebr. Certainly nothing I have said would indicate that I thought the President knows anything about this controversy at all, and I am sure he does not.

Mr. BARKLEY. I assume that to be true. I would not even mention the matter except that it has been brought to my attention by a man in Nebraska upon whose recommendation I suppose the appointment was made—Judge Quigley.

Mr. NORRIS. I suppose that is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. I presume that is the case. He is the national committeeman, and has been for a long time, and was for years chairman of the State Democratic Committee. I know him very well, and I have a very high regard for him. I recall that 6 years ago I was campaigning in Nebraska, and I was happy to do it for what little service I could render the junior Senator from Nebraska, who was then a candidate. Judge Quigley was very active in the campaign on behalf of the Senator from Nebraska. I presume in the recent campaign the Senator from Nebraska and the national committeeman differed. Judge Quigley—he was a judge out there for a good many years—is a very high-class man. No one doubts that. He is a very loyal administration Democrat. I do not think anyone can dispute that.

When this matter arose I presume—and I get this only by inference—that the Department, it may have been Mr. Farley, it may have been Mr. Howes, or someone else, asked Judge Quigley for his recommendation. I am merely assuming that; I do not know it to be so.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. On January 3, 1940, when I returned to Washington, one of the first matters that required my attention was the notification by the Post Office Department that the term of the Fremont postmaster would expire some 60 days after that, and suggesting in the regular form that if I desired to have the incumbent reappointed, that could be done by a noncompetitive examination, but that if an examination was to be held, a request be made for it. I at once wrote to the Department, recommending that Mr. Fuhlrodt be reappointed.

The primary in Nebraska came on the 7th of April, and sometime between January and the 7th of April it had been decided that the recommendations I made were not to be considered. I not only assumed Mr. Quigley made the recommendation, but I had a letter from Mr. Donaldson stating that Mr. Quigley was the man to whom they were looking in these matters.

Mr. BARKLEY. Reference has already been made to a former Representative, Dan V. Stephens, who lived in Fremont. I served in the House of Representatives with Representative Stephens, we were on the same committee, and I think he and I enjoyed an intimate friendship that was as close as the friendship enjoyed between me and any other Member of the House of Representatives. He finally retired, I think voluntarily, and until his death a year or so ago he and I kept up more or less frequent correspondence, so that I had great respect for anything that Dan Stephens did or recommended, because he was a very high class man.

I speak of the situation only because it has been brought to my attention. I have a letter here addressed jointly to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and to me, in which Judge Quigley points out the situation in this case. It seems to me that, as the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has emphasized, and as I have intimated in an inquiry of mine a little earlier, the only point before us really is whether this appointee is a man of character and intelligence and is qualified for the office.

I have no information about what would happen, as to who would be appointed, if we should reject this appointee, but I suppose that if the Department was not willing to reappoint the present postmaster in the first instance, we would not have any particular right to assume that it would be more anxious to do so later.

There is nothing in this letter that is offensive to the Senator from Nebraska, and in order that Senators may have the picture just as Judge Quigley sees it, if the Senator from Nebraska has no objection, I think the letter should be read.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator was kind enough to let me see the letter, I have read it, and while I may comment upon it, I have no objection to it being read.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the clerk read the letter at the desk in order that the man who made the recommendation, and upon whom reliance is had by the Department as their adviser, may state the situation as he sees it, for the benefit of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE,
Valentine, Nebr., September 26, 1940.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
Chairman, Post Office Committee, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Re: Fremont, Nebr., post office.

MY DEAR AND ESTEEMED FRIENDS: The Nebraska press reports that Senator BURKE intends to demand a separate vote on the nomination of the Presidential nominee, Frank S. Perkins, as postmaster at Fremont, Nebr. The press reports and quotes Senator BURKE as saying that he intends to make an issue of this nomination, that is, that he will not personally object to confirmation but he is going to speak upon the violation of the intent of the present law appointing postmasters.

Obviously, his intent to attack the party leaders of Nebraska on that score is to furnish campaign ammunition for his present bedmates. Since his repudiation by the democracy of Nebraska last spring, he has become more bitter than ever toward the President, the Democratic policies, and the Democratic leadership of this State. All that he now wants to do in the few remaining months of his public career is to use his high office to hurt his former party and those of us who made it possible for him to be in the United States Senate. It is a regrettable situation. With great ability and much courage, if Ed could have seen the light or restrained his bitterness, voted as he pleased without hatred, he might have been a Senator for many years. I have only personal sorrow, since in a humble and small way I was somewhat responsible for his political career.

If he makes the speech that the press says he is going to make, there should be an answer. I wish to give you some facts that can easily be corroborated by inquiry at the Post Office Department. If it is now wrong to recommend a No. 2 eligible or if it has always been wrong to ask for open, competitive examinations, then Mr. BURKE is just as guilty as I am, save in this Fremont post-office matter. For several years we worked in harmony. My files and records disclose, and they are provable at the Post Office Department, that we often joined in recommending open competitive examinations, and that we often recommended another than the No. 1 eligible. The instances are too numerous to recount or mention, but the most recent case might be of some value now if a reply is made to his speech based upon his new convictions.

SOUTH SIOUX CITY, NEBR., POST OFFICE

In July 1939 the Senator requested an open competitive examination. The result was announced in May 1940. The No. 3 eligible was Ralph P. Kilzer. The No. 1 eligible was Ransler M. Hefner, the postmaster. The Senator recommended Kilzer. His nomination was submitted to the Senate in August 1940 and some time during the last week of August 1940 it was confirmed.

While the Kilzer nomination was awaiting confirmation, or perhaps on the very day of confirmation, on August 26 the Senator wrote a letter to Mr. Perkins at Fremont stating that he was qualified to be postmaster, that he had much personal affection for him, but that he was making it a rule and guide to stand by and recommend a No. 1 eligible. This letter was given to the press of Nebraska during the very week that he was promoting the confirmation of Mr. Kilzer.

Do you suppose that this recent conversion of the Senator to this new point of view and the fact that he has announced to the Nebraska people that he is going to speak upon the subject is influenced by his advocacy of the Republican ticket? It might be so construed. All men should be consistent, even Senators of the United States. I cannot help but view with suspicion this sudden change of attitude on the part of Mr. BURKE. The intent of any law is as expressed therein. The law has been carefully and properly followed. In all things, those who give should be able to take.

Assuring you of my continued esteem, and with all good wishes, I am,

Most sincerely yours,

JAMES C. QUIGLEY,
National Committeeman.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before the Senator speaks I wish to make a statement with respect to another phase of the matter, namely, the operation of the civil-service law in the appointment of postmasters. I realize the force of what the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and others have said in support of the theory that the No. 1 man on the list should always be appointed without exception, but that rule has not applied in the appointment of any other civil-service employees of the Government of the United States. It is true that President Wilson during his Presidency issued an Executive order requiring examination and that the No. 1 eligible be appointed. It is entirely likely that under that order Mr. Fuhlrodt was appointed by President Wilson during his Presidency, though I am not certain about that; but as we know, the order was changed later to require that the examination should be held, but that any one of the three on the eligible list might be appointed. That is the rule which applies in connection with all Government employees in the civil service. If there is a vacancy of a clerkship or a stenographic position in a department, the Civil Service Commission certifies three eligibles, and any one of those three may be appointed.

It was natural that Congress in framing the law governing the appointment of postmasters should do the same thing, that is, provide for the appointment of any one of the three on the list. I suppose most of us have recommended others than the first one on the eligible list. I know I have, and I know others have. It may be wrong that we should be talked to about it, or receive any letters or recommendations with respect to it, but from time immemorial under all administrations the courtesy has been accorded to Members of the House to be consulted in the matter of the appointment of postmasters if they were members of the party in power, and that has been true regardless of party.

In a district in any State where there is no Representative who is a member of the party in power, the Senators have been consulted, if they happened to be of the party in power, and that applies to all parties in all administrations. I suppose all of us, in looking over lists of three, have undertaken to inquire among the people of the community and our friends, or if we had knowledge, have consulted our own knowledge, to determine which one of the three would be the most desirable postmaster. I know that in my rather infrequent consultations with respect to postmasters in my State—there being only one district which is not represented by a Democrat—I have now and then been asked to make a recommendation, and I have made it. I have not stuck to the rule of recommending the first one on the list. There are frequently reasons why that should not be done. I do not think we are bound to do so, and I do not think it was intended that we should be bound to do so. Otherwise we would not have provided that a recommendation could be made of any one of the first three on the list.

In the present case we have the nomination of a man against whom no one can say anything regarding his character or his qualifications, and regardless of the disappointment which may be caused the Senator from Nebraska and, no doubt, to the postmaster himself over his failure to be reappointed, the Senate should confirm the nomination of Mr. Perkins.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, let me assure the Senator from Kentucky that it will not be a matter of personal disappointment to me whatever action the Senate may take in the matter. I have no interest whatever in the Fremont, Nebr., post office, political or otherwise, and I am doing here today what it clearly seemed my duty to do, to call to the attention of the Senate, in as short a time as I could, the essential facts as they exist at Fremont.

I should like in a word to clear up the apparent misunderstanding under which the Senator from Kentucky is laboring, and also Judge Quigley, as is apparent from his letter. I do not take my stand here now and say that the Senate must confirm only the No. 1 man on the eligible list. As the Senator from Tennessee pointed out, and I agree with him, I think that would be real civil service; but that is not the law, and it is not upon that ground at all that I take my stand here.

I mention the fact that Mr. Fuhlrodt was No. 1 on the list only as further corroborative evidence of the contention I was making that he lives up to the statement made about him by the postal inspector, as being an outstanding postmaster whose office is held up in all the territory as being a model of efficiency. I do not mean to say that any Senator who has sometimes selected the No. 2 or No. 3 man on the list is subject to any criticism because of that fact, for when the reasons seemed to justify it I have done that myself.

In the letter from Judge Quigley, which I was very glad to have read, although it seemed to me it did not further the cause of the position taken by the majority leader, I noted that he stated that a man in public life ought to be consistent. I could refer him to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] for an argument on that point; but, in any event, we would all agree that a man who makes a statement in a letter addressed, as this was, to the majority leader of the Senate, ought to know the facts.

It is not a matter of great importance, and I cite it only to show how much credence should be placed on anything in it; but in his letter Judge Quigley says that I wrote a letter to Mr. Perkins, and in it I justified my position in not supporting him on the ground that he was not No. 1 man on the list, and that I felt I ought to support the No. 1 man on the list, and then he goes on to point out the case in which I was inconsistent. The only letter I have written to Mr. Perkins I read in full here a moment ago, and anyone who heard it will recall that I said nothing of that kind whatever. I read the letter completely, from start to finish. I told Mr. Perkins that, good citizen as I thought he was, I felt that Mr. Fuhlrodt should be reappointed, because that was the only way to carry out the spirit of the civil service—to keep on the job a good man, who has been giving good service, and not at all because he was No. 1 on the list.

So long as the political element has been brought into this matter by bringing in the national committeeman and his letter, I should like to read a short news items from the Omaha World-Herald of February 11, 1940:

FREMONT IN TANGLE OVER POSTMASTER—VETERAN REPUBLICAN, DEMOCRATIC CHOSEN, MAY BE SUPPLANTED

Fremont Democratic leaders are stymied over the appointment of a postmaster.

They've been in a stew over it for weeks, but their troubles came to a head Friday when National Committeeman James C. Quigley told County Chairman Arthur C. Sidner flatly that the appointment will have to go to a Democrat—or else.

"I'd be violating the confidence of every Democrat in the State as well as the party trust," Quigley was quoted here as having told Sidner.

Sidner is the Democratic county chairman, who recommended the appointment of Mr. Fuhlrodt this year, as well as 4 years ago, joining with former Democratic Representative Dan Stephens.

Here's what the Fremonters are up against: Some time ago the county central committee recommended Frank W. Fuhlrodt, who received his first appointment from Democratic President Woodrow Wilson, but has always been registered as a Republican.

He stayed on through the Harding, Coolidge, Hoover, and Roosevelt administrations.

"SERVICE OR POLITICS?"

"It's just a case of merit, qualification, and satisfactory service being given consideration over ward politics," Sidner explained today.

"The people of Fremont, Democrats and Republicans alike, think Fuhlrodt deserves to continue as postmaster."

As a matter of practical politics, Sidner added, some local party leaders believe the party will gain in public confidence and popularity if qualifications and service are given first consideration.

The same question was raised over recommendation of Fuhlrodt 4 years ago. It was made an issue in the selection of the county central committee. Fuhlrodt's supporters won a vote of confidence then, so felt they were justified in recommending him again.

BURKE BACKS REPUBLICAN

The recommendation was submitted some time ago to Senator EDWARD R. BURKE, who has put his okeh on the county committee's election, forwarded it to Postmaster General Farley.

But, Sidner explains, it seems that National Committeeman Quigley's endorsement also is required by the Postmaster General before a name is submitted for Senate approval.

Friday, Sidner came to Omaha to go over the problem again with Quigley. With "no" for an answer he returned to Fremont, where today he said a new poll may be taken of the county central committee members.

"If they figure there's no use trying to buck Quigley, they may decide to throw the whole thing open to an examination of applicants," he explained today.

However, they did not decide to do so.

I read also a short editorial, following the news item by a few days. The editorial appeared in the Omaha World-Herald of February 13. I read this for the particular edification of my distinguished colleague [Mr. NORRIS], whose stand upon this matter is a great disappointment to me, as I am sure it will be to every lover of civil service in the entire country when his position is known.

FREMONT'S POSTMASTER

Sometime the politicians will have to decide whether postal employees are chosen for their ability to carry the mail or carry a torch.

A lot of people up in Fremont would like to know.

Frank Fuhlrodt has been their postmaster since the Wilson administration. Although nominally a Republican, he was appointed by a Democratic President and has served since under both Democrats and Republicans.

When his term expired recently the county Democratic committee recommended his reappointment. So did Senator BURKE. But National Committeeman Quigley, whose approval also is necessary, said no. He said Mr. Fuhlrodt's record didn't have anything to do with it. He said the appointment would have to go to a practicing Democrat, and that's all there was to it.

Now the whole thing is up in the air and nobody knows whether the job will go to a man who knows how to run the post office or somebody who knows which ballot to ask for on a certain Tuesday morning. The deadlock might go on for years and for all we know the folks in Fremont eventually may have to buy their stamps in Hooper.

Mr. President, one argument has been made which seems to me to be wholly lacking in merit. It was indicated by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and by my colleague [Mr. NORRIS] and others. They see no reason for voting against Mr. Perkins because they say that such a course would not insure that Mr. Fuhlrodt would continue on the job. At least my colleague, as I understood him, said that if he could be sure that by rejecting Mr. Perkins, Mr. Fuhlrodt would be continued as postmaster, he might vote to reject the nomination.

We argued that question a few moments ago. It seems to me as clear as clear can be that Senate action rejecting the nomination of Mr. Perkins would mean exactly that. Certainly Mr. Fuhlrodt would continue to serve as postmaster until some other name might be submitted later; but since it has been made clear that no one is objecting to Mr. Perkins on the ground of lack of qualifications, the clear issue before the nominating authorities would be whether or not they wanted to respect the opinion of the Senate that efficiency and merit should be the sole test in determining what should be done. I have not the slightest doubt in the world that if the Senate today or tomorrow should reject the nomination of Mr. Perkins, when Congress should return in November it would have before it the name of Mr. Fuhlrodt for confirmation.

Let me say to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] and others Senators who may be primarily interested in the political aspect of the matter that I think there would be no better way to stick a dagger in the back—if I may use a famous expression—of those who want to be the friends of this administration and give it credit for speaking the truth when it advocates civil service than to vote, in the light of the facts presented here, to confirm Mr. Perkins. A vote to confirm Mr. Perkins cannot be dissociated from a vote to oust Mr. Fuhlrodt. Any Senator who votes to confirm Mr. Perkins by the same token will be voting to oust a man who the chief post-office inspector says has been a model postmaster for more than 20 years, a man who is now rated, as the result of examination, at almost 100 percent, and whose reappointment and continuance in office are desired by the overwhelming majority of the patrons of that office.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Frank S. Perkins to be postmaster at Fremont, Nebr.? (Putting the question): The Chair is in doubt. Those in favor of confirming the nomination will rise and be counted. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise and be counted.

Mr. BURKE. I ask for the yeas and nays; and, preliminary to that, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination is confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no desire to produce a quorum at this late hour. We will let the matter go over until tomorrow if that is satisfactory to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest that we let the matter go over until tomorrow. We will try to have it disposed of the first thing.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Was the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky acted upon that this matter go over until tomorrow? I could not hear the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BARKLEY. I inquire of the Chair what the parliamentary inquiry was.

Mr. AUSTIN. The inquiry was whether the Chair ruled upon the request of the Senator from Kentucky that this matter go over until tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was not a matter of unanimous consent. The matter may go over, and will go over unless we act on it today.

Mr. BURKE. I have suggested the absence of a quorum; but I am perfectly willing to withhold that suggestion if the matter may go over.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Nebraska suggested the absence of a quorum. I did not want to put the Senate to the trouble of having a quorum at this late hour this afternoon, so I suggested that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair will state that he did not hear the request of the Senator from Kentucky. He put the question as to the confirmation. The vote was counted, and the Chair announced that the nomination was confirmed.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, before any announcement was made from the Chair——

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not hear the Chair's announcement.

Mr. BURKE. Before any announcement was made, I asked for the yeas and nays, and suggested the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is entirely agreeable to have the matter go over until tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not hear the Senator from Nebraska, and had not the faintest idea that he made that sort of a request.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not necessary to ask unanimous consent. I could dispose of the whole matter by moving to take a recess now; but there are one or two other things which would go over if we should not pass on them today. In view of the situation and the lateness of the hour, and the fact that the Senator from Nebraska wants a quorum and a roll call, I think the nomination had better go over.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: Is it not true that since the point of no quorum has been made, the Senate cannot proceed with any other business unless it is agreed that the Senator from Nebraska may withdraw the point of no quorum?

Mr. BURKE. I am willing to withdraw it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest that the Senator withdraw it.

Mr. BURKE. I shall be very glad to withdraw it; but I should like an understanding about the statement made by the Chair that the question was put, and confirmation was ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not hear the announcement. If it was so announced, I ask that the announcement be vacated, in order that we may have a yea-and-nay vote on the nomination tomorrow.

Mr. KING. I desire to say that I counted the votes, too.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky asks that the announcement be vacated, and that the matter go over until tomorrow. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BURKE. I now withdraw the request for a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does that complete the Executive Calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does.

IN THE ARMY

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, earlier in the day the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] reported favorably, from the Committee on Military Affairs, sundry nominations for promotion or transfer in the Regular Army. These nominations are of routine character and because of the large number and the large amount of printing involved, I ask unanimous consent for their present consideration and confirmation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be at once advised of these confirmations, and that the names of the persons confirmed be not again printed, but that proper reference be made to the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on which their nominations appear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done, and the President will be notified.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Indiana whether his request includes the Reserve officers as well as the Regular Army officers.

Mr. MINTON. As I understand, these are only nominations in the Regular Army.

SUSPENSION OF CIVIL LIABILITIES OF CERTAIN PERSONS IN THE ARMED FORCES

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I submit the conference report on Senate bill 4270, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, what is the bill on which the report is submitted?

Mr. OVERTON. This is the conference report on the soldiers' and sailors' civil relief bill, on which the Senator from Vermont was a conferee. There was very little difference between the bills passed by the Senate and by the House, and such differences as there were have been adjusted by unanimous agreement on the part of the conferees.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report, which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4270) to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"That this Act may be cited as the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940.

"ARTICLE I—GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 100. In order to provide for, strengthen, and expedite the national defense under the emergent conditions which are threatening the peace and security of the United States and to enable the United States the more successfully to fulfill the requirements of the national defense, provision is hereby made to suspend enforcement of civil liabilities, in certain cases, of persons in the military service of the United States in order to enable such persons to devote their entire energy to the defense needs of the Nation, and to this end the following provisions are made for the temporary suspension of legal proceedings and transactions which may prejudice the civil rights of persons in such service during the period herein specified over which this act remains in force.

"SEC. 101. (1) The term 'persons in military service' and the term 'persons in the military service of the United States,' as used in this Act, shall include the following persons and no others: All members of the Army of the United States, the United States Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, and all officers of the Public Health Service detailed by proper authority for duty either with the Army or the Navy. The term 'military service', as used in this Act, shall signify Federal service on active duty with any branch of service heretofore referred to or mentioned as well as training or education under the supervision of the United States preliminary to induction into the military service. The terms 'active service' or 'active duty' shall include the period during which a person in military service is absent from duty on account of sickness, wounds, leave, or other lawful cause.

"(2) The term 'period of military service', as used in this Act, shall include the time between the following dates: For persons in active service at the date of the approval of this Act it shall begin with the date of approval of this Act; for persons entering active service after the date of this Act, with the date of entering active service. It shall terminate with the date of discharge from active service or death while in active service, but in no case later than the date when this Act ceases to be in force.

"(3) The term 'person', when used in this Act with reference to the holder of any right alleged to exist against a person in military service or against a person secondarily liable under such right, shall include individuals, partnerships, corporations, and any other forms of business association.

"(4) The term 'court', as used in this Act, shall include any court of competent jurisdiction of the United States or of any State, whether or not a court of record.

"SEC. 102. (1) The provisions of this Act shall apply to the United States, the several States and Territories, the District of Columbia, and all territory subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, including the Philippine Islands while under the sovereignty of the United States, and to proceedings commenced in any court therein, and shall be enforced through the usual forms of procedure obtaining in such courts or under such regulations as may be by them prescribed.

"(2) When under this Act any application is required to be made to a court in which no proceeding has already been commenced with respect to the matter, such application may be made to any court.

"SEC. 103. (1) Whenever pursuant to any of the provisions of this Act the enforcement of any obligation or liability, the prosecution of any suit or proceeding, the entry or enforcement of any order, writ, judgment, or decree, or the performance of any other act, may be stayed, postponed, or suspended, such stay, postponement, or suspension may, in the discretion of the court, likewise be granted to sureties, guarantors, endorsers, and others subject to the obligation or liability, the performance or enforcement of which is stayed, postponed, or suspended.

"(2) When a judgment or decree is vacated or set aside in whole or in part, as provided in this Act, the same may, in the discretion of the court, likewise be set aside and vacated as to any surety guarantor, endorser, or other person liable upon the contract or liability for the enforcement of which the judgment or decree was entered.

"ARTICLE II—GENERAL RELIEF

"SEC. 200. (1) In any action or proceeding commenced in any court, if there shall be a default of any appearance by the defendant, the plaintiff, before entering judgment shall file in the court an affidavit setting forth facts showing that the defendant is not in military service. If unable to file such affidavit plaintiff shall in lieu thereof file an affidavit setting forth either that the defendant is in the military service or that plaintiff is not able to determine whether or not defendant is in such service. If an affidavit is not filed showing that the defendant is not in the military service, no judgment shall be entered without first securing an order of court directing such entry, and no such order shall be made if the defendant is in such service until after the court shall have appointed an attorney to represent defendant and protect his interest, and the court shall on application make such appointment. Unless it appears that the defendant is not in such service the court may require, as a condition before judgment is entered, that the plaintiff file a bond approved by the court conditioned to indemnify the defendant, if in military service, against any loss or damage that he may suffer by reason of any judgment should the judgment be thereafter set aside in whole or in part. And the court may make such other and further order or enter such judgment as in its opinion may be necessary to protect the rights of the defendant under this Act.

"(2) Any person who shall make or use an affidavit required under this section, knowing it to be false, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by imprisonment not to exceed one year or by fine not to exceed $1,000, or both.

"(3) In any action or proceeding in which a person in military service is a party if such party does not personally appear therein or is not represented by an authorized attorney, the court may appoint an attorney to represent him; and in such case a like bond may be required and an order made to protect the rights of such person. But no attorney appointed under this Act to protect a person in military service shall have power to waive any right of the person for whom he is appointed or bind him by his acts.

"(4) If any judgment shall be rendered in any action or proceeding governed by this section against any person in military service during the period of such service or within thirty days thereafter, and it appears that such person was prejudiced by reason of his military service in making his defense thereto, such judgment may, upon application, made by such person or his legal representative, not later than ninety days after the termination of such service, be opened by the court rendering the same and such defendant or his legal representative let in to defend; provided it is made to appear that the defendant has a meritorious or legal defense to the action or some part thereof. Vacating, setting aside, or reversing any judgment because of any of the provisions of this Act shall not impair any right or title acquired by any bona fide purchaser for value under such judgment.

"SEC. 201. At any stage thereof any action or proceeding in any court in which a person in military service is involved, either as plaintiff or defendant, during the period of such service or within sixty days thereafter may, in the discretion of the court in which it is pending, on its own motion, and shall, on application to it by such person or some person on his behalf, be stayed as provided in this Act, unless, in the opinion of the court, the ability of plaintiff to prosecute the action or the defendant to conduct his defense is not materially affected by reason of his military service.

"SEC. 202. When an action for compliance with the terms of any contract is stayed pursuant to this Act no fine or penalty shall accrue by reason of failure to comply with the terms of such contract during the period of such stay, and in any case where a person fails to perform any obligation and a fine or penalty for such nonperformance is incurred a court may, on such terms as may be just, relieve against the enforcement of such fine or penalty if it shall appear that the person who would suffer by such fine or penalty was in the military service when the penalty was incurred and that by reason of such service the ability of such person to pay or perform was thereby materially impaired.

"SEC. 203. In any action or proceeding commenced in any court against a person in military service, before or during the period of such service, or within 60 days thereafter, the court may, in its discretion, on its own motion, or on application to it by such person or some person on his behalf shall, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the defendant to comply with the judgment or order entered or sought is not materially affected by reason of his military service—

"(a) Stay the execution of any judgment or order entered against such person, as provided in this Act; and

"(b) Vacate or stay any attachment or garnishment of property, money, or debts in the hands of another, whether before or after judgment as provided in this Act.

"SEC. 204. Any stay of any action, proceeding, attachment, or execution, ordered by any court under the provisions of this Act may, except as otherwise provided, be ordered for the period of military service and 3 months thereafter or any part of such period, and subject to such terms as may be just, whether as to payment in installments of such amounts and at such times as the court may fix or otherwise. Where the person in military service is a codefendant with others the plaintiff may nevertheless by leave of court proceed against the others.

"SEC. 205. The period of military service shall not be included in computing any period now or hereafter to be limited by any law for the bringing of any action by or against any person in military service or by or against his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, whether such cause of action shall have accrued prior to or during the period of such service.

"ARTICLE III—RENT, INSTALLMENT CONTRACTS, MORTGAGES

"SEC. 300. (1) No eviction or distress shall be made during the period of military service in respect of any premises for which the agreed rent does not exceed $80 per month, occupied chiefly for dwelling purposes by the wife, children, or other dependents of a person in military service, except upon leave of court granted upon application therefor or granted in an action or proceeding affecting the right of possession.

"(2) On any such application or in any such action the court may, in its discretion, on its own motion, and shall, on application, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the tenant to pay the agreed rent is not materially affected by reason of such military service, stay the proceedings for not longer than 3 months, as provided in this Act, or it may make such other order as may be just.

"(3) Any person who shall knowingly take part in any eviction or distress otherwise than as provided in subsection (1) hereof shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punishable by imprisonment not to exceed 1 year or by fine not to exceed $1,000, or both.

"(4) The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, or the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to the Coast Guard, as the case may be, is hereby empowered, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, to order an allotment of the pay of a person in military service in reasonable proportion to discharge the rent of premises occupied for dwelling purposes by the wife, children, or other dependents of such person.

"SEC. 301. (1) No person who prior to the date of approval of this Act has received, or whose assignor has received, under a contract for the purchase of real or personal property, or of lease or bailment with a view to purchase of such property, a deposit or installment of the purchase price from a person or from the assignor of a person who, after the date of payment of such deposit or installment, has entered military service, shall exercise any right or option under such contract to rescind or terminate the contract or resume possession of the property for nonpayment of any installment falling due during the period of such military service, except by action in a court of competent jurisdiction: Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall prevent the modification, termination, or cancelation of any such contract, or prevent the repossession or retention of property purchased or received under such contract, pursuant to a mutual agreement of the parties thereto, or their assignees, if such agreement is executed in writing subsequent to the making of such contract and during or after the period of military service of the person concerned.

"(2) Any person who shall knowingly resume possession of property which is the subject of this section otherwise than as provided in subsection (1) hereof shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by imprisonment not to exceed one year or by fine not to exceed $1,000, or both.

"(3) Upon the hearing of such action the court may order the repayment of prior installments or deposits or any part thereof, as a condition of terminating the contract and resuming possession of the property, or may, in its discretion, on its own motion, and shall, except as provided in section 303, on application to it by such person in military service or some person on his behalf, order a stay of proceedings as provided in this Act unless, in the opinion of the court, the ability of the defendant to comply with the terms of the contract is not materially affected by reason of such service; or it may make such other disposition of the case as may be equitable to conserve the interests of all parties.

"SEC. 302. (1) The provisions of this section shall apply only to obligations originating prior to the date of approval of this Act and secured by mortgage, trust deed, or other security in the nature of a mortgage upon real or personal property owned by a person in military service at the commencement of the period of the military service and still so owned by him.

"(2) In any proceeding commenced in any court during the period of military service to enforce such obligation arising out of nonpayment of any sum thereunder due or out of any other breach of the terms thereof occurring prior to or during the period of such service the court may, after hearing, in its discretion, on its own motion, and shall, except as provided in section 303, on application to it by such person in military service or some person on his behalf, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the defendant to comply with the terms of the obligation is not materially affected by reason of his military service—

"(a) stay the proceedings as provided in this Act; or

"(b) make such other disposition of the case as may be equitable to conserve the interests of all parties.

"(3) No sale under a power of sale or under a judgment entered upon warrant of attorney to confess judgment contained in any such obligation shall be valid if made during the period of military service or within three months thereafter, unless upon an order of sale previously granted by the court and a return thereto made and approved by the court.

"SEC. 303. No court shall stay a proceeding to resume possession of a motor vehicle, tractor, or the accessories of either, or for an order of sale thereof, where said motor vehicle, tractor, or accessories are encumbered by a purchase money mortgage, conditional sales contract, or a lease or bailment with a view to purchase, unless the court shall find that 50 per centum or more of the purchase price of said property has been paid, but in any such proceeding the court may, before entering an order or judgment, require the plaintiff to file a bond, approved by the court, conditioned to indemnify the defendant, if in military service, against any loss or damage that he may suffer by reason of any such judgment or order should the judgment or order be set aside in whole or in part.

"ARTICLE IV—INSURANCE

"SEC. 400. In this article the term "policy' shall include any contract of life insurance on the level premium or legal reserve plan. It shall also include any benefit in the nature of life insurance arising out of membership in any fraternal or beneficial association; the term 'premium' shall include membership dues or assessments in such association, and the date of issuance of policy as herein limited shall refer to the date of admission to membership in such association; the term 'insured' shall include any person who is the holder of a policy as defined in this article; the term 'insurer' shall include any corporation, partnership, or other form of association which secures or provides insurance under any policy as defined in this article.

"SEC. 401. (1) The benefits of this article shall apply to any person in military service who is the holder of a policy of life insurance, when such holder shall apply for such benefits on a form prepared in accordance with regulations which shall be prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. Such form shall set forth particularly that the application therein made is a consent to such modification of the terms of the original contract of insurance as are made necessary by the provisions of this article and by receiving and filing the same the insurer shall be deemed to have assented thereto, to the extent, if any, to which the policy on which the application is made is within the provisions of this article. The original of such application shall be sent by the insured to the insurer, and a copy thereof to the Veterans' Administration.

"(2) The Veterans' Administration shall issue through suitable military and naval channels a notice for distribution by appropriate military and naval authorities to persons in the military service explaining the provisions of this article and shall furnish forms to be distributed to those desiring to make application for its benefits.

"SEC. 402. The benefits of this Act shall be available to any person in military service in respect of contracts of insurance in force under their terms up to but not exceeding a face value of $5,000, irrespective of the number of policies held by such person whether in one or more companies, when such contracts were made and a premium was paid thereon before the date of approval of this Act or not less than thirty days before entry into the military service; but in no event shall the provisions of this article apply to any policy on which premiums are due and unpaid for a period of more than one year at the time when application for the benefits of this article is made or in respect of any policy on which there is outstanding a policy loan or other indebtedness equal to or greater than 50 per centum of the cash surrender value of the policy.

"SEC. 403. The Veterans' Administration shall, subject to regulations, which shall be prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, compile and maintain a list of such persons in military service as have made application for the benefits of this article, and shall (1) reject any application for such benefits made by persons who are not persons in military service; (2) reject any applications for such benefits in excess of the amount permitted by section 402; and (3) reject any applications in respect of contracts of insurance otherwise not entitled to the benefits of this article. Said Administration shall immediately notify the insurer and the insured in writing of every rejection or approval.

"SEC. 404. When one or more applications are made under this article by any one person in military service in respect of insurance exceeding a total face value of $5,000, whether on one or more policies or in one or more companies, and the insured shall not in his application indicate an order of preference, the Veterans' Administration shall reject such policies as have the inferior cash surrender value, so as to reduce the total benefits conferred within the face value of $5,000, and where necessary for this purpose shall direct the insurer to divide any policy into two separate policies. The said Administration shall immediately notify the insurer and the insured in writing of such selection.

"SEC. 405. No policy which has not lapsed for the nonpayment of premium before the commencement of the period of military service of the insured, and which has been brought within the benefits of this article, shall lapse or be forfeited for the nonpayment of premium during the period of such service or during one year after the expiration of such period: Provided, That in no case shall this prohibition extend for more than one year after the date when this Act ceases to be in force.

"SEC. 406. Within the first fifteen days of each calendar month after the date of approval of this Act until the expiration of one year after the date when this Act ceases to be in force every insurance corporation or association to which application has been made as herein provided, for the benefits of this article, shall render to the Veterans' Administration a report, duly verified, setting forth the following facts:

"First. The names of the persons who have applied for such benefits, and the face value of the policies in respect of which such benefits have been applied for by such persons, during the preceding calendar month.

"Second. A list as far as practicable of the premiums in respect of policies entitled to the benefits of this article, which remain unpaid on the last day of the preceding calendar month, which day is at least thirty-one days after the due date of the premiums, provided such premiums have not previously been so reported as in default.

"Third. A list of premiums which, having been previously reported as in default, have been paid by the policyholder or someone on his behalf in whole or in part during the preceding calendar month.

"Fourth. A computation of the difference between the total amount of defaulted premiums therein reported and the total amount of premiums paid as therein reported, after having been previously reported as in default. From this sum shall be deducted the total sum of any premiums previously reported as in default, upon policies in respect of which the Veterans' Administration has, since the date of such report, rejected an application for the benefits of this article. The final sum so arrived at shall be denominated the monthly difference.

"SEC. 407. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall verify the computation of monthly difference reported by each insurer and shall, within ten days thereafter, deliver each month to the proper officer of such insurer, a certificate in the amount of the monthly difference certified in respect of each insurer. Such certificate shall be signed by said Administrator in the name of the United States, shall be in such form as the Administrator shall determine, shall be payable to the insurer within sixty days after the approval of the statement of account, as provided in section 411 hereof, and shall bear interest at a rate to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, payable with the principal. Such certificate shall not be transferred except with the approval of said Administrator and shall remain with the insurer until settlement is made in accordance with this article.

"SEC. 408. The certificate so delivered shall be held by the respective insurers as security for the payment of the defaulted premiums with interest. To indemnify it against loss the United States shall have a first lien upon any policy receiving the benefits of this article, subject only to any lien existing at the time the policy became subject to this Act, and no loan or settlement or payment of dividend shall be made by the insurer on such policy which may prejudice the security of such lien. Before any dividend is paid or any loan or settlement is made the written consent of the Veterans' Administration must be obtained.

"SEC. 409. In the event that the military service of any person being the holder of a policy receiving the benefits of this article shall be terminated by death, the amount of any unpaid premiums, with interest at the rate provided for in the policy for policy loans, shall be deducted from the proceeds of the policy and shall be included in the next monthly report of the insurer as premiums paid.

"SEC. 410. If the insured does not within one year after the termination of his period of military service pay to the insurer all past due premiums with interest thereon from their several due dates at the rate provided in the policy for policy loans, the policy shall at the end of such year immediately lapse and become void, and the insurer shall thereupon become liable to pay the cash surrender value thereof, if any: Provided, That if the insured is in the military service when this Act ceases to be in force, such lapse shall occur and surrender value be payable at the expiration of one year after the date when this Act ceases to be in force.

"SEC. 411. At the expiration of one year after the date when this Act ceases to be in force there shall be an account stated between each insurer and the United States, in which there shall be credited to the insurer the total amount of the certificates held as security under this article, together with accrued interest to the date of the account, and in which there shall be credited to the United States the amount of the cash surrender value of each policy lapsed or forfeited as provided in section 410, but not in any case a greater amount on any policy than the total of the unpaid premiums with interest thereon at the rate provided for in the policy for policy loans.

"SEC. 412. The balance in favor of the insurer in each case shall be certified by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall pay to the insurer the amount thereof, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon the surrender by the insurer of the certificates delivered to it from time to time by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs under the provisions of this article.

"SEC. 413. This article shall not apply to any policy which is void or which may at the option of the insured be voidable, if the insured is in military service, either in this country or abroad, nor to any policy which as a result of being in military service, either in this country or abroad, provides for the payment of any sum less than the face thereof or for the payment of an additional amount as premium.

"SEC. 414. This article shall apply only to insurance companies or associations which are required by the law under which they are organized or doing business to maintain a reserve, or, which if not so required, have made or shall make provision for the collection from all those insured in such insurer of a premium to cover the special war risk of those insured persons who are in military service.

"ARTICLE V—TAXES AND PUBLIC LANDS

"SEC. 500. (1) The provisions of this section shall apply when any taxes or assessments, whether general or special, falling due during the period of military service in respect of real property owned and occupied for dwelling, agricultural, or business purposes by a person in military service or his dependents at the commencement of his period of military service and still so occupied by his dependents or employees are not paid.

"(2) When any person in military service, or any person in his behalf, shall file with the collector of taxes, or other officer whose duty it is to enforce the collection of taxes or assessments, an affidavit showing (a) that a tax or assessment has been assessed upon property which is the subject of this section, (b) that such tax or assessment is unpaid, and (c) that by reason of such military service the ability of such person to pay such tax or assessment is materially affected, no sale of such property shall be made to enforce the collection of such tax or assessment, or any proceeding or action for such purpose commenced, except upon leave of court granted upon an application made therefor by such collector or other officer. The court thereupon may stay such proceedings or such sale, as provided in this Act, for a period extending not more than six months after the termination of the period of military service of such person.

"(3) When by law such property may be sold or forfeited to enforce the collection of such tax or assessment, such person in military service shall have the right to redeem or commence an action to redeem such property, at any time not later than six months after the termination of such service, but in no case later than six months after the date when this Act ceases to be in force; but this shall not be taken to shorten any period, now or hereafter provided by the laws of any State or Territory for such redemption.

"(4) Whenever any tax or assessment shall not be paid when due, such tax or assessment due and unpaid shall bear interest until paid at the rate of 6 per centum per annum, and no other penalty or interest shall be incurred by reason of such nonpayment. Any lien for such unpaid taxes or assessment shall also include such interest thereon.

"(5) The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall make provision in such manner as each may deem appropriate for his respective department, to insure the giving of notice to persons in the military service under their respective jurisdictions, of the benefits accorded by this section and the action made necessary to claim those benefits in each case.

"SEC. 501. (1) No right to any lands owned or controlled by the United States initiated or acquired under any laws of the United States including the mining and mineral leasing laws, by any person prior to entering military service shall during the period of such service be forfeited or prejudiced by reason of his absence from the land or his failure to perform any work or make any improvements thereon or his failure to do any other act required by or under such laws.

"(2) If a permittee or licensee under the Act of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), enters military service, he may elect to suspend his permit or license for the period of his military service and six months thereafter, and the Secretary of the Interior by regulations shall provide for such suspension of permits and licenses and for the remission, reduction, or refund of grazing fees during such suspension.

"(3) This section shall not be construed to control specific requirements contained in this article.

"SEC. 502. If any person whose application for a homestead entry has been allowed or who has made application for homestead entry which may thereafter be allowed, after such entry or application enters military service, or if any person who has a valid settlement claim enters military service, the Department of the Interior shall construe his military service to be equivalent to residence and cultivation upon the tract entered or settled upon for the period of such service. From the effective date of this Act no contest shall be initiated on the ground of abandonment and no allegation of abandonment shall be sustained against any such person, unless it shall be alleged in the preliminary affidavit or affidavits of contest and proved at the hearing in cases initiated subsequent to the effective date of this Act that the alleged absence from the land was not due to such military service. If such person is discharged on account of wounds received or disability incurred in the line of duty, the term of his enlistment and any period of hospitalization due to such wounds or disability shall be deducted from the required length of residence, without reference to the time of actual service. No patent shall issue to any such person who has not resided upon, improved, and cultivated his homestead for a period of at least one year.

"SEC. 503. (1) If any person whose application for a homestead entry has been allowed or who has made application for homestead entry which may thereafter be allowed or who has a valid settlement claim dies while in military service or as a result of such service, his widow, if unmarried, or in the case of her death or marriage, his minor children, or his or their legal representatives, may proceed forthwith to make final proof upon such entry or upon an application which is allowed after the applicant's death, or upon a homestead application thereafter allowed based on a valid settlement claim, and shall be entitled to receive a patent for such land. The death of such person while in military service or as a result of such service shall be construed to be equivalent to a performance of all requirements as to residence and cultivation upon such homestead or claim, notwithstanding the provisions of section 502 of this Act.

"(2) If such person is honorably discharged and because of physical incapacities due to such service is unable to return to the land, he may make final proof without further residence, improvement, or cultivation, at such time and place as the Secretary of the Interior may authorize, and receive a patent to the land entered.

"(3) The Act of July 28, 1917 (40 Stat. 248), is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 504. (1) No desert-land entry made or held under the desert-land laws prior to the entrance of the entryman or his successor in interest into military service shall be subject to contest or cancelation for failure to make or expend the sum of $1 per acre per year in improvements upon the claim or to effect the reclamation of the claim during the period the entryman or his successor in interest is engaged in military service or during a period of six months thereafter or during any period of hospitalization because of wounds or disability incurred in the line of duty. The time within which such entryman or claimant is required to make such expenditures and effect reclamation of the land shall be exclusive of his period of service and the six-months' period and any such period of hospitalization.

"(2) If such entryman or claimant is honorably discharged and because of physical incapacities due to such service is unable to accomplish reclamation of, and payment for, the land, he may make proof without further reclamation or payments under such rules as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe and receive patent for the land entered or claimed.

"(3) In order to obtain the benefits of this section, such entryman or claimant shall, within six months after the effective date of this Act or within six months after his entrance into military service, file or cause to be filed in the land office of the district in which his claim is situated a notice that he has entered military service and that he desires to hold the desert claim under this section.

"SEC. 505. (1) The provisions of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which require that on each mining claim located after May 10, 1872, and until patent has been issued therefor not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year, shall not apply during the period of his service, or until six months after the termination of such service, or during any period of hospitalization because of wounds or disability incurred in line of duty, to claims or interests in claims which are owned by a person in military service and which have been regularly located and recorded. No mining claim or any interest in a claim which is owned by such a person and which has been regularly located and recorded shall be subject to forfeiture by nonperformance of the annual assessments during the period of such military service, or until six months after the termination of such service or of such hospitalization.

"(2) In order to obtain the benefits of this section, the claimant of any mining location shall, before the expiration of the assessment year during which he enters military service, file or cause to be filed in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded a notice that he has entered such service and that he desires to hold his mining claim under this section.

"SEC. 506. (1) Any person holding a permit or lease on the public domain under the Federal mineral leasing laws who enters military service may, at his election, suspend all operations under his permit or lease for a period of time equivalent to the period of his military service and six months thereafter. The term of the permit or lease shall not run during such period of suspension nor shall any rentals or royalties be charged against the permit or lease during the period of suspension.

"(2) In order to obtain the benefit of this section, such permittee or lessee shall, within six months after the effective date of this Act or six months after his entrance into military service, notify the General Land Office by registered mail of his entrance into such service and of his desire to avail himself of the benefits of this section.

"(3) This section shall not be construed to supersede the terms of any contract for operation of a permit or lease.

"SEC. 507. Nothing in this article shall be construed to limit or affect the right of a person in military service to take any action during his period of service which may be authorized by law or the regulations of the Department of the Interior for the perfection, defense, or further assertion of rights initiated or acquired prior to the date of entering military service. It shall be lawful for any person while in such service to make any affidavit or submit any proof which may be required by law or the practice or regulations of the General Land Office in connection with the entry, perfection, defense, or further assertion of any rights initiated or acquired prior to entering such service, before the officer in immediate command and holding a commission in the branch of the service in which the person is engaged. Such affidavits shall be as binding in law and with like penalties as if taken before a register of a United States land office. The Secretary of the Interior may issue rules and regulations to effectuate the purposes of sections 501 to 512, inclusive.

"SEC. 508. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to suspend as to persons in military service during the period while this Act remains in force and for a period of six months thereafter or during any period of hospitalization because of wounds or disability incurred in line of duty that provision of the act known as the 'Reclamation Act' requiring residence upon lands in private ownership or within the neighborhood for securing water for the irrigation of the same, and he is authorized to permit the use of available water thereon upon such terms and conditions as he may deem proper.

"SEC. 509. The Secretary of the Interior shall issue through appropriate military and naval channels a notice for distribution by appropriate military and naval authorities to persons in the military service explaining the provisions of this article except as to section 500 hereof and shall furnish forms to be distributed in like manner to those desiring to make application for its benefits, except as to said section.

"Ses. 510. (1) During the pendency of any war in which the United States may be engaged while this Act remains in force any homestead entryman shall be entitled to a leave of absence from his entry for the purpose of performing farm labor. The time actually spent in farm labor shall be counted as constructive residence, if within fifteen days after leaving his entry to engage in such labor the entryman files a notice of absence in the land office of the district in which his entry is situated, and if at the expiration of the calendar year the entryman files in that office a written statement under oath and corroborated by two witnesses giving the date or dates when he left his entry, the date or dates of his return, and the place where and person for whom he was engaged in farm labor during such period or periods of absence.

"(2) Nothing in this section shall excuse any homestead entryman from making improvements or performing the cultivation upon his entry required by law. The provisions of this section shall apply only to persons whose applications have been allowed or filed prior to the effective date of this Act.

"SEC. 511. Any person under the age of twenty-one who serves in the military service while this Act remains in force shall be entitled to the same rights under the laws relating to lands owned or controlled by the United States, including the mining and mineral leasing laws, as those over twenty-one now possess under such laws. Any requirements as to establishment of residence within a limited time shall be suspended as to entry by such person until six months after his discharge from military service. Applications for entry may be verified before any officer in the United States or any foreign country authorized to administer oaths by the laws of the State or Territory in which the land may be situated.

"SEC. 512. Citizens of the United States who serve with the forces of any nation with which the United States may be allied in the prosecution of any war in which the United States engages while this Act remains in force shall be entitled to the relief and benefits afforded by this article, if such service is similar to military service as defined in this Act, and if they are honorably discharged and resume United States citizenship or die in the service of the allied forces or as a result of such service.

"SEC. 513. The collection from any person in the military service of any tax on the income of such person, whether falling due prior to or during his period of military service, shall be deferred for a period extending not more than six months after the termination of his period of military service if such person's ability to pay such tax is materially impaired by reason of such service. No interest on any amount of tax, collection of which is deferred for any period under this section, and no penalty for nonpayment of such amount during such period, shall accrue for such period of deferment by reason of such nonpayment. The running of any statute of limitations against the collection of such tax by distraint or otherwise shall be suspended for the period of military service of any individual the collection of whose tax is deferred under this section, and for an additional period of nine months beginning with the day following the period of military service. The provisions of this section shall not apply to the income tax on employees imposed by section 1400 of the Federal Insurance Contributions Act.

"ARTICLE VI—ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES

"SEC. 600. Where in any proceeding to enforce a civil right in any court it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that any interest, property, or contract has since the date of the approval of this Act been transferred or acquired with intent to delay the just enforcement of such right by taking advantage of this Act, the court shall enter such judgment or make such order as might lawfully be entered or made, the provisions of this Act to the contrary notwithstanding.

"SEC. 601. (1) In any proceeding under this Act a certificate signed by The Adjutant General of the Army as to persons in the Army or in any branch of the United States service while serving pursuant to law with the Army of the United States, signed by the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department as to persons in the United States Navy or in any other branch of the United States service while serving pursuant to law with the United States Navy, and signed by the Major General Commandant, United States Marine Corps, as to persons in the Marine Corps, or in any other branch of the United States service while serving pursuant to law with the Marine Corps, or signed by an officer designated by any of them, respectively, for the purpose, shall when produced be prima facie evidence as to any of the following facts stated in such certificate:

"That a person named has not been, or is, or has been in military service; the time when and the place where such person entered military service, his residence at that time, and the rank, branch, and unit of such service that he entered, the dates within which he was in military service, the monthly pay received by such person at the date of issuing the certificate, the time when and the place where such person died in or was discharged from such service.

"(2) It shall be the duty of the foregoing officers to furnish such certificate on application, and any such certificate when purporting to be signed by any one of such officers or by any person purporting upon the face of the certificates to have been so authorized shall be prima facie evidence of its contents and of the authority of the signer to issue the same.

"(3) Where a person in military service has been reported missing he shall be presumed to continue in the service until accounted for, and no period herein limited which begins or ends with the death of such person shall begin or end until the death of such person is in fact reported to or found by the Department of War or Navy, or any court or board thereof, or until such death is found by a court of competent jurisdiction: Provided, That no period herein limited which begins or ends with the death of such person shall be extended hereby beyond a period of six months after the time when this Act ceases to be in force.

"SEC. 602. Any interlocutory order made by any court under the provisions of this Act may, upon the court's own motion or otherwise, be revoked, modified, or extended by it upon such notice to the parties affected as it may require.

"SEC. 603. If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 604. This Act shall remain in force until May 15, 1945: Provided, That should the United States be then engaged in a war, this Act shall remain in force until such war is terminated by a treaty of peace proclaimed by the President and for six months thereafter: Provided further, That wherever under any section or provision of this Act a proceeding, remedy, privilege, stay, limitation, accounting, or other transaction has been authorized or provided with respect to military service performed prior to the date herein fixed for the termination of this Act, such section or provision shall be deemed to continue in full force and effect so long as may be necessary to the exercise or enjoyment of such proceeding, remedy, privilege, stay, limitation, accounting, or other transaction.

"SEC. 605. The provisions of section 4 of the Joint Resolution approved August 27, 1940 (Public Resolution Numbered 96, Seventy-sixth Congress), and the provisions of section 13 of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, shall not be applicable with respect to any military service performed after the date of enactment of this Act."

And the House agree to the same.

ELBERT D. THOMAS,
JOHN H. OVERTON,
WARREN R. AUSTIN,
CHAN GURNEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. J. MAY,
R. E. THOMASON,
JOHN M. COSTELLO,
L. C. ARENDS,
FOREST A. HARNESS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

LANDS OF THE AGUA CALIENTE OR PALM SPRINGS RESERVATION, CALIF.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, as in legislative session, laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7738) to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease or sell certain lands of the Agua Caliente or Palm Springs Reservation, Calif., for public airport use, and for other purposes," and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BARKLEY. On behalf of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. FRAZIER conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

The PRESIDING OFFICER, as in legislative session, laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives insisting upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the message brought over from the House a little while ago announcing the rejection of the conference report on House bill 960, the civil-service bill, on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a further conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. MEAD, Mr. BULOW, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. FRAZIER conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, October 8, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

(NOTE.—The names of the persons whose nominations for promotion, or transfer, in the Regular Army were today confirmed by the Senate will be found, under the caption "Nominations," in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of October 4, 1940, beginning on p. 13217.)

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord God, we wait at the altar of prayer. As we recall Thy love and mercy, let these moments be the soul's sublimest mood and its most eloquent speech. O Man of Galilee, Be Thou our teacher, our happy guest, and our quiet visitor today, always the same in heart and purpose. The wise plans which we took up with so much ardor and enthusiasm, may they not be cast aside. Those high hopes, cherished and born by such fond ambitions, those resolutions so sincerely formed, those vows which we made on bended knee, grant dear Lord that they may not be neglected, while the world holds sway round about us and they become life's sorrowing retrospect. With the spirit of a seraph, open our ears to the melodies of Nature and our eyes to catch the beatific vision: "The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth His handiwork." Every star is aflame with glory; every bush, like that at Horeb, is a tongue of fire, and the sound of many waters is the voice of the Lord. Heavenly Father, this human life, throbbing, eager, and feverish with its mingled lights and shadows, joys and sorrows, dreams and disillusions; with its pathos and laughter, is out of harmony with the divine will. O Thou who knowest the human heart, still its noblest passions until its emotions are resolved into the deeds of the Christ life. In His holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, October 4, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 9654. An act to extend for an additional year the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937 and the taxes with respect to sugar; and

H. R. 10518. An act granting the consent of Congress to the department of highways and the county of Big Stone, State of Minnesota, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Whetstone Diversion Channel at or near Ortonville, Minn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2753. An act to amend part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, with respect to the use of refrigerator cars; and

S. 4249. An act for the relief of the widows of the late George A. Meffan and John Glenn.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10539) entitled "An act making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10094) entitled "An act to require the registration of certain organizations carrying on activities within the United States, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9972) entitled "An act authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BAILEY, Mr. SHEPPARD, and Mr. JOHNSON of California to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10412) entitled "An act to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. TRUMAN, and Mr. HALE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 844. An act to simplify the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States, and for other purposes.

THE LATE HONORABLE HEARTSILL RAGON

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound regret that I rise to announce to my colleagues the sudden death on September 15, 1940, of Judge Heartsill Ragon, of Fort Smith, Ark., a former member of this body and my predecessor as Representative from the Fifth Arkansas District.

Heartsill Ragon was born in Logan County, Ark., in 1885; was educated at Clarksville High School, College of the Ozarks, University of Arkansas, and Washington and Lee University. He began the practice of law at Clarksville immediately after his graduation from Washington and Lee. He represented Johnson County in the State legislature for two terms, 1911 to 1913, and he was elected district attorney for the fifth judicial district of Arkansas for two terms, 1916 to 1920.

He was elected to the Sixty-eighth, Sixty-ninth, Seventieth, Seventy-first, Seventy-second, and Seventy-third Congresses. While in the House he served on the Ways and Means Committee, ranking next to Chairman DOUGHTON, and I am informed that he was one of the leading members of that committee and wielded a powerful influence in the formation of its policies.

In the spring of 1933, Mr. Ragon resigned from Congress to accept an appointment from President Roosevelt as judge of the Federal court for the western district of Arkansas. During his 7 years' service on the bench he made an outstanding record for his knowledge of the law, and his fair and impartial handling of all litigation in his court.

I am informed that at the time of his death Judge Ragon was being favorably considered for promotion to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth United States Circuit to fill a vacancy in that court.

In 1916, Judge Ragon married Miss Mattie Smith, of Dumas, Ark., one son, Heartsill Ragon, Jr., being born to the union.

Judge Ragon was a brilliant speaker, a keen debater, and a strong advocate of whatever cause he espoused. I am informed that he had the confidence and friendship of all Members on both sides of the aisle, and it was freely predicted that his leadership qualities would have carried him far in the event he had chosen to remain in the Congress.

His family life was ideal and he was a valuable citizen in the community wherein he lived. Having been a poor boy himself and having come up the hard way, he was always untiring in his efforts to help the youth of his community. He was very active in promoting a boys' club for the underprivileged boys in Fort Smith and was mainly instrumental in the success of the drive for funds for its construction.

In the death of Judge Ragon the State of Arkansas lost a fine citizen and the United States an able judge. I am sure that the House joins with the Arkansas delegation in expressing to the members of his family its sorrow at the untimely passing of this good and great man.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I join with the Arkansas delegation in expressing keen regret in the death of our late friend and former colleague, Judge Heartsill Ragon.

It was my pleasure as a new Member of the House 12 years ago to have an office next door to the late Judge Ragon. During the several years he was in Congress, after my election to this body, he took a very close personal interest in me, and between us there developed a strong friendship, one that I regret to see terminated by the early and unfortunate death of my late friend.

My late friend was one of the outstanding Members of this body, one of the strongest members of the Ways and Means Committee, one who loved his membership in this body, and one who made his mark in the Halls of Congress. It is with great regret that I learned of the death of my late friend, and I know that all Members in this body who served with the late Judge Ragon join with the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] and myself in expressing our keen regrets upon his death, and in conveying to Mrs. Ragon and to his relatives our sincere feelings of sympathy in their great loss and sorrow.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to add a few words, on behalf of the Republican minority of the Ways and Means Committee, in tribute to the memory of the late Heartsill Ragon, of Arkansas, who was formerly an honored and valuable member of our committee.

Judge Ragon was loved and respected by all who knew him. He was a conscientious legislator, a profound student of government, and he served his country with fidelity and industry. Above all, he was a true gentleman.

Our late colleague became a member of the Ways and Means Committee at the opening of the second session of the Seventieth Congress in December 1928 and soon distinguished himself as an expert in the difficult science of taxation. When, in 1933, he resigned his seat in the House to accept appointment as a Federal judge he was one of the ranking members on the Democratic side of the committee. Had he continued in the service of this body he would be next in line for the chairmanship of that great committee and perhaps might have received even higher honors at the hands of his Democratic colleagues.

I am sure I speak for every member of the Republican minority, both of the Ways and Means Committee and of the House, when I say we are saddened by the untimely death of our late colleague, whom we had learned to love so well.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The Speaker. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to me to join with the members of the Arkansas delegation and other colleagues in raising my voice in brief tribute to the life, character, and public service of the late Honorable Heartsill Ragon, of Arkansas. It was my privilege to serve with him here for several years before his voluntary retirement, and also to be a member of the Ways and Means Committee during part of his period of service there.

He was a man who possessed the highest attributes of Christian character, all of the sterling qualities of manhood; a man of great ability, of demonstrated devotion to public service, a very accomplished legislator; a man who made an outstanding record as a Member of the House of Representatives and who later distinguished himself as an eminent jurist. I feel confident that all Members of this body join in the expression of very deep regret at his untimely passing and convey heartfelt sympathy to his widow and the members of his family.

It is with regret that our distinguished chairman the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] is unavoidably detained and not permitted to be present at this time, as I am confident that he would like to pay tribute to Mr. Ragon and will doubtless do so at a later date.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. NORRELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I was too much of a friend of Judge Ragon in his lifetime to permit this opportunity to pass without adding something to what has already been said. In addition to being a great judge, a very able lawyer, one of the outstanding Congressmen in the Nation when he was a Member of this body, and in addition to being one of the finest Federal judges of the Nation, soon in line for promotion, he was a Christian gentleman; and I have lost a very fine friend.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOEHNE asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a communication from Mr. Bledsoe, a resident of Mississippi to the dean of the department of agriculture of the University of Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement entitled "Some Observations on the Farm Program."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McKEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein some valid and patriotic reasons why President Roosevelt should be elected for a third term.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to include in my remarks a recent ruling of the Comptroller General regarding longevity pay of the National Guard.

[Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts addressed the House. Her remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

REGISTRATION OF CERTAIN ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I file a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 10094) to require registration of certain organizations carrying on activities within the United States, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

TRANSFER OF ARLINGTON FARM

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I file a conference report and statement on the bill (S. 4107) to transfer the jurisdiction of the Arlington Farm, Va., to the jurisdictions of the War Department and the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a Nation-wide broadcast on the subject, The Midwest and the National Defense Program, which I made from Washington, D. C., over the blue network of the National Broadcasting Co., on Saturday night, October 5, 1940.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

AN INVITATION TO COLORADO

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to use this minute to invite you and your friends to visit the Rocky Mountain National Park in Colorado. Colorado is the highest State in the Union, having 70 mountain peaks over 14,000 feet; skiing in winter, trout fishing and snowballing in the summer; hotel rates and cabins to suit everyone's purse.

This park was visited by 628,000 people this year, and 183,585 automobiles had checked through the park when the season closed. You can reach the park and go through, attaining elevations of 12,000 feet on hard-surfaced roads, without shifting gears.

The village of Estes Park is the principal port of entrance from the east. It has a chamber of commerce of whom Mr. L. H. Kittell is secretary. Write him to obtain literature and I am sure you will visit us.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein some letters and an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article from the Atlantic City Press.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Members of the Arkansas delegation may have 5 days within which to extend their remarks on the life, character, and public service of Judge Heartsill Ragon.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on three different subjects.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to call the attention of the House for a moment to the fact that I am putting in the RECORD of today's date my ideas concerning the Bridges case. I call attention to it because I am one of the few who voted against the resolution to banish Bridges. I am setting out in these extensions my personal feelings and opinions in the matter. I am doing the best I can with the aid of two splendid young lawyers in the Government service to present the legal side which I believe deserves the attention of every lawyer here, and I hope the moral support of all those who are not lawyers.

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROUTZOHN]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. ROUTZOHN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in two particulars, first on the subject of drydocks in New York, and second, on the subject of the colored race.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ANDERSON]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short article from La Follette's Progressive magazine by Richard N. Newberger in reference to Wendell Willkie and public power.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on two different subjects.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include an article from the Chicago Journal of Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILLIE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEHRMANN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

WENDELL WILLKIE AND THE STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROSS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, Wendell Willkie has been through Pennsylvania and the crowds could only be estimated by the acre, but is there any wonder? Under the conscription law the President now has absolute control of the Army and Navy, absolute control of the currency and the value thereof, and control of the $22,000,000,000 of gold at Fort Knox, and the absolute control of industry. He can take over the industry of every political enemy of the New Deal without notice or court procedure. I am afraid that law is going to be enforced like the income-tax law, only on political enemies. Wallace is a still more dangerous man. Where will the President stop? Now he is calling on the people to purge Congress of all Members who do not blow through his whistle. I want to tell you that the way the people are coming out and following Wendell Willkie is evidence of how this country feels with reference to the way the President is acting. Considering or comparing the above-named powers with those of Stalin, Hitler, or Mussolini, I am asking this House what is the difference? The dictators annihilate those who have the courage to disagree. The President eliminates by the purge. When will he change his ways or his mind? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] asks unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the only reason I made that request was to get a definite ruling on it. I know they have been doing it all morning.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen who speak with reference to deceased Members are the only ones who are granted that permission.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; I did not mean that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. No one has made that request and received that permission this morning that the Chair knows anything about. At least, if he did, his voice was so weak that the Chair did not hear him, or else the Chair would have made the same ruling he makes in the case of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am not complaining of any discrimination at all, but I just understood the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. KELLER] to get by with that kind of a request just a moment ago.

Mr. KELLER. What request?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Extending his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. He did, but not "at this point."

Mr. HOFFMAN. "At this point"?

Mr. KELLER. No.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to address the House for 1 minute?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No. I will put it in the RECORD later in the day.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio, Mr. BENDER, and Mr. SHANLEY asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. RISK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech delivered by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SANDAGER].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article from the Coast Guard magazine.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by me before the local lodge of the National Grange at Lowville, N. Y.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in two different instances on the same subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein several brief quotations supporting my statements.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

REPUBLICAN CONFERENCE

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that immediately following the adjournment of the House this afternoon a Republican conference will be held in this Chamber, and I hope everyone can be present.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF], chairman of the Republican caucus, has just given notice that a Republican conference or caucus—I think a caucus—will be held this afternoon. To show that I am not unfriendly to my Republican colleagues, may I suggest to them that they consider bringing before the people the accomplishments of the Republican Party under Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover. [Applause.]

REPUBLICAN ACCOMPLISHMENTS 1921–33

I appreciate your applause. That encourages me, unless you may prefer the people of this Nation to forget, to relate some of the outstanding accomplishments during the administration of Presidents Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover. I want to recall that unforgettable period, 1921–33, when you Republicans had in your power the reigns of this Government, and the fate of our people. Those were days of the festive Harding, of silent Cal, and of the great engineer.

Here, then, are some of your Republican achievements:

First. Taxes were reduced for all burdened with incomes of $50,000 per year or more.

Second. More than $3,000,000,000 of income tax was refunded those oppressed with inordinate riches, like the Mellons, du Ponts, Rockefellers, monopolistic corporations, and others.

Third. The Smoot-Hawley tariff bill was enacted to favor home industry. Its effect was to reduce our foreign markets almost to nothing; it estranged our friends throughout South America; it disrupted the economy of continental Europe and helped bring to power Mussolini and Hitler; it bolstered our pride and brought upon us, and the world, the severest depression of all time.

Fourth. The League of Nations was wrecked. That statesman Borah and his abetters thought their wisdom of foreign affairs supreme. Unlike the insect which knows enough to emerge from its cocoon, to fulfill its destiny in this world, they cajoled us back into our shell.

Fifth. The Kellogg treaty was ratified and $100,000,000 worth of warships scrapped. The little yellow man who struts laughed and strutted bigger.

Sixth. The merchant marine, our second line of naval defense, was relegated to the scrap heap.

Seventh. Surplus naval oil was trafficked away during significant night cabals of Daugherty, Fall, and others in the little green house in Washington for the contents of a certain black bag.

Eighth. The stock exchange was encouraged to issue unheard amounts of watered paper. The wizards of finance were given governmental benediction. Like Midas, by touch, the Mellons, Whitneys, Insulls, Willkies, and their kind turned every scrap into gold certificates.

Ninth. The masses were invited into sacred fellowship of Wall Street. With camaraderie of bandits they were traded worthless engravings for savings. There was to be no end of profits—on paper.

Tenth. It was a new golden era. The abundant life flourished everywhere. Business was dying off, jobs rapidly were growing fewer. But Hoover promised a chicken for every pot and two cars for each garage.

Eleventh. The deficit was only $7,000,000,000.

Twelfth. Then the bubble broke and leadership abdicated.

Thirteenth. The financial wizards lost their heads; banks lost their assets; insurance companies lost their hautier; big business lost its arrogance; millions lost their jobs and other millions their savings; wheat, corn, and other agricultural products, cattle and hogs sold for one-fourth their present-day price, potatoes in carloads were not worth their freight; veterans were chased from Washington with bayonets; homes lost their values, soup-kitchens and bread lines became the style.

Fourteenth. And, Mr. Hoover announced:

> The emergencies of unemployment have been met by action in many directions * * * the time is ripe for forward action to expedite recovery.

He decided to—> put some steel beams in the foundations of our credit structure

Albeit—

> we do not require more money or working capital

Because—

> our currency and bank deposits are protected by the greatest gold reserve in history * * *.

Yet, 9,000 banks were found insolvent before Mr. Hoover vacated the national ruin.

Fifteenth. Under such conditions Mr. Roosevelt took over to perform a Herculean task.

Up to now, my Republican friends have said very little about that 12-year record under Presidents Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover, but have devoted themselves to childish fault-finding with President Roosevelt's humanitarian policies. However, I must not ignore the fact that many of you gentlemen have voted for most of them, and that even your candidate for the Presidency, Wendell Willkie, has endorsed nearly all of them. However, lacking issues he has become so provoked that now he has descended to use of vulgar epithets unbecoming a Presidential candidate, and I feel it would stand him much better to stop arousing resentment on the part of the American people.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a short letter typical of many I am receiving.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE BATTLES OF SARATOGA AND KINGS MOUNTAIN

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, during this time of partisan strife and international turmoil I believe it is not out of place to call the attention of the House to the fact that today is one of the most important anniversaries in the history of this country. It is the one hundred and sixty-third anniversary of the Battle of Saratoga and the one hundred and sixtieth anniversary of the Battle of Kings Mountain.

On October 7, 1777, the Battle of Saratoga was fought. It resulted in one of the greatest victories achieved by our forces in the Revolutionary War. Strange as it may seem, the hero of that battle was Benedict Arnold, who later turned traitor to the American cause.

On October 7, 1780, exactly 160 years ago today, another great victory was won by our troops at the Battle of Kings Mountain, in which the Americans subdued the British forces under General Ferguson.

This success gave renewed hope to Washington and his followers and contributed greatly to the termination of the war at Yorktown a year later and the bringing forth upon this continent a new nation "conceived in liberty" and dedicated to the proposition that government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, you have heard the statement made by the gentleman from Mississippi as to what has happened in the past.

A BENEDICT ARNOLD

Now, if we have a break-down of that traditional ideal of the American people that two terms are enough for any one President of the United States, we will not only have a third term for a President of the United States, but a fourth term, a fifth term, and maybe a sixth term. Eventually it will mean dictatorship. We do not want any "Heil Roosevelt" in America. We want a constitutional form of government here, the kind that our forefathers established; and if we have that, it will be the grandest thing that ever happened—a continuation of our form of government—freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of religion. We will keep out of war. We want State rights. We want a job for all in industry. We want Willkie. Everybody wants a sound, sensible, sane, honest, business administration of the affairs of our great country, and they know it will take a man like Mr. Willkie to give us such an administration. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

CONTRACTS OF THE NAVY DEPARTMENT

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged report (H. Res. 614) and ask unanimous consent that the letter of the Secretary of the Navy be read in lieu of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, October 1, 1940.

The CHAIRMAN,
Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: House Resolution 614, requesting certain information from the Secretary of the Navy, was referred to the Navy Department by your committee with the request that the information called for in the resolution, if compatible with public interest, be furnished.

The resolution propounds five questions to the Secretary of the Navy. For purposes of clarity these questions are set forth in full herein, with the answer to each immediately following it:

(1) Has the Navy Department, or any official or representative thereof, entered into any contract for the construction of anything to be used in connection with our national-defense program, and especially contracts for the production of munitions of war, tanks, aircraft, artillery, including antiaircraft guns, warships, camps, cantonments, buildings, or structures of any kind, or furnishings for the same, which provides in substance, or is to the effect, that only members of a union are to be employed on such work?

The answer to this question is "No."

(2) Under any contract let by the Navy Department for any of the foregoing purposes, has any contractor or subcontractor, entered into any contract which in substance provides for the employment of only those men who belong to a designated organization?

The Navy Department knows of one such case. There are probably more, and in order to make a complete answer to this question it would be necessary to obtain information from every contractor and subcontractor of the Navy Department. The categorical answer to this question is "Yes."

(3) On any of the work above designated, has any contractor or subcontractor refused employment to any man otherwise qualified for the reason that he did, or did not, belong to a union?

(4) If, in answering the foregoing questions, it appears that men who are not members of a union have been denied employment because they were not members of a union, when they applied for work on any defense project or in any manufacturing industry which was engaged in making materials for the national defense, give three instances where men, for the reasons stated, were denied employment.

(5) If in any instance a demand has been made that only union men be employed on the work hereinbefore referred to, by whom was such demand made, and if the information is available, was the demand the result of a vote of the membership of the union, or of some official or officials of the union?

The Navy Department is unable to answer these three questions without getting in touch with every inspector on every contract.

In view of the urgency of this report there has been insufficient time to submit it to the Bureau of the Budget.

Sincerely yours,

FRANK KNOX.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the letter of the Secretary of the Navy gives the House the information that is now available in the Navy Department, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that a moment?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I withhold my motion in order to yield for a question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. This resolution asked for certain information which the House should have.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is correct.

Mr. HOFFMAN. There is no question about that, is there, I will ask the chairman of the committee.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not a bit. I have no objection and neither has the Navy Department, and the letter states positively that it is impossible to get the information right now. I will try to help the gentleman get the information in a more orderly time than the 7 days in which the resolution required a report.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then I hope the gentleman will give some support to the resolution which I have introduced for the appointment of a committee to get this information because——

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. We will cross that bridge when we come to it. For the time being we have given all the information we can, and I have no objection to the Navy Department furnishing the gentleman and the House the information called for, and I think it is important information. So, therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the resolution which was just put on the table was a resolution which called for very vital and necessary information. The chairman of the committee agrees with that. The Navy cannot supply it at this particular time. The information that I asked for was whether or not American citizens are being denied an opportunity to work on the national-defense program simply because they have not paid and will not pay, a fee to some union organizer.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The Secretary answered that "No." That is the very first question in the resolution that the Secretary answered.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman is in error. That was the answer to the first question, but the second question was whether they were being denied that opportunity by any subcontractor or contractors, and the Navy does not have that information. The request is broader than the first question and the answer is not "No"; it is that the Navy cannot answer—cannot give the information—and we should have it.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am sure the gentleman can recognize that it is impossible for the Navy Department to get that and——

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is right.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. We will try to cooperate with the gentleman to get that information.

Mr. HOFFMAN. But that does not do away with the necessity of that information being given to the House.

[Here the gavel fell.]

BATTLE OF SARATOGA AND KINGS MOUNTAIN

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] in speaking of the Battle of Saratoga, which really won the Revolutionary War and the Battle of Kings Mountain which will stand out as one of the greatest battles and one of the finest of victories. Those victories were won by coon-skin capped soldiers, men from the fields and from the woods, and not one of them was conscripted. Every one was a volunteer. He volunteered for America to fight America's battles. [Applause.] It was not necessary, Mr. Speaker, to have a conscription law to win these historical, decisive conflicts. [Applause.]

[Here the gave fell.]

COMPENSATION OF MASTERS AT ARMS AND GUARDS AT NAVY YARDS—VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The Speaker laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 10405, Seventy-sixth Congress, entitled "An act to provide for adjusting the compensation of persons employed as masters at arms, and guards at navy yards and stations, and for other purposes." This bill proposes to raise the salaries of guard forces of the Naval Establishment by the method of allocating them by law to grades 5 to 10 in the Custodial Service in the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

This bill is fundamentally objectionable for the following reasons:

First. It requires an increase in the rates of pay of the guard force in one branch of the Government service without applying the same increase to the guard forces in the other branches of the service.

Second. It requires the payment of increased rates of pay for one group of employees whose positions fall under the Custodial Service of the Classification Act without taking into consideration the effect of such increase upon the rates of pay for other groups of employees falling in the same category, notably the crafts and maintenance groups.

Third. The allocations to grades made mandatory by the bill do not follow the statutory grade definitions previously established by Congress in the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, but at the same time, the bill does not amend them so as to permit the Civil Service Commission in the departmental service or the departments generally in the field service to comply with the fundamental mandate of the Classification Act that equal pay scales shall be established for equal work. The bill leaves the existing grade definitions still applicable to all groups other than those coming within the scope of the bill.

Fourth. By means of allocating positions to grades by legislative action, notwithstanding the discrepancy between such allocations and the statutory grade definitions, the bill seeks to raise pay scales for a particular group. This is an undesirable method of salary scale revision. If the salary scales for guards are too low, a direct method should be followed of raising the pay scales associated with the various grade definitions in the Custodial Service of the Classification Act.

Fifth. On a number of cases I have expressed myself as not being in favor of salary legislation which would give preferential treatment to a single group of employees. Legislation of this type simply discriminates against other equally deserving groups.

For the foregoing reasons, I am constrained to withhold my approval of this measure.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 4, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill and message be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

BATTLE OF EUTAW SPRINGS

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, supplementing the statements made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOLLES], with reference to the Battles of Saratoga and Kings Mountain, I want to say that I would not be placed in the position of disparaging in any way the patriotism, valor and heroism displayed at those two battlegrounds. But I want to say that in determining the valor of our Revolutionary heroes there was no greater patriotism and no greater determination demonstrated in any battle of this country than that of Eutaw Springs in my State. When we read the history of this battle and see how men fought with munitions, fought with the stocks and barrels of their guns and rifles after munitions were exhausted, fought with swords, knives, and sticks when all other implements had been exhausted, and then to have General Greene say that he saw men come out of that battle as naked as they were born, proves to me that they were men who knew what liberty meant and were willing to fight for it to the last with no further hope of reward than to gain for themselves and to posterity those rights and liberties later incorporated in our Constitution. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RABAUT, by unanimous consent, was granted permission to revise and extend his own remarks.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

CONFINEMENT IN PENITENTIARIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9954, to amend section 7 of the act of May 14, 1930 (46 Stat. 326; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 753f), relating to places of confinement and transfers of persons convicted of an offense against the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

MONUMENT TO GEN. ANDREW PICKENS

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 369, to provide for the erection of a shrine or monument to the memory of Gen. Andrew Pickens.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this joint resolution may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

KELLEY HOMESTEAD, ELK RIVER, MINN.

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 376, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to accept from the National Grange a lease of the Kelley homestead near Elk River, Minn., and providing for its development and maintenance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this joint resolution may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

VESSELS FOR STATE NAUTICAL SCHOOLS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10315, to authorize the United States Maritime Commission to furnish suitable vessels for the benefit of certain State nautical schools, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

MINERAL CLAIMS IN ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2747, relative to annual labor on mineral claims in the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the bill now is in order for passage and that no amendment will be presented today such as was presented last week.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, last week the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] offered an amendment which greatly enlarged the scope of the bill. He has assured me he will not propose an amendment today, and to the best of my knowledge the only amendment to be offered is the committee amendment.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, with the gentleman's assurance that no amendment but the committee amendment will be offered I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the Territory of Alaska a survey for patent purposes made by a United States mineral surveyor under order of the United States Cadastral Engineer, may be credited upon annual labor required by law to be performed upon or for the benefit of the claim or claims for the year in which such survey is made, but in no case shall the credit for the cost of such survey and its attendant expense exceed the amount of the annual labor required for 1 year as to the claim or claims so surveyed.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "surveyed", strike out the period and insert a colon in lieu thereof, and after said colon the following: "Provided, That the cost of such survey shall not be credited in determining the value of the labor or improvements required under section 2325, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 30, ch. 2, sec. 29)."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEASING OF COAL AND ASPHALT DEPOSITS OF CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS OF OKLAHOMA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2617, to authorize the leasing of the undeveloped coal and asphalt deposits of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Oklahoma.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to lease any of the unsold and undeveloped coal and asphalt deposits of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in Oklahoma, in accordance with the terms of the act of April 21, 1932 (47 Stat. 88), except as otherwise provided herein, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. Leases made under this act may be for any term not to exceed 15 years. All acts or parts of acts authorizing the sale of said coal and asphalt deposits are hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. That the rate of royalty in coal leases made under this act shall not be less than 10 cents per ton on all coal mined, including what is commonly known as slack: Provided, That such leases shall require the mining of a minimum of 1,000 tons each year the first and second years after approval of the lease, 3,000 tons the third year, 5,000 tons the fourth year, and 15,000 tons the fifth and each succeeding year thereafter, or the payment of royalty thereon the same as if the coal had actually been mined: Provided further, That the lessee shall pay as advance royalty on each lease the sum of $100 each year for the first and second years, $300 for the third year, and $5.00 for the fourth and each year thereafter. The advance royalty paid for any year may be credited on the royalty becoming due on coal mined during the year for which said advance royalty has been paid, but shall not be credited on royalty on coal mined in any previous or subsequent year.

SEC. 3. That the rate of royalty in asphalt leases made under this act shall not be less than 15 cents per ton on all crude asphalt mined: Provided, That such leases shall require the mining of a minimum of 10,000 tons the first year after approval of the lease and 15,000 tons each year thereafter, or the payment of royalty thereon the same as if the asphalt had been mined: Provided further, That the lessee shall pay as advance royalty on each lease the sum of $500 in advance for each year. The advance royalty paid for any year may be credited on the royalty becoming due on asphalt mined during the year for which said advance royalty had been paid but shall not be credited on royalty on asphalt mined in any previous or subsequent year.

SEC. 4. That the act of April 21, 1932 (47 Stat. 88), is hereby amended to provide that leases made thereunder may be for any term not to exceed 15 years.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "lease", insert "to the highest responsible competitive bidder."

Page 2, line 20, after the word "year", insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That for the purposes of this act that where qualified Indians are available employment preference shall be given to them in mining operations by the lessee on Indian lands."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MIAMI INDIANS OF INDIANA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2306, conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in all claims which the Miami Indians of Indiana, who are organized and incorporated as the Miami Nation of Indians of Indiana, may have against the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]?

There was no objection.

AMENDING SECTION 204 OF THE TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1920

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10098, to amend section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1920.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]?

There was no objection.

RESIDENCE REQUIREMENTS FOR CERTAIN POSTMASTERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10012, to amend the act of June 25, 1938, extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Messrs. WOLCOTT, TABER, CHURCH, and KEAN objected.

AMENDMENT OF ACT RELATING TO RENTALS IN CERTAIN OIL AND GAS LEASES APPROVED JULY 8, 1940

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10402, to amend the act relating to rentals in certain oil and gas leases.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO]?

There was no objection.

CALIFORNIA INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3765, to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the attorney general of the State of California to bring suit in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Indians of California," approved May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602).

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

There was no objection.

REPEALING OBSOLETE STATUTES AND IMPROVING THE UNITED STATES CODE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9947, to repeal obsolete statutes and to improve the United States Code.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman from Michigan will permit me again to state that, with respect to Calendar Nos. 946, 947, and 948, all we seek to do by these bills is to obtain legislative authority to omit from the United States Code the sections enumerated in the bills. All of those sections have been included in the Internal Revenue Code or have been repealed by their omission from the Internal Revenue Code.

This Congress in January of last year by the enactment of the Internal Revenue Code has confined those laws to that code, which is title XXVI of the United States Code. We make absolutely no change in the substantive law that has not already been made by prior acts of the Congress. As I have stated on other occasions, all we seek to obtain is legislative authority to omit the sections set forth in the bills from the forthcoming 1940 edition of the United States Code.

These bills have all been submitted to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation; they have been gone over very carefully and very thoroughly by that committee; and that committee has interposed no objection to their passage. I hope the gentleman will reconsider his request.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEOGH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Has the gentleman stated how much time and effort has been put forth by his committee?

Mr. KEOGH. Yes. As I stated 1 week ago today, these bills have been the subject of study and research for many years.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement I made last week when these bills were called, I am constrained to insist upon my unanimous-consent request that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

There was no objection.

REPEALING OBSOLETE STATUTES AND IMPROVING THE UNITED STATES CODE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9773, to repeal obsolete statutes and to improve the United States Code.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

There was no objection.

REPEALING OBSOLETE STATUTES AND IMPROVING THE UNITED STATES CODE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9882, to repeal obsolete statutes and to improve the United States Code.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

There was no objection.

REPEALING OBSOLETE STATUTES AND IMPROVING THE UNITED STATES CODE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10131, to repeal obsolete statutes and improve the United States Code.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

REPEALING OBSOLETE STATUTES AND IMPROVING THE UNITED STATES CODE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10123, to repeal obsolete statutes and to improve the United States Code.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. KEOGH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I say with reference to this bill, which is No. 950 on the calendar, that we have included in the bill only those sections which by their very terms expire on the passage of time. They have fallen of their own weight. They are no longer in effect. However, we cannot omit them from the Code without this legislative authority. We are not seeking to repeal any laws that have not already been repealed by the action of the Congress.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In view of that situation, is there any particular need for this legislation? It bears out the fact that we should have some discussion of these bills. I do not know that I would be opposed to these bills after a discussion of them on the floor. As I said last week, it seems to me it is not advisable to repeal by unanimous consent perhaps hundreds of statutes without going into them a little more thoroughly than we can go into them here on the Consent Calendar. That is my principal objective in asking that these bills be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. Speaker, in that connection, may I have it understood that when I ask unanimous consent that these bills be passed over without prejudice, those which appear on the calendar as 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, and 951, I do not want the action of the House understood as waiving points of order on these bills. So that there will be no question about the status of the bills, I reserve points of order on the bills I have just mentioned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

REPEALING OBSOLETE STATUTES AND IMPROVING UNITED STATES CODE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10411, to repeal obsolete statutes and to improve the United States Code.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3619, relating to changes in the administration of the National Guard of the United States bearing on Federal recognition, pay, allotment of funds, drill, training, etc.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I objected to this bill being considered about 2 weeks ago. Then the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] asked that the bill be recommitted to the committee. The bill went back to the committee. My objection was based solely on the proviso on page 3, and that is the only feature of the bill I knew anything about at the time. The bill comes back now with the proviso I objected to eliminated.

I have not made a thorough study of this bill but it has a unanimous report, as I understand, from the committee. Therefore, if I can receive the assurance of the Committee on Military Affairs that that committee will insist upon their amendment and this objectionable proviso will be kept out of the bill, I will not object to its consideration at this time. This proviso not only relieves all disbursing officers of the National Guard of disallowances in the past but provides that in the future when payments shall be disallowed the disbursing officers would likewise be relieved. Such a proviso is foolish on the face of it. It gives the spending agency control over its own expenditures whereas this should stay in the General Accounting Office. I do not believe we should legislate in advance for disbursing officers to be relieved of disallowances in the future by the General Accounting Office. If anyone on the committee can give me assurance that the House will insist upon its amendment, I am willing to let the bill be considered.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman that I do believe the committee will insist upon that amendment remaining as the House has put it. It was reported out of the House Committee on Military Affairs, and I agree thoroughly with the gentleman that it was an authority that should not be granted to a department, namely, to have disbursing officers sit as final and conclusive judges of their own accounts. This should be left in the hands of the Comptroller General. I am quite certain the committee when the bill does go to conference would insist upon the amendment; in fact, I am inclined to think the Senate would accept the House amendment without any objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. In view of what the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO], who is a member of the committee, has said, I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

AMENDMENTS TO NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT

SECTION 1. That section 90 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, repealed and reenacted to read as follows:

"SEC. 90. That funds allotted by the Secretary of War for the support of the National Guard shall be available for the purchase and issue of forage, bedding, shoeing, and veterinary services, and supplies for the Government animals issued to any organization, and for animals owned or hired by any State, Territory, District of Columbia, or National Guard organization, not exceeding the number of animals authorized by Federal law for such organization and used solely for military purposes, and for the compensation of competent help for the care of material, animals, armament, and equipment of organizations of all kinds, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

"The compensation paid to caretakers who belong to the National Guard, as herein authorized, shall be in addition to any compensation authorized for members of the National Guard under any of the provisions of the National Defense Act.

"Under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, the material, animals, armament, and equipment, or any part thereof, of the National Guard of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or organizations thereof, may be put into a common pool for care, maintenance, and storage; and the employment of caretakers therefor, not to exceed 15 for any one pool, is hereby authorized.

"Commissioned officers of the National Guard shall not be employed as caretakers except that, under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, one such officer not above the grade of captain for each heavier-than-air squadron, and one such officer not above the grade of captain for each pool, may be employed. Either enlisted men or civilians may be employed as caretakers, but if there are as many as two caretakers in any unit, one of them shall be an enlisted man.

"Funds hereafter appropriated under the provisions of the National Defense Act, as amended, for the support of the National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, shall be supplemental to moneys appropriated by the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, for the support of the National Guard, and shall be available for the hire of caretakers and clerks: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall, by regulations, fix the salaries of all caretakers and clerks hereby authorized to be employed, and shall also designate by whom they shall be employed: And provided further, That payments heretofore made which now stand disallowed or would hereafter be disallowed but for this act, are hereby ratified and validated as to the disbursing officers making the same, in such amounts as the Secretary of War may determine have been actually expended in the administration, supply, maintenance, and training of the National Guard, and the determination of the Secretary of War shall be final and conclusive; and the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby directed to allow credit in the accounts of said disbursing officers for and on account of such payments in said amounts."

SEC. 2. That section 92 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, repealed and reenacted to read as follows:

"SEC. 92. Training of the National Guard: Under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, each company, troop, battery, and detachment in the National Guard shall assemble for drill and instruction, including indoor target practice, not less than 48 times each year, and shall, in addition thereto, participate in encampments, maneuvers, or other exercises, including outdoor target practice, at least 15 days in training each year, including target practice, unless such company, troop, battery, or detachment shall have been excused from participation in any part thereof by the Secretary of War: Provided, That an assembly for drill and instruction may consist of a single duly ordered formation of a company, troop, battery, or detachment, or, when so authorized by the Secretary of War, of a series of duly ordered formations of subdivisions or parts thereof, but in the latter case the series of formations of subdivisions or groups must comprehend and include the entire organization, and must be included within the time limit of 7 consecutive days within a calendar month. The sum total of the attendance at all the separate consecutive formations announced as constituting that assembly shall be counted as the attendance at the actual military assembly for the required period of time; but no officer, warrant officer, or enlisted man shall be counted more than once, nor receive credit for more than one required period of actual military attendance even though he may have attended more than one of the formations which constitute the assembly for the required period of time: Provided further, That credit for an assembly for drill or for indoor target practice shall not be given unless the number of officers and enlisted men present for duty at such assembly shall equal or exceed a minimum to be prescribed by the President, nor unless the period of actual military duty and instruction participated in by each officer and enlisted man at each assembly at which he shall be credited as having been present shall be of at least 1½ hours' duration and the character of training such as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That any flight ordered by competent authority and performed by an appropriately rated Air Corps officer or enlisted man of the National Guard assigned to an Air Corps unit thereof, or so performed by an officer or enlisted man of the Medical Department of the said National Guard regularly attached to an Air Corps unit of the National Guard by appropriate authority, may be credited for the same purpose and to the same extent as attendance at drill: Provided further, That in performing the flight so ordered the officer or enlisted man is prevented, by the making of such flight, from attending a regularly scheduled drill formation of his unit or the unit with which the said officer or enlisted man is required to drill."

SEC. 3. That section 109 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, repealed and reenacted to read as follows:

"SEC. 109. Pay for the National Guard Officers: Under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, officers and warrant officers of the National Guard, except general officers, shall receive compensation at the rate of one-thirtieth of the monthly base pay prescribed for them in sections 3 and 9 of the Pay Readjustment Act of June 10, 1922, for each regular drill, period of appropriate duty, or other equivalent period of training, authorized by the Secretary of War, not exceeding 8 in any one calendar month and not exceeding 60 in any one fiscal year, at which they shall have been engaged for the entire period of not less than 1½ hours: Provided, That such pay shall be in addition to compensation for attendance at field- or coast-defense instruction or maneuvers, and that nothing in this act shall operate to reduce the present pay of majors and lieutenant colonels. General officers shall receive $500 a year in addition to compensation for attendance at field- or coast-defense instruction or maneuvers, for satisfactory performance of their appropriate duties. In addition to pay hereinbefore provided officers commanding organizations less than a brigade and having administrative functions connected therewith shall, whether or not such officers belong to such organizations, receive not more than $240 a year for the faithful performance of such administrative functions under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe; and for the purpose of determining how much shall be paid to such officers so performing such functions, the Secretary of War may, from time to time, divide them into classes and fix the amount payable to the officers in each class. Pay under the provisions of this section shall not accrue to any officer during a period when he shall be entitled, under any provision of law, to the full rate of his base pay prescribed in section 3 or section 9, as the case may be, of the Pay Readjustment Act of June 10, 1922: Provided further, That section 9 of the act entitled 'An act amending the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917', approved August 31, 1918, shall also apply to the purchase of uniforms, accouterments, and equipment for cash by officers of the active and inactive National Guard, whether in State or Federal service, on proper identification and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe."

SEC. 4. That section 3618, Revised Statutes, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding the following additional language: "That, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, the commanding officers of mounted units of the National Guard may sell all stable refuse and empty grain sacks and containers at public or private sale and apply the proceeds derived therefrom to the purchase of feed, supplementing the regular allowance and issue for the animals of the said units, and for the purchase of stable equipment, and horseshoers', saddlers', blacksmiths', and wagoners' tools not an article of issue to such organizations."

SEC. 5. That the act of July 15, 1939 (53 Stat. 1042), be, and the same is hereby, repealed and reenacted to read as follows:

"That neither of the provisions of the Act of June 15, 1936 (49 Stat. 1507), nor any other law of the United States shall be construed as limiting the power and authority of the Secretary of War, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to require hospitalization, medical, and surgical treatment and domiciliary care so long as any or all are necessary of persons in the active military service or on active duty, or in training, under the provisions of sections 92, 94, 97, 99, and 113 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, and to incur obligations with respect thereto, without reference to their line-of-duty status: Provided, That this act shall not include those individuals who are on an armory-drill status except officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the National Guard who suffer personal injury (as distinguished from disease) when participating in aerial flights prescribed under the provisions of section 92: And provided further, That this act shall not apply to officers and enlisted men who are treated in private hospitals or by civilian physicians while on furloughs or leaves of absence in excess of 24 hours."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 19, after "employed", strike out the remainder of page 3, and page 4 down to and including line 5.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BENEFITS FOR CERTAIN AIR CORPS RESERVE OFFICERS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3266, to provide pensions, compensation, retirement pay, and hospital benefits to certain Reserve officers of the Army of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice that this bill provides pensions, compensation, retirement pay, and hospital benefits for certain Air Corps Reserve officers who were disabled while on active duty with the Regular Army. In view of the words "were disabled" I ask those in charge of this bill whether Elliott Roosevelt, the 30-year-old multimillionaire son of our multimillionaire New Deal President, who dodged the draft by coming to Washington and walking into General Arnold's office and walking out with a captain's commission in the Army Air Corps and an assignment to a soft swivel-chair job in the aviation purchasing department at Wright Field, Ohio, will come under the provisions of this act. I do not want to support a bill under which Elliott Roosevelt, this swivel-chair tin-soldier captain, might receive a pension, compensation, retirement pay, or hospital care for gastritis or some other stomach disorder caused by eating caviar, hors d'oeuvre, turtle soup, or pâté de foie gras or drinking champagne at some New Deal "gold coast" tea party.

Mr. COSTELLO. I may say to the gentleman that this does not refer to the present personnel of the Air Corps, it simply includes 23 former officers of the Air Corps who were disabled.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Since this bill will not include any tin soldiers like Capt. Elliott Roosevelt, the swivel-chair Army Air Corps officer who dodged the draft and received his commission under a short-cut, unusual, strange, and indefensible procedure and since it only applies to 23 former officers of the Army Air Corps who rendered real service as soldiers I shall not object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all Reserve officers of the Air Corps of the Army of the United States, who were called or ordered into the active military service with the Air Corps, Regular Army, by the Federal Government for extended military service in excess of 30 days, on or subsequent to July 1, 1928, and who suffered disability in line of duty from injury while so employed shall be deemed to have been in the active military service during such period and shall be in all respects entitled to receive the same pensions, compensation, retirement pay, and hospital benefits as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulation for officers of corresponding grades and length of service of the Regular Army.

SEC. 2. That the duties, powers, and functions incident to the administration and payment of the benefits herein provided are hereby vested in the Veterans' Administration: Provided, That in the administration of the retirement provisions provided herein, the determination whether disability exists and whether such disability was incurred in line of duty shall be made by the Secretary of War, or by someone designated by him in the War Department, in the manner, and in accordance with the standards provided by law or regulations for the Regular Army personnel: And provided further, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MONEY ALLOWANCE FOR QUARTERS TO CERTAIN NONCOMMISSIONED OFFICERS OF THE ARMY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10527, to provide for an extension of the conditions under which a money allowance for quarters may be paid to certain noncommissioned officers of the Army of the United States.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That each enlisted man of the first, second, or third grade of the Army of the United States in the active military service of the United States, having a dependent as defined in sections 8 and 8a, title 37, United States Code, shall, under such regulations as the President may prescribe, be entitled to receive, for any period during which public quarters are not provided for his dependent, the money allowance for quarters authorized by law to be granted to each enlisted man not furnished quarters in kind.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "provided", insert the words "and available."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INCREASING THE NUMBERS OF WARRANT OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN IN THE ARMY MINE PLANTER SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10391, to increase the authorized numbers of warrant officers and enlisted men in the Army Mine Planter Service, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the authorized personnel of the Army Mine Planter Service shall comprise, for each Army mine planter in service or under construction, one master, one first mate, one second mate, one chief engineer, one assistant engineer, and one second assistant engineer, who shall be warrant officers appointed by and holding their offices at the discretion of the Secretary of War, and such enlisted men of the Coast Artillery Corps as the Secretary of War shall prescribe from time to time: Provided, That the maximum authorized numbers of warrant officers and enlisted men of the Coast Artillery Corps are hereby increased by the numbers of additional warrant officers and enlisted men authorized by this section: Provided further, That when the number of Army mine planters in service and under construction exceeds 14, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, and to such extent as he may deem proper, make temporary appointments of the additional warrant officers required for the additional mine planters: Provided further, That members of the Army Mine Planter Service appointed as temporary warrant officers shall, while serving as such have the rank, pay, allowances, and retirement privileges of the grade and ratings to which they are temporarily appointed, and upon termination of their temporary appointments as warrant officers shall revert to the grades from which they were appointed, without loss of seniority, credit for continuous service, or any other right or privilege, by reason of their service as temporary warrant officers: And provided further, That the relative rank, pay, and allowances of warrant officers of the Army Mine Planter Service shall be as now prescribed by law, and warrant officer second assistant engineers shall receive pay and allowances, and be entitled to other privileges as now prescribed by law for warrant officer second mates, and while aboard their vessels shall take rank immediately below warrant officer second mates.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and in connection therewith to insert several tables I have prepared myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

CLAIMS OF THE CHOCTAW INDIANS OF THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3524, conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Choctaw Indians of the State of Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the report on this bill—and I may say a bill somewhat similar to this was vetoed by the President on one occasion—does not contain the report of the Attorney General who is charged with the responsibility of defending the Government in the Court of Claims in such jurisdictional cases. I have received a letter from the Attorney General giving his views on this measure. In view of this letter from the Attorney General and the objections he has offered I ask unanimous consent that it may be placed in the RECORD at this point. I hope all Members will read this letter and then determine if I am justified in my opposition to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., October 2, 1940.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
Chairman, Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This acknowledges your request of October 1, 1940, for my views relative to a bill (S. 3524) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims over the claims of the Choctaw Indians of the State of Mississippi.

The text of the bill indicates that the claims to which it refers are not tribal claims, but those of individual Indians who assert that they were improperly denied the right to share in the distribution of certain tribal properties. The measure under consideration would permit these individual Indians to sue the United States as a band. The provisions of this bill are virtually the same as those of S. 1478, Seventy-fifth Congress, which was passed by the Congress but vetoed by the President. See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 83, part 8, page 9620.

By the treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek of September 27, 1830 (7 Stat. 333), the Choctaw Nation ceded its lands east of the Mississippi River and received in exchange therefor a large area in what is now Oklahoma. By article XIV of that treaty such Choctaws as chose to do so were permitted to remain in Mississippi, receive their allotments there, and eventually become cititzens of that State. The article further provided that such persons should not lose the "privilege of a Choctaw citizen, but if they ever remove are not to be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity." A controversy thereafter arose between the Indians who had removed to Oklahoma and those who had remained in Mississippi as to the right of the latter to share in the allotment of the property assigned to the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma.

A commission, known as the Dawes Commission, established by the act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat. 645), prepared a complete membership roll of the Choctaw Nation, and by virtue of subsequent authorizations prepared two rolls of the Mississippi Choctaws entitled to enrollment. It appears that in 1899 there was submitted a roll of 1,923 Mississippi Choctaws, known as the McKennon roll, and in 1902 the Commission prepared a roll of 2,534 persons who had been identified out of more than 25,000 applicants for identification as Mississippi Choctaws. The latter roll was approved by the Secretary of the Interior on February 14, 1903, but the earlier and so-called McKennon roll was disapproved on March 1, 1907. After identification is was necessary for the Indians identified to remove to Oklahoma and perform certain other acts before being enrolled as members of the Choctaw Nation. Of the 2,534 identified and listed on the final roll, 1,578 removed to the Choctaw country in Oklahoma and 956 apparently remained in Mississippi.

The proposed legislation would authorize the adjudication of the claims of the Mississippi Choctaws for compensation for the loss of their interests in the lands and other property of the Choctaw Nation. It would appear that these claims would be divided into three classes: (1) The claims of those Indians who were identified, but who failed to remove to Oklahoma and receive their allotments because of the alleged failure of the Government to assist them; (2) the claims of those listed on the McKennon roll which was disapproved by the Secretary of the Interior, allegedly without examination into the merits of their claims; and (3) the claims of those who were not identified or listed on any roll because of the alleged failure of the Government to advise them as to their rights.

If these Indians had received the property to which they claim to have been entitled, it would have been a share in the property of the Choctaw Nation. Nevertheless the present bill, instead of seeking to permit the Indians to secure an award against the tribe or its individual members, in effect proposes that the Government should assume the tribal liability and should pay to the claimants the value of the share that they might have received on a distribution of the tribal property. Since it has been estimated that the value of one distributive share in the Choctaw tribal property exceeded the sum of $4,000, the enactment of this legislation might result in an assumption of a liability by the Government, aggregating nearly $4,000,000, with respect to the claims of the 956 identified Indians alone. There might also be assumed an even greater liability in connection with the claims of those listed on the McKennon roll and the several thousand not identified on any roll. I am not aware of any reason why in equity and good conscience this burden should be borne by the Government rather than by the other members of the tribe.

Moreover, the effect of this legislation would be to reopen certain matters that were settled by a quasi-judicial commission more than 30 years ago. It does not appear to be desirable to take this action after such a long lapse of time, when much of the pertinent evidence is no longer available.

In view of the foregoing considerations, I am unable to recommend the enactment of the bill.

Sincerely,

ROBERT H. JACKSON,
Attorney General.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice, so as to give the membership of the House an opportunity to read this letter and thus understand just exactly what is in the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House spent about 4 hours considering this bill. The bill is not identical with the bill which was vetoed.

Mr. COCHRAN. I said, "somewhat."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. It is not "somewhat" identical—it differs radically. The points raised against the bill in the veto message clearly reveal that the President was not correctly informed as to the true facts of the case by somebody. If the Government of the United States made it possible through actions of Government representatives for one portion of the Choctaw Indian tribe to obtain funds which properly should have gone to the Mississippi Choctaw Indians, then the Government of the United States is responsible. This bill is a clear-cut Court of Claims proposition. It is not an appropriation bill dressed up in Court of Claims clothes. This bill simply gives these Mississippi Choctaw Indians the opportunity of having their day in court and presenting their claims on the questions of law. In view of the testimony presented the Committee on Indian Affairs after careful and intensive consideration of the entire membership of that committee who were present voted to favorably report the bill. The bill only gives these Choctaw Indians of Mississippi their day in court. And, by the way, a representative from the Indian Bureau appeared before our committee at that hearing and said that in his judgment they appear to have valid claims which they should have an opportunity to present to the Court of Claims. I assure the gentleman that if this was anything else but a clear-cut Court of Claims bill, which gives these original Americans, the Choctaw Mississippi Indians, a day in court to present their claims, I would not have voted for it in committee and I would not have pleaded with him on the floor of the House to let this bill be considered today.

Let us extend justice to these real original Americans, our American Indians, when they have valid claims which they desire to present to the Court of Claims. This Congress, which has been very liberal in handing many millions of dollars to people in foreign lands, should not deny these Choctaw Mississippi Indians an opportunity to present their valid claims against the Government of the United States to the Court of Claims of the United States.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin know that a commission 30 years ago considered this matter?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Oh, yes. We understand commissions. Under the Constitution commissions do not legislate. Commissions do not have authority to permit claimants to have a day in court. This is one of the most meritorious bills which has been presented to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I know that the gentleman from Missouri wants to guard the Treasury and prevent unwarranted raids on it. I helped him with reference to the California Indian raid bill. I objected to that potential $100,000,000 raid on the United States Treasury the other day and I will oppose it today. These original Americans, these Mississippi Choctaw Indians, have a valid claim, and I ask the gentleman to permit them to have their day in the Court of Claims, which is the only thing which this bill does.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the next bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some confusion as to what happened to the last bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was passed over without prejudice.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understood the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] to object.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I objected. My voice was not loud enough, I guess. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard, and the bill goes over. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PROFESSIONAL EXAMINATIONS FOR PROMOTION IN MEDICAL, DENTAL, AND VETERINARY CORPS OF THE REGULAR ARMY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10278, to authorize the discontinuance of professional examinations for promotion in the Regular Army of officers of the Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Corps during time of war or emergency declared by Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think it is the intent and purpose of every Member of Congress to lean over backward in enacting a defense program, but it seems to me that we have leaned over backward so far on this bill that we are about to bump our heads.

If I understand this bill correctly it authorizes the promotion of commissioned-officer personnel in the Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Corps without examination. If a second lieutenant in the line is promoted to a first lieutenancy he at least has to go through the motions of some kind of an examination, or merit that promotion by some outstanding service. To distinguish between medical, dental, or veterinary officers and a line officer seems to me such a discrimination between those services that we had better give more consideration to what we are doing before we pass this bill.

You cannot get a commission without a very rigid examination, either in the line or in the services mentioned in this bill. So it seems to me that we should not get panicky to the point where we authorize favoritism within the armed forces such as this bill would allow.

Until we find out more about this bill I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the main purpose of the bill is to let the Department grant these promotions either during a time of war or actual emergency. During normal times such a request would not be asked. At the present time, due to the great expansion in the Army camps that is contemplated, it is necessary to assign officers of the War Department in the Medical Division to these different camps, and in order to give them the rank in keeping with the positions to which they are being assigned it is desired to grant these promotions. If it is necessary first to hold a medical examination of the character which is ordinarily given, it will entail a great deal of delay and will place a great burden upon the Medical Corps. It is because of that fact that the War Department has asked for this relief.

I do not think there is any question as to the caliber of men who would receive promotions. First, they would have to have taken the original examination for admission to the War Department.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I agree with the gentleman. There is no reflection upon the ability or the standing of these officers and I do not intend my discussion to reflect upon them whatsoever. I know these are gentlemen of the highest type in their profession and are doing a splendid job.

It seems to me we are doing one or two things here to which we had better give more consideration. In the first place we are discriminating between these officers and other officers; and then by inference we are recognizing the existence of an emergency for the first time. When I say "we" I mean the Congress. Up to the present time, the President has, without any authority of law, determined that a limited emergency existed. What the President means by "limited emergency" I do not know. He was given the power, I understand, to declare an emergency. It kind of looks to me as though he just wanted to singe his fingers a little without burning them too badly, so he declared a limited emergency to exist. The President has not declared an emergency to exist under the law. I think it must be understood by the Congress that the President under the power that has been granted to him has never declared that an emergency exists.

There have been repeated efforts during the last few months to get this Congress to declare an emergency by implication. I am therefore a little fearful that if this bill is passed by unanimous consent it will be said that the Congress has put its stamp of approval on the existence of an emergency. If an emergency does exist we should clarify the situation by explaining what the emergency is, whether it is economic, financial, or whether it goes to the point where it involves the lives of our citizens. Until we are ready to be courageous enough to say to the people that an emergency does or does not exist, we should not by implication recognize an emergency which the President has not as yet seen fit to declare.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I may state to the gentleman that the language of the bill provides that these promotions shall take place only in the event of war or an emergency declared by the President. It does not state that the Congress is declaring an emergency. The President is given this power only if and when an emergency is declared or war is declared.

I may also state to the gentleman that we have already provided for the temporary promotion of the line officers. This legislation would therefore be in keeping with the legislation already passed on a similar subject, for it would give the same right to the medical, dental, and veterinary officers that we have granted to the other branches of the armed services.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with practically all the gentleman has said, but this thought occurs to me, that insofar as the men are concerned who are to be served by these dental and medical officers in particular there will be an emergency for these men. If the Medical Corps and the Dental Corps are insufficiently large to take care of the men, then an emergency does exist so far as the men are concerned. The bill appeals to me from that standpoint.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I might say to the gentleman from Michigan that this does not increase the number of the personnel of these different branches, it merely makes it possible for the President to promote them on the ground that an emergency exists. He has not yet declared an emergency to exist.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understand that, but I assume that if this bill were passed and the President should declare an emergency that the personnel would be immediately enlarged.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. PFEIFER].

HOMING PIGEONS

Mr. PFEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7813) to safeguard the homing pigeon.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the gentleman's contribution to national defense?

Mr. PFEIFER. I hope so.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to safeguard and promote the breeding and training of the Antwerp or homing pigeon for use as a means of communication in time of war or national emergency, it shall be unlawful for any person to hunt, shoot, or to attempt to hunt or shoot, or for any person other than the lawful owner thereof to pursue, capture, or kill, or to attempt to pursue, capture, or kill, any Antwerp or homing pigeon having the name of the owner stamped upon its wing or tail, or wearing a ring or seamless leg band with the registered number of such pigeon stamped thereon.

SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for any person other than the lawful owner thereof or his authorized agent to remove or alter any stamp, leg band, ring, or other mark of identification attached to any Antwerp or homing pigeon.

SEC. 3. Any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $500.

Mr. PFEIFER. Mr. Speaker, this bill (H. R. 7813) is to safeguard the homing pigeon. This bird is well known to the world at large. Its faithful service is referred to in the Bible, when it carried Noah's message at the time of the flood. This humble, feathered bird, derivative of the dove family, through years of experimentation and careful breeding, has developed into such an intelligent and fast messenger that the warring nations resorted to their services in the last World War. Their services have proven so valuable that the deeds of some will go down in the annals of our history. They have proven to be the only means of communication when all other means have failed. They flew through areas where men never came through alive. Due to their intelligence and the speed with which they flew, the messages in the capsules on their legs have saved many lives, caused many towns and villages to be captured, scouts and espionage contacts made, and survivors in doomed ships and planes were rescued.

Ninety-five percent of the messages sent were delivered by using birds of selected breeding for ship-to-shore messages on trawlers and mine sweepers in the vicinity of the British Isles. One pigeon completed 172 active service patrols.

Excerpts from our own War Department relate the following:

First, Cher Ami, one of our outstanding pigeon heroes of the World War, although shot in flight, nevertheless came through with the message hanging from its dangling leg; was instrumental in saving one "lost battalion" in the Argonne Forest. The Smithsonian Institution displays this now stuffed and humble mounted bird, which bears the Distinguished Service Cross.

Again we read of numerous savings at sea, men from downed planes or sinking boats, due to messages brought ashore by these birds.

Outstanding service has been rendered by Spike, Locker, Blanchette, Poilu, and many others.

The services of these birds have been proven so valuable that the Army and the Navy during the last World War have requested the American pigeon fanciers to give all aid possible. This appeal was answered immediately. Entire lofts were voluntarily contributed, and all aid was carried on throughout the period of the World War.

Nations realizing the true value of these messengers, not only in time of war but also in time of peace as well, appreciated these messengers as part of their armed forces. Great Britain has several hundred thousand of these messengers, while we have less than 10,000.

Only the other day one daily press pictured the services that these birds are rendering in the present world conflict, a copy of which I hold in my hand.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I personally believe that the homing pigeon is an intricate part of our armed forces, and as such is entitled to the protection of our Government.

The War Department agrees that this legislation is necessity for our national defense. It does not call for any appropriation of any money but simply sees that these birds are given the protection that they so rightfully deserve. It prevents them from becoming mutilated, so that when the time comes for the call to service, the Nation will find a ready, healthy pigeon service.

Thousands of these valuable birds are lost annually and scores of these birds have returned to their home lofts suffering from bird-shot wounds. Many of them are bred from famous World War pigeons which were returned to our shores after the 1918 armistice. Therefore, Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, let us not delay this bill any longer; let us pass it immediately, for in doing so you are not only acting in the name of national defense at this time but preserving this valuable messenger for the protection of our future welfare. It certainly would be a stimulus to the homing-pigeon fanciers of this Nation to perpetuate the superior breed of pigeon messengers, so they may be ever ready to render the highest type of service to the armed forces of our Nation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF THE CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified civil service of the United States, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

THE LATE LINCOLN LOY M'CANDLESS

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Hawaii?

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, a wire from Honolulu informs me that my predecessor here in Congress, the Honorable Lincoln Loy McCandless, died yesterday in Honolulu, soon after celebrating his eighty-first birthday.

His death is a loss to our community, where he has taken an important part in business and civic affairs for nearly 60 years, and to the Democratic Party of Hawaii, of which he was a leading spirit and for which he fought valiantly.

Mr. McCandless was born in the town of Indiana, Pa., September 18, 1859, was educated in the public schools of West Virginia, and arrived in Hawaii as a young man, in his twenties, on February 15, 1882. Together with his brothers he became one of the pioneer builders of our community and helped develop our agricultural and ranching industries.

He was a representative in the legislature of the former Republic of Hawaii; was one of the band of patriotic Americans who worked unceasingly to bring Hawaii under the American flag, and after the annexation of Hawaii served as a member of the Senate of the Territorial Legislature. In 1932 he was elected the Delegate in Congress from Hawaii, serving in the Seventy-third Congress.

We were opponents in politics, but I wish to pay my respects to his sincere patriotism, his great contributions to Hawaii, his adopted home, and his indomitable spirit, which carried him through an active and full life to the end. To the memory of a fighter who never gave up until the last call, and to his family, aloha.

AUTHORIZING SECRETARY OF INTERIOR TO LEASE OR SELL CERTAIN LANDS IN PALM SPRINGS RESERVATION

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill H. R. 7738, an act to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease or sell certain lands of the Agua Caliente or Palm Springs Reservation, Calif., for public airport use, and for other purposes," with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ROGERS]?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Messrs. ROGERS of Oklahoma, CARTWRIGHT, and BURDICK.

EXEMPTING CERTAIN INDIANS AND INDIAN TRIBES FROM THE PROVISIONS OF THE ACT OF JUNE 18, 1934

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (S. 2103) to exempt certain Indians and Indian tribes from the provisions of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), as amended, with House amendments thereto, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ROGERS]?

There was no objection, and the Chair appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Messrs. ROGERS of Oklahoma, HILL, and SCHAFER of Wisconsin.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from the Secretary of War, together with two breakdowns showing the construction of tent camps and wood army camps.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article from the Gaelic American entitled "Is the United States To Be Incorporated in the British Empire?"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman for that purpose at this time.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes today after the disposition of all legislative business in order for the day and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

EXTENDING THE CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified civil service of the United States, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 960); extending the classified civil service of the United States, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 8, 11, 12, 24, 30, and 32.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 9, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, and 31, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "or to any position to which appointtments are made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or to positions of assistant United States district attorney"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "And provided further, That the Civil Service Commission may require the submission of fingerprints of applicants for competitive or noncompetitive examinations ordered or conducted by the Commission, but may not require the submission of a photograph of any applicant"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(b) That from and after the effective date of this Act any person who shall have served for four years as a secretary, clerk or assistant clerk to a Senator, Representative, Delegate or Resident Commissioner, or as a clerk or assistant clerk to a standing committee of the Senate or House of Representatives or as a clerical employee of the Senate or House of Representatives and whose separation from the service is involuntary and without prejudice shall acquire, upon passing such suitable noncompetitive examination as the Civil Service Commission may prescribe, a classified civil service status for transfer to a position in the classified civil service notwithstanding any contrary provisions of the civil service laws or regulations: Provided, That any individual who may hold such a position in the legislative branch must obtain such transfer within one year from the date of separation, and nothing in this Act shall be construed to impair any right of retransfer provided for under civil service laws or regulations made thereunder."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified civil service of the United States, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommend in the accompanying conference report:

(1) Senate amendment No. 1 excluded the offices or positions in the Tennessee Valley Authority, and the House conferees have agreed to this.

(2) As the bill passed the House it excluded "any positions in or connected with the Work Projects Administration." The Senate struck out the words "or connected with". The reason for this was that considerable doubt has arisen about employees working in other agencies of the government paid from relief funds. It was feared that such employees might be excluded from the provisions of the Act, and that was not intended.

(3) The Senate adopted an amendment excluding positions filled by appointment by the President and confirmed by the Senate, positions of Assistant United States District Attorney, Deputy United States Marshal, and Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue. The House conferees have receded so far as the Presidential appointments and Assistant district attorneys are concerned, but Deputy Marshals and Deputy Collectors of Internal Revenue will come under the provision (provisions) of the bill as agreed to.

(4) Senate amendment No. 4 sought to make the bill apply to people who have been furloughed. The Senate conferees receded from this.

(5) Senate amendment No. 5 provided that only one noncompetitive examination should be given to persons classified under this Act. The House conferees receded from this.

(6) The House receded from this amendment. This is merely a correction in the text.

(7) Senate amendment No. 7 provided for the abolition of the use of photographs by the applicants and permitted the use of fingerprints. The House conferees agreed to a rewriting of this amendment, which results in the same meaning.

(8) The Senate amendment No. 8 defined the term "incumbent" to include persons on furlough. This was not necessary if amendment No. 4 went out, and the Senate receded.

(9) Senate amendment No. 9 struck out what was referred to in the House as the Keller-Nichols quota amendment. The House conferees have receded on this amendment. The Senate conferees contended that overwhelming evidence was presented that this provision would be practically unworkable and would result in upsetting many of the agencies.

(10) Senate amendment No. 10 is the provision relating to employees of the House and Senate. The House has receded, but the section was rewritten. It provides that secretaries and clerks to Senators, Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners, clerks and assistant clerks to standing committees, and clerical employees of the House and Senate, who have served four years and are involuntarily separated without prejudice, may acquire a status for transfer to a civil service position upon passing a suitable examination prescribed by the Civil Service Commission. This provision would apply to such employees for one year from the date of their separations.

(11) Senate amendment No. 11 proposed to give anyone who had served fifteen years or longer a civil service status. The Senate receded from this.

(12) Senate amendment No. 12 proposed to give a classified status to the temporary employees of the Bureau of the Census. We were informed that more than half of the 8,000 temporary Census employees came from over-quota states and the District of Columbia. They definitely understood this employment would be temporary. Their names were drawn from civil service registers, and in many cases without regard to their standing on such registers, because people from distant places would not come to Washington to take temporary employment. Their names still remain on the registers for consideration for permanent appointment, and many of these employees have gotten regular probational appointments.

(13) Senate amendments 13 through 22, are corrections of the text and have no effect on the bill.

(23) Senate amendment No. 23 provided that in putting the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923 into effect under this bill, there should be no discrimination on account of race, creed, or color. The House receded from this, because the Constitution of the United States provides that there shall be no such discrimination.

(24) Senate amendment No. 24 provided that there should be no discrimination against any person under this Act on account of the place of his or her residence. Since the House receded on the Keller-Nichols amendment, this was no longer necessary, and the Senate receded.

(25) Senate amendment No. 25 struck out the language adopted by the House which would have prevented the lowering of salaries of people whose grades were lowered under the provisions of this Act. The House conferees receded from this.

(26) The House bill provided that Boards of Review should be set up for employees dissatisfied with efficiency ratings, composed of three or more members, the Chairman to be designated by the Civil Service Commission, and the other members to be designated by the head of the department concerned. Senate amendments Numbers 26, 27, and 28 changed this to limit such Boards to three members, the Chairman to be appointed by the Civil Service Commission, one member to be designated by the head of the department concerned, and the third member to be designated by the employees of the department concerned. The House conferees receded from these amendments.

(29) Senate amendment No. 29 provided that at hearings by these Boards of Review the complaining employee, his representative, and representatives of the department concerned, should be afforded an opportunity to submit orally or in writing any information deemed pertinent by the Board, and the parties to the proceeding should have the right to examine and reply to such information. The House conferees receded from this amendment, because it is no more than is usually allowed in connection with all such hearings.

(30) Senate amendment No. 30 provided that in appointing or fixing requirements for appointment to any governmental position, there should be no discrimination on account of persons being graduated from a particular school, or from schools accredited or rated by any association, organization, or group, or on account of membership or nonmembership of any professional, technical, or other society or association. The Senate receded from this amendment, because the Senate had already passed a bill with the same purport, and such bill has been favorably reported to the House and a rule granted for its consideration. The conferees felt that the legislation should be taken up separately and considered on its merits and not injected into this bill.

(31) Senate amendment No. 31 provided that the compensation of the Civil Service Commissioners should be $10,000.00 per year, and the compensation of the Executive Director and Chief Examiner of the Civil Service Commission should be $9,500.00 per year. The House receded from this amendment, because it appears that the Commissioners now receive a salary of $8,500.00 per year,, and this amendment will bring them in line with other officials of the Government in comparable positions.

(32) Senate amendment No. 32 made the effective date of this Act, April 15, 1941. The Senate conferees receded from this.

ROBERT RAMSPECK,
JENNINGS RANDOLPH,
FRANK FRIES,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, if the Members of the House will give me their attention I want to attempt to explain to them just what changes have been made in this bill. As the conferees have agreed on the bill the changes in the bill, title I, are the exemption of the Tennessee Valley employees, the exemption of all positions for which the President makes appointment and the Senate confirms, and the exemption of assistant United States attorneys. With the exception of those exemptions and the employees of the Work Projects Administration, this bill gives the President authority to cover into the civil service by noncompetitive examinations every position in the Government service.

The Senate conferees eliminated the Keller-Nichols amendment, and I understand there is to be some controversy about that. The Senate committee took testimony on that matter and it developed that the Keller-Nichols amendment was unworkable. As a matter of fact, the quota system is very little understood. I have in my hand statement of the quota as it stands at the present time and it shows that a great many of the States now are over their quota, which means that the States under quota get the positions that become vacant under the civil-service law where the quota system applies, which, of course, is only in the departmental service in the District of Columbia.

I have had Members come to me within the last hour and say they intend to vote against this report because the Keller-Nichols amendment was deleted. If they do that, they are not helping the States that are under quota. The positions with which this bill deals are now filled. If you defeat this bill you do not vacate any of these positions and therefore you have no chance to fill them. You do not put them under the quota system if you defeat this conference report, and therefore you have no opportunity to give them to the States that are under quota. But, if you pass this conference report and the President brings 200,000 people under this bill, 20 percent of them, on the average, will fail to pass either the mental or the physical tests and their positions will be vacated and will go to the States that are under quota. Whenever a position is vacant which is under the quota system, the Civil Service Commission does not certify for that vacancy eligibles from States that are over quota. That is all I am going to say about that at the present time, except to say that we did persuade the Senate conferees to recede on an amendment placing temporary employees of the Census Bureau on a permanent status. There are more than 8,000 of those employees, and over 50 percent of them come from over-quota States and the District of Columbia; so we did save those jobs for you.

We accepted a Senate amendment which gives your secretaries, and clerks of committees and clerical employees of the House an opportunity to qualify for civil-service status after serving for 4 years, provided they pass a noncompetitive examination.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. Do they have to be separated from the service as secretaries before they can apply?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; they must be involuntarily separated without prejudice. This was done, I may say, for the protection of the membership as well as the service, because otherwise we would have found our offices a channel for people seeking employment.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I notice the last sentence in the conference report relates to the situation the gentleman has just mentioned, that secretaries being separated from the service involuntarily may be admitted to the civil service by a noncompetitive examination. The last sentence reads as follows:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to impair any right of retransfer provided for under civil-service laws or regulations made thereunder.

What is the meaning and significance of that sentence?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The meaning of that is that if they secure an appointment under this provision then they shall have the same right to transfer as any other employee who came into the civil service through competitive sources. It is a protection to them, I may say to the gentleman.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Of course, as far as the secretaries and clerks are concerned, we are really blanketing them in, we are not creating positions in the civil service. This is really not a civil-service measure.

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is true; but I do not believe the gentlewoman objects to that, does she?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I should like to have them have it, but I wish to bring out my argument that most of this is really not civil service.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PEARSON. I should like to ask the gentleman the purpose of Senate amendment number 7, which deals with the question of submission of photographs of the various parties blanketed in under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I may say to the gentleman that I happened to be on the Senate floor when that amendment was offered by a distinguished Member of the other body. He said that in part it was to protect these people from racial discrimination. It was also alleged that photographs sometimes militated against others who were referred to as being homely in appearance.

Mr. PEARSON. Is there any valid reason why an applicant for a civil-service position should not be required to submit a photograph of himself or herself, as the case may be?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not know of a valid reason; no.

Mr. PEARSON. Has it always been the custom of the Civil Service Commission to require photographs to be submitted where parties were applying for civil-service positions?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I cannot say that it has always been the custom, although it has been so for some years; but it is simply a rule of the Commission. There is no law regarding it. Of course, the gentleman would agree with me, I am quite sure, that the Constitution states there shall be no discrimination. If it has been used for that purpose, it has been used in violation of the Constitution.

Mr. PEARSON. What might be a discrimination from an administrative standpoint might not be one from a legislative standpoint. May I ask the gentleman whether or not doing away with the submission of photographs will affect only those who are affected by the provisions of this bill, or will it affect any applicant for a civil-service position outside the provisions of this bill?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It applies to all future applications for civil-service positions.

Mr. PEARSON. To any civil-service position?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. PEARSON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Frankly, I do not believe it makes any difference, because the appointing officers, of course, have a right to interview the applicants.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. May temporary employees working under the emergency appropriation be blanketed in under this bill by Executive order?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; except for the Work Projects Administration.

Mr. SPENCE. There are a certain number of such employees in the Treasury Department. Do they come under this bill?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It is the intention to cover all the employees of that character, if I understand the character of employees the gentleman has in mind, who get their pay from funds appropriated in what we call the relief bill but who are not employed by the Work Projects Administration.

Mr. SPENCE. It is the intention of the framers of the bill to cover those people?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. What about the employees of the Public Works Administration?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Those that are still on the rolls will be covered by this bill. Of course, those that are on furlough will not be covered.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. They will not be covered?

Mr. RAMSPECK. No.

I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I will yield for a question, but not for an observation because the gentlewoman from Massachusetts is going to have time.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes; but very little.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am not going to yield for an observation, but if the gentlewoman wants to ask me a question I will yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I understand that, strictly speaking, the civil-service workers should make a violent protest about the people who are paid from W. P. A. funds who are doing the same work that they are doing. If they make a protest against that they will probably win their point because, I understand, it is not legal to pay people from W. P. A. funds where they should be civil-service jobs.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Nobody paid by the W. P. A. comes under this bill.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes; I understand it is an illegal thing, but it has been done in many instances.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not know anything about that and, of course, that has nothing to do with this bill.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It concerns the bill because they should not be blanketed in.

Mr. RAMSPECK. We are not blanketing in any W. P. A. people.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to my colleague from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman just state the employees that are not covered by this bill?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It does not cover the Work Projects Administration employees; it does not cover the Tennessee Valley Authority employees; it does not cover any position to which the President appoints, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and it does not cover assistant United States attorneys.

Mr. PACE. That is all?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Those are all the exemptions.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am sorry, but I shall have to reserve the balance of my time, because I want to yield gentlemen some time.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THOMASON). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. If the House desired to instruct its conferees as to particular provisions in this conference report, it would first be necessary to vote down the conference report, and after the conference report was voted down, then such motions to instruct them would be in order. Is that correct?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma is correct.

The gentlewoman from Massachusetts is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am a firm believer in the merit system for civil service and always live up to it myself, and make my appointments accordingly. This is a mock civil-service bill. I believe many of the provisions of the conference report will not be acceptable to the Members of the House. Several people are going to speak regarding the quota provision or the elimination of the Nichols amendment; others may speak also of barring those who are doing the census work at the present time. I want to remind the House that the workers at the Census Bureau are those who have taken and passed civil-service examinations and yet those people will be debarred from the provisions of this bill. In other words, if it were a real merit bill, why leave out those who are working in the Census, the only ones who won their spurs and passed an open competitive examination? They are now on the eligible rolls of the civil service.

I want to call the attention of the House again to the fact that the President at the present time, in fact for the past 7½ years, could have blanketed into the civil service 40,000 or 50,000 of these workers or could have required an open competitive civil-service examination to be held. I ask you, in the name of common sense, if the administration wanted a merit bill or wanted the merit system or a real civil-service system, in the beginning when these measures passed the House they would have required that the people going into these Departments pass open competitive examinations, but instead they eliminated the civil-service provisions. I want to remind the House that many of these people could not pass an open competitive test, as was brought out by the Commissioner of Civil Service, both before the House and Senate committees. The hearings will show that in an open competitive examination, even after 7½ years of experience, only 20 percent probably could pass such an examination. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if you feel it is fair to have 1,000,000 eligibles now on the civil-service list, to blanket these persons in by noncompetitive tests. We all know what noncompetitive tests mean. These people are not only blanketed into the civil service, but they go ahead of those on the civil-service eligible list of today.

In other words, these 1,000,000 people will have to wait until these other people are taken care of, not only now but in the years to come, because these people who are blanketed in will be on the list for reemployment and will take precedence over those on the present eligible list.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the very able and distinguished gentlewoman from Massachusetts yield at this point?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I shall be very glad to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And those political-spoils-system appointees who are blanketed into the civil service for lifetime jobs under this bill will be blanketed in if they only make a passing grade of 70 in the noncompetitive examinations while among those millions now on the civil-service eligible list who have taken civil-service examinations, there are many, many thousands who have made grades as high as 95 or 98 percent in competitive civil-service examinations.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Oh, yes; many hundreds of thousands, and it is manifestly unfair.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And therefore, in view of that fact, this bill is not a merit-system bill in any manner whatsoever.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. No; it is a trick bill, and I doubt very much if it pleases even the people who are supposed to be taken in under its provisions.

I wish to call the attention of the House also to the fact that Commissioner Fleming has stated several times before the Appropriations Committee that he did not have the funds to examine applicants, so far as character goes. We know what happened in Detroit—the throwing out of a window by an R. F. C. employee of a waste-paper basket and other things. I do not mean to imply that all these political appointees are like that, but there are many employees in the Government today who have communistic tendencies. Do you realize that those people may be blanketed in without a proper character test and with no proper examination?

Mr. Speaker, I should like to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THOMASON). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAMSPECK. When time has been yielded to a Member by the person in charge of a conference report, can that Member reserve part of the time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of course, the gentleman has control of the time.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yielded 10 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts. She now wishes to reserve part of her time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts cannot do that.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. How much time have I consumed, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman has consumed 5 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. If I cannot reserve part of my time I will proceed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the House the matter of W. P. A. workers who are connected with the W. P. A., who are paid from W. P. A. funds, working side by side, doing the same kind of work, with regular civil-service employees. For instance, in some of the departments a man at one desk has civil-service status. The man on the next desk is paid for with W. P. A. money, but does not have a civil-service status for that position. All those men will be blanketed into the civil service and during all this time if the civil-service workers had wanted to make a protest, I understand that those people could not have been paid with W. P. A. funds, and their positions could only have been filled by civil-service workers.

This is manifestly an unfair provision, and I ask the chairman of the committee if he knows how many people will be taken in under this provision?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Not any. The W. P. A. is exempted.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But those connected with the W. P. A.

Mr. RAMSPECK. There are not any connected with the W. P. A.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. They are paid from W. P. A. funds. In order to clarify this, I quote from item 2 of the statement of the managers on the part of the House. It follows, and it speaks for itself:

(2) As the bill passed the House it excluded "any positions in or connected with the Work Projects Administration." The Senate struck out the words "or connected with." The reason for this was that considerable doubt has arisen about employees working in other agencies of the Government paid from relief funds. It was feared that such employees might be excluded from the provisions of the act, and that was not intended.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I will say to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts that some years back it was true that that money was appropriated to the W. P. A. and then allocated to other agencies. That is not true any more. They are paid now by money that is appropriated in the same appropriation bill.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But those who are connected with the W. P. A. will be blanketed in.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not construe that they are connected with it simply because they get their money out of the same appropriation bill. The Treasury Department and the Post Office Department are covered in the same bill, but I would not say that the Post Office Department is connected with the Treasury Department.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am told it is an illegal provision. Will the gentleman tell me how many will be blanketed in in that way?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not have any idea how many there are.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I have tried to get those figures, without success.

Mr. RAMSPECK. There are some in the Treasury Department, the General Accounting Office, and various places.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I believe that many of the political appointees will be disappointed in their noncompetitive examinations, because it is the easiest thing in the world for a noncompetitive examination to be given so that the person whom the department desires to pass will pass and those whom the department wants to fail will fail.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I think it was admitted in the committee hearings before the Senate that if there were a competitive examination, possibly 75 percent of those now holding jobs would lose their positions. Is that not correct?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That is correct. That was brought out by the chairman of the Civil Service Commission, who testified before our committee.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Even with an examination of 70 percent, noncompetitive, they admitted about 20 or 25 percent would lose their jobs. Is that not correct?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes. In other words, they are saying that they would like to take into the Government service permanently people who are not capable of doing the work.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Is this not a time when we ought to be tightening up on propositions like this rather than loosening up?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman is correct. Particularly in these times of stress, when we have many enemies without our gates, and within the Government itself.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I think the gentlewoman had a letter this morning from someone who told her that this bill was a part of the national-defense program. Does the gentlewoman have time to connect the two together, or can she tell us how the civil service, which has been in operation since 1883, can be connected up with the national-defense program?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. This is a very dangerous measure so far as national defense is concerned. There are 44,390 people, for instance, employed in the War Department today who might be frozen in under this bill. Imagine taking those persons, perhaps some of them Communists or members of the Bund, into civil service by noncompetitive examinations, freezing them in. I declare, this is all wrong. [Applause.]

Following is a letter I have received from the Civil Service Commission, giving the latest available figures concerning the classified and unclassified positions:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., October 3, 1940.

HON. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MRS. ROGERS: In response to your personal request yesterday the Commission advises you that the latest figures compiled showing the number of classified civil-service positions and the number of unclassified civil-service positions in the Federal Government are as of December 1939; the June 30, 1940, figures will not be available for some time.

In December 1939 there were 660,594 classified positions and 271,711 unclassified positions, a total of 932,305. Among the number of nonclassified positions are from 40,000 to 50,000 in what is known as schedules A and B of the civil-service rules which positions may be classified by the President whether or not H. R. 960 becomes law. Of the remaining number of unclassified positions so many of them are intermittent, part time, seasonal, or cooperative that the Commission believes the number likely to be brought into the classified service if H. R. 960 becomes law would be from 125,000 to 150,000.

You will note from the third column of figures in the attached table that the departments and establishments in which the greatest number of nonclassified persons are employed are:

Treasury Department	20,556
War Department	44,390
Justice Department	5,007
Post Office Department	3,894
Navy Department	7,284
Interior Department	26,986
Agriculture Department	53,106
Federal Loan Agency	19,739
Federal Security Agency	4,433
Federal Works Agency	38,021
Panama Canal	14,867
Tennessee Valley Authority	14,597

Although the State Department in December 1939 had 4,792 unclassified positions the greater number of these were in the Foreign Service of the Department subject to the merit system established by the Rogers Act.

Very sincerely yours,

L. A. MOYER,
Executive Director and Chief Examiner.

[1] Exclusive of temporary employees in substitute grades of the Post Office Department consisting of 1,061 in the District of Columbia and 53,376 outside the District of Columbia who were included in the monthly report of employment and pay rolls for December 1939.

[2] The unclassified positions which are excepted from the competitive requirements of the Civil Service Act and rules in the several departments and independent establishments include all unclassified positions regardless of whether financed by regular or emergency funds. They also include unclassified positions where the employees occupying these positions have civil-service status and unskilled laborers who are appointed in accordance with the provisions of the labor regulations promulgated by the President.

[3] Includes employees hired under special letters of authorization.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. KELLER. I will not take the 5 minutes; I will not take 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, I have been against the acts of the Civil Service Commission for many years because they have not been fair in allocating the jobs among the several States. The present Commission, however, has been doing a lot better than its predecessors. I have their assurance, and I believe it is true, that they will as a matter of fact from now on obey the law strictly and specifically in that regard and give to the States that are under their quota the number that is coming to them. For this reason I am going to vote for the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois yields back 4 minutes.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the adoption of the conference report and am against the passage of this bill. Let it be understood that I am very strongly in favor of a fair, competitive civil-service merit system. I am in favor of doing everything possible to strengthen and improve our civil-service laws. I believe the positions involved in this bill should be under civil service. As a matter of fact, they should have been under civil service when they were created. But the method provided in this bill is not fair and there is no justification for trying to correct a wrong already committed, by the backhanded method which you are using under the guise of civil service.

I am opposed to this bill because it does not provide for fair, open, competitive examinations for these positions that are to be under civil service. In substance, this bill says approximately 250,000 or more political appointees will be blanketed into civil service and permitted to hold their jobs during life tenure, provided only that they are able to make a grade of at least 70 percent on a noncompetitive basis. This chosen group will then acquire the same status and have the same privileges granted to those who earned their positions on a competitive basis, including retirement benefits and annuities.

It has always been my understanding that open and free competition for positions in Government work is in line with the principles of a democratic form of government. When you adopt this conference report and pass the bill, you are going to give some 250,000 politically selected employees the protection of noncompetitive examinations. You are going to eliminate one of the most important factors in the civil-service system—the right of an individual to open competition for Government positions. I just do not see how Members of this Congress can sidestep that principle. Regardless of which party is in power, whether it be Republican or Democratic, political preference does not belong in a merit system.

There are about 4,000,000 young men and women of this country—college and high-school graduates—who do not have permanent positions. Under this measure you close the door to 250,000 jobs which you are bringing under civil service and you tell these young people they cannot compete for them.

Mr. Speaker, there are approximately 800,000 qualified men and women who have successfully passed competitive civil-service examinations. Their names are on the eligible registers. Under this bill, you bring more than 250,000 jobs under civil service, and then turn right square around and tell these 800,000 applicants that even though they may be qualified for part or all of these jobs, they have no right to compete for them. Political patronage has already filled the jobs, and by this bill you are "freezing-in" those job holders. The only exception would be, of course, if some of the appointees received less than a 70-percent grade on the noncompetitive basis.

I have before me an article which appeared in the press a few days ago. It estimates that if competitive tests were required, the mortality among the incumbents on these jobs may reach as high as 70 percent. But even if 50 percent or half of them would fail a competitive examination, why should we permit them to hold their jobs when we have thousands on the eligible registers who have shown themselves to be better qualified to do the work. Government officials admit that under the easy method provided in this bill that approximately 20 percent will not be able to make even a grade of 70 percent. Tell me why a man or woman who has taken an examination in good faith and received a grade of 80 percent or 90 percent should stand aside for somebody who happens to hold the job and can get a grade of 70 percent without competition. I do not want these people to lose their jobs any more than you do. I would be willing to allow them some credit for their experience but do think they should be willing to compete with the fellow on the outside.

Mr. Speaker, the people who hold these jobs receive substantial salaries. Their working hours are not long—the maximum in most cases is 39 hours per week. They are allowed retirement benefits and annuities, as well as vacations and sick leave. They are employees of the people of this country. In turn, the people supporting this Government and paying these salaries are entitled to the very highest quality of efficiency and industry. I do not maintain that the present incumbents are not qualified—not for a moment. But I do believe they should be willing and glad to meet the standards of a real civil-service system, on a fair competitive basis.

Mr. Speaker, about 2 years ago the chairman of our committee submitted legislation to bring these jobs under civil service by open, competitive examinations. This bill provided for open competitive examinations. Hearings were held. The legislation was approved by many groups, including the American Federation of Government Employees. Col. Charles I. Stengle, as president of that organization, said:

> It also happens that this bill embodies to a very large extent one of the outstanding planks in our legislative program. We are happy to know it is not only in conformity with our program but it seems there is a harmony—a most unusual harmony—between the President's program, your program, and our program.

In these hearings concerning H. R. 2700 Mr. Kaplan, representing the Civil Service Reform League, said:

> The Ramspeck bill now before you for consideration is a proposal that our national league has advocated for a long time.

That bill, as I have said before, provided for competitive civil-service examinations.

I am informed these groups have more or less decided that if they cannot have that original bill providing for competitive examinations, they are willing to accept the noncompetitive provisions rather than have nothing at all. That is my understanding of it. That bill, which I favored, was not voted upon by the committee. We were informed the President's reorganization plan did not favor competitive examinations for these positions. This bill, H. R. 960, was reported instead.

Mr. Speaker, when these 250,000 jobs were created during the past 6 or 7 years, Congress deliberately and intentionally, and in the name of emergency, exempted them from the civil-service merit system. It was a mistake, and you know it.

But this is not the way to rectify it. The way to correct that mistake is to take a little more time and use the democratic method of open competitive examinations. Make these jobs civil service in fact as well as in name. It has been decided all at once that it is for the best interests of the country to put these politically appointed employees under civil service. We are still, or again, in an emergency—in a great hurry to get this done. Although, as I said before, we have waited 5, 6, or 7 years to get around to it.

Something has been said about previous administrations having covered in Government positions without competitive examinations. I do not approve such action by either party. But, never in the history of our country has there been such a wholesale covering-in of jobs as is being done this afternoon. As a matter of fact, this administration has already included in civil service by Executive order some 60,000 or 70,000 jobs, without competitive examination.

Mr. Speaker, in March 1933 there were approximately 560,000 Federal employees outside the Army and Navy. Eighty-three percent of them were under civil service. In January 1940 that number had grown to an all-time high of 920,000, with only 66 percent under civil service. At the end of July 1940 the number was increased to an unprecedented figure of 1,023,341 and is increasing by the thousands every week. We have added Government workers to our pay roll during the last 2 years at the rate of 10,000 or 12,000 per month. The annual pay roll for their salaries is more than one and one-half billion dollars.

The question you are to decide this afternoon is whether you want to maintain one of the greatest principles of democracy—and that is to give every man and woman who is qualified, a fair and even chance to seek a position in this Government of ours, on the basis of qualifications and ability. That is the merit system. This bill does not follow such a principle. It is a subterfuge for the protection—for the "freezing in" of a select group of persons who may or may not be qualified for their jobs, and who got them by political patronage—which is the antithesis of a fair, democratic merit system. Members of the House—I am not concerned about the Democrats or the Republicans in the consideration of this measure. But I am deeply concerned about securing the very highest type of service to be obtained for the departments of our Government—and the best way to secure the highest class of efficient service is through fair, competitive examinations, and likewise adhere to the democratic method of permitting all qualified persons, regardless of party, to have a chance for the job.

Mr. Speaker, this House adopted an apportionment amendment, intended to stop the abuse of our present law providing that civil-service jobs shall be distributed among the several States and the District of Columbia in accordance with their population. For example, the District of Columbia is entitled to approximately 200 employees and has between 8,000 and 9,000. Some of our Eastern States have twice the number to which they are entitled. This amendment should go back into this bill.

Mr. Speaker, we have done so many things in the name of emergency during the past 7 years. There is no emergency about this measure. I think it is for the best interests of our people that the bill be turned down and the Committee on the Civil Service requested to report a measure bringing these jobs under civil service and giving everyone who is qualified a fair chance to compete for them in an open, competitive examination. You would then have a real merit system. If I thought this was a real civil-service bill I would gladly support it. It is not civil service. It is lip service. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Did I understand the gentleman to say that 20 percent of the people holding these political appointment will not be able to pass an examination to continue in their present jobs? Every law creating New Deal agencies from A. A. A. up or down exempted these new positions from the civil-service law, and now all those 200,000 jobs are to be covered into the civil service without competitive examination.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The testimony before the committee was to the effect that about 20 percent would fail in the noncompetitive examinations. That was an estimate.

I understand from an article put out by those who favor civil service, it is estimated that 70 percent of the present non-civil-service employees would fail in a competitive examination. But if the number were only 50 percent, why withhold these jobs from those who could or have passed competitive examinations?

We are faced with conflicting statements. On the one hand they say it blankets the jobs into civil service and on the other hand it says it blankets the holders of the jobs under civil service. Certainly it cannot be called a merit system when the individuals are blanketed in without a proper examination.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield to the distinguished Member from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Is it not true that the difference between those who would pass under a competitive examination as compared with those who would pass under a noncompetitive examination is about 175,000? And if this is so this bill will result in the retaining in office of 175,000 people who are not qualified.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is approximately correct; yes. Not as well qualified as they should be.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am glad to yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman made a very fine statement about the quota system. I wish he would tell the House about that. I know there is great interest among Members who have spoken to me about that. It would be very bad to eliminate the quota system.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I believe the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] will give us a pretty good discussion of that. I would like to suggest, however, that I do not see how advocates of a merit system could support legislation that does not adhere to a fair-quota system.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, my position with regard to the present functioning of the civil-service law is well known. I have many times said it was not a merit system, and I repeat that statement. May I say to you today that unless you stop such things as are proposed by the provisions of this act the civil service, as we know it today, will soon become an octopus that will suck the lifeblood out of your Government. [Applause.]

Let us talk about the Keller-Nichols amendment, for which my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] has now lost affection. This does not apply to me. I was convinced at the time this bill was under consideration that, since this is a democracy, the law which says that civil-service employees should be selected upon a quota based upon population was a good law. I have been laboring under the opinion that my people in Oklahoma, the people of Texas, the people of Illinois, and other parts of the United States—fine American citizens all—are as much entitled to this cloak of protection that the Government furnishes, called civil service, as are the people from Maryland, Virginia, the District of Columbia, New York, and other States.

I will now call this the Nichols amendment since the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] has withdrawn his support. The terrible thing about the Nichols amendment is that it says to our neighbors in Maryland, who are 295 percent above their quota, and to the District of Columbia, with their 4,000 percent above their quota, "You just wait with your 295 and 4,000 percent until the rest of the States get what the law says they are entitled to." It does not say to our friends in Maryland, "You fire somebody and let us catch up." Is that a terrible situation? Why, the Marylanders themselves will not object. There is Virginia with 192 percent above its quota. We do not want any of their boys and girls who are under civil service to lose their jobs. We do not want them to even wait until we catch up with them. We just want them to wait until we in Oklahoma and 32 other States in the United States get the number of people under civil service that the law says we are entitled to.

Let me read you the States that are under quota:

> California, Alaska, Texas, Louisiana, Michigan, Arizona, South Carolina, Arkansas, Alabama, Mississippi, Ohio, New Jersey, Georgia, Kentucky, North Carolina, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Nevada, Illinois, Wisconsin, Indiana, Connecticut, Vermont, Florida, Rhode Island, North Dakota, and Kansas—

Thirty-two in all.

The distinguished chairman of the committee says that the Civil Service Commission has reformed; that it promises us they are going to be good boys after this, and they are going to pay some attention to the law. They have not in the past, but from now on they are going to make the quotas apply. Yes? Well, there was a joker in the Census Act. I did not know it was in there, and I doubt that many of you did. It had a provision that those employees should be taken under civil service without regard to the quota system.

Here is what happened, and I read now from a statement by George Riley appearing in one of the Washington newspapers:

> There have gone into the census for duty in Washington 8,151 temporary employees as of August 31. The distribution by States is interesting. The District of Columbia has supplied 16 percent of the 8,000. New York comes first with 22 percent, 1,803.

In other words, 38 percent of the 8,000 employees which were recently given civil-service employment and employed in the Census Bureau came from the District of Columbia and New York State. That is 38 percent, and no one dares gainsay that.

There are 30 States in this Union of States with fewer than 100 employees in the 8,000 civil-service employees taken into the Census Bureau. Eleven States have between 100 and 200. Seven States have more than 200. Is that distribution? No; I for one am not willing to trust the Civil Service Commission to do equity now that they have failed to do in the past. [Applause.]

I am against this conference report in toto, but certainly if you are to remain fair and honest and true to the trust of your constituents, if you come from a State that is underquotaed, you will be compelled to vote against this conference report in order that you can support a motion I will then make to instruct the conferees to insist on the Nichols amendment.

Do you know that there was not a roll call on that amendment when it passed this House before? It passed on a division vote, and, as I recall, it was 151 for and only 40 against. To the managers on the part of the House let me say from whom do you get your instructions but from this body? By an overwhelming majority they laid down to you a trust, an order, and a command that you insist that this amendment stay in the bill, and you come back here now with no opposition, no one has said they opposed taking it out in the conference. Do you know why? Mr. Mitchell, of the Civil Service Commission, says it just cannot be done, it will not work. Let me say this to Mr. Mitchell and to the other members of the Civil Service Commission—if their intelligence is not such that they can by the manipulation of figures find out what a State is entitled to and give that State what it is entitled to before other States get more than they are entitled to, then we ought to get a new Civil Service Commission. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman from Oklahoma who has just taken his seat, may I say that the Civil Service Commission had nothing to do with the fact that the employees of the Census Bureau were not under the quota system, just as they have nothing to do with the fact that the employees with whom we are dealing in this bill are not under the quota system because Congress exempted them when they took them out from under civil service.

The gentleman criticizes the Civil Service Commission. This present Commission went into office in 1933. At that time the gentleman's own State, Oklahoma, had 196 positions in the District of Columbia in the apportioned service under the quota system. Today the State of Oklahoma has 732 positions, which shows that the Civil Service Commission has done its duty and has given preference to Oklahoma citizens in apportioned or quota positions. The record also shows that during that same period the District of Columbia has lost 2,000 positions in the apportioned service here in the District of Columbia. So the statement made by the gentleman from Oklahoma is based upon a lack of knowledge of the facts, and it is not the fact. The Commission is rapidly adjusting the quota system and doing it just as rapidly as it can under the law.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I should like to know, from the gentleman's intimate study of this problem, if the fact that the State of Maryland has today so many beyond her quota is not due largely—and everybody who knows anything about this subject concedes this, I believe, to be true—that many people from other States receiving employment with the Government in Washington, move across the line into Maryland and, while they are charged to their respective States, relatives and members of their families land jobs through their efforts, and are charged to Maryland—their new home. Obviously, it is not fair to say that Maryland is so much beyond its quota under those circumstances. We should not be penalized because residents of other States, once residing in Maryland, find it ideal as a permanent home.

Mr. RAMSPECK. There is something in what the gentleman says, but primarily the maladjustment of the quota system grew up during the World War when the Commission had to take people from wherever they could get them to fill the positions.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. Is it not true that when one goes into the civil service from a certain State he remains in the service as from that State, whether he lives in Virginia, Maryland, or anywhere else?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I believe the gentleman is correct about that.

May I say before I take my seat again that there are some 16 States that are overquotaed, including the large States of Pennsylvania, New York, and other States close by, who have furnished a great many eligibles on the present list. This means that the underquotaed States will rise very rapidly. I have the record here on each State to show anyone who questions that statement. I cannot go down the line and enumerate them here in the limited time I have, but I may say that the Commission is adjusting this situation very rapidly.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SASSCER].

Mr. SASSCER. Mr. Speaker, from listening to the debate and following the consideration of the bill now under discussion, it is very apparent that the primary purpose of the bill is to protect employees who are in office, some of them technical employees, many of them serving in important positions for which they have been specially trained since joining the Government service. A lot of these employees have had their positions for some years. Some have passed middle age. On that premise, and with the realization that the idea of the bill is to get away from the plunder system and to protect faithful Government employees, it certainly seems to me that an effort to vote down this conference report would be a vote to accomplish the very opposite purpose, because it has been very openly stated that the purpose of attempting to get this conference report voted down is that in blanketing in these employees who come from overquota States. Instead of protecting the people the bill aimed to protect we would throw them into a plunder system and pull out of employment in the departments at a critical time men and women who are particularly fitted for their jobs. And for what purpose? For the sole and express purpose of making political plunder and getting away from the basic idea of protection of Government employees. I trust, therefore, that the conference report will be adopted. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT].

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to state that I have supported this so-called Ramspeck civil-service bill from its inception to date. I admire the able, sincere, and distinguished chairman of the Civil Service Committee. This conference report upon which we must now act has greatly changed the original Ramspeck bill.

I rise now to call your attention to the "sight unseen" or "catch as catch can" amendment to this bill—that is amendment No. 7. This amendment will set up an entirely new policy within the Civil Service Commission. This amendment eliminates the attaching of pictures to civil-service job applications. If this amendment is adopted, there is no way of knowing whether the prospective employee is black or white. If this amendment becomes law, employees must be chosen with no idea of their appearance or physical characteristics. These facts are not disclosed by the civil-service papers except through photographs, which some persons now want to eliminate primarily as a sop to Negro voters.

I want to call your attention to the fact that there is a vast difference between racial distinction and racial discrimination. Under this amendment, the employer who wanted to secure a colored stenographer might secure a white one instead, and vice versa.

I have in mind the experience of a friend of mine who has charge of an office in this city which is under the civil service. Some time ago he was authorized to employ a badly needed stenographer in his own office. He sent for an eligible list, which was delivered to him by the Civil Service Commission. All three eligibles on this list were Negro girls.

There may be other objections to this report. But certainly amendment No. 7 makes this report, to my mind, untenable. I think that most, if not all, of us are sincerely in favor of a merit system, but when I observe some of the things that are being done under the guise of merit and when I read this report I am inclined to exclaim: "O merit, merit, what crimes are committed in thy name." [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOSER].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. MOSER. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include a report from the Civil Service Commission of September 30, 1940, to show the quota of States as now outlined.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Speaker, I regret the necessity of my opposition to the conference report, because it restricts the House in its effort to instruct the conferees to return and insist upon the House amendment.

My opposition to this bill goes back to the days when I first qualified for a civil-service job. I was a pretty young country school teacher, only 18 years of age, but I sent in a picture to the Civil Service Commission to let them know what I looked like, and according to all precedents ever since then, so far as I know, people have been submitting their photographs, and I can find no reason why we should feel that there was any discrimination ever made of any appointive officer or civil-service executive because the person was required to submit his photograph.

I am opposed to this philosophy because I am a firm believer and advocate of the principle of merit in determining efficiency in taking an examination or qualifying for a position within the classified civil service. We are all good Americans here and we have taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and even when I was in the classified civil service, time after time, in addition to that oath, I was obliged to take oath that I would also abstain from anything prohibited by its laws and prevent its being done by another. I still cling to that type of oath under the Constitution, but over on the cornice of the Supreme Court Building we have a motto which is something for us to look upon: "Equal Justice Under Law." We have a law that governs the civil service that has been in operation since 1883. It is the same law under which I qualified to enter the civil service 36 years ago, and the same law that has not been changed since that time. However, for the determination of merit in the application of the law, I want to point out to the membership of the House that we have in the Civil Service Commission certain administrative officials who have been in it a long time, and some of them I knew in the days of my experience in the classified service. They tell us that a part of this law that applies to the apportionment to the different States cannot be operated or administered, and yet at the same time these officials of the Civil Service Commission who confess their inability to administer a law that is charged to them as a responsibility, have conveniently added to this bill since it passed the House, by amendment in another body, a salary raiser whereby we are to reward them for their own admitted incompetence to administer the law as it is to be applied.

Take the executive director of the Civil Service Commission, a perfectly affable and likeable fellow, who tells you they cannot administer and enforce the apportionment law but wants you to promote him; and the chief examiner of the Civil Service Commission, one of the most likeable and sociable fellows I ever knew, tells us we cannot go out and conduct examinations like they had when you and I took them because young people are no longer trained in the schools the way they were in the past and, therefore, could not pass the examinations and we must lower the standards of merit. I do not believe this is the time to reward men with salary raises, but you will find that in the bill.

I would also like briefly to address myself to that amendment striking out three little words from this bill, "or connected with" Work Projects Administration. Having served on the Committee on Civil Service of the House for sometime, I was very much in favor of H. R. 2700 because it provided for open, competitive examinations, but I was opposed to H. R. 960 because it provided for noncompetitive examinations. We had that bill tied up in the committee pretty tight, and our distinguished chairman and all the members of the Civil Service Committee know that an agreement was entered into whereby the Work Projects Administration was excluded from the provisions of the bill.

Having thus been excluded from the bill, the bill was reported out. Now, people who are on the rolls who were originally placed on pay rolls as a consequence of appropriations, through the W. P. A., are in those administrative agencies of government who came before committees of the House and Senate for years seeking increased appropriations. To get them they went on relief for large amounts, and there they are; and, by the enactment of this bill, will be classified noncompetitively and remain, however prejudicially selected, to the exclusion of our constituencies qualifying competitively. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARTER].

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I know this has been pretty well presented to you up to this time, but I do want to drive home to the Members who may not have been on the floor of the House when the debate started that here you are bringing into the merit system, by blanketing in with noncompetitive examinations, somewhere between 200,000 and 250,000. Whereas we used to add a few at a time under the civil-service law, now we are asked to "freeze in" 200,000 or 250,000 at one fell swoop. Frankly, such a method is going to be the uprooting of the merit system rather than building it up.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTER of New York. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. As I understand it, the reason we are urged to blanket these in is that they are indispensable to the national defense at this time. How many indispensable men are there in Washington at this time?

Mr. HARTER of New York. Frankly, when this was before the committee, there was no discussion about indispensability. This came up, as I understand it, in 1938. Then the committee would not have anything to do with it. In 1939 and now again in 1940 the leadership has decided that we should blanket in all these employees, most of whom received their appointments through political influence.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTER of New York. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. In 1938 this committee did have a bill.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Yes.

Mr. REES of Kansas. It was H. R. 2700. The committee held hearings on it and after holding hearings on it for a while there came along a document known as the President's reorganization measure. Under the recommendations of that reorganization bill, this H. R. 2700 was ditched. We quit right there. We did not even vote on it in the committee. I think probably the gentleman was not a member of the committee at that time, but I thought he should be advised of that situation. So that the committee did not have a chance to vote on H. R. 2700, which provided for a competitive civil-service examination.

Mr. HARTER of New York. That is my understanding.

Mr. REES of Kansas. By the way, you know there is a committee that was called the Reed committee which was supposed to report on the whole problem and bring its report back to the House. That committee has not yet reported.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, improvement of the merit system cannot be accomplished by passing over thousands on the civil-service list—there through the hard way, by open, competitive examinations. If this bill becomes a law as it now is drawn, those now holding the jobs will receive only a qualifying examination when actually they should be called upon to qualify by open competitive examinations, with some possible credit allowed for their service as experience. I say to the Members of this House that this "freezing in" of 200,00 persons, appointed largely through influence with the powers that be in Washington, will do much toward breaking down the merit system, which I am sure most of us want to make stronger.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in spite of personal grievances of some, party prejudices of others, and racial prejudices galore, we are now about to commit ourselves upon one of the most important bills that has come before the Congress this session. We are, I hope, about to extend, as all civilized countries have extended, and in the only way in which it can be done either by Republicans or Democrats, the merit principle to Federal employment throughout. Disingenuous indeed are those who praise the end and dispraise the means. The way we propose to do it was the only way we could do it under Harding, under Hoover, or under Coolidge; and it is the only way we can do it now. Truth to tell, this administration has made some advance; for heretofore the "blanketing in," to which some profess to object, was done without examinations at all, whereas we do propose noncompetitive examinations.

If we want to do it without prejudice and in the full spirit of justice we shall have to do it by fingerprinting as identification rather than by photographing. Let me draw for you the moral of Carl Sandburg's stagecoach driver. Seeing his coach stalled, this driver put his head through the window and shouted: "First-class passengers, keep your seats; second-class passengers, get out and walk; third-class passengers, get out and shove." [Laughter.]

Is this a nation of first-class, second-class, and third-class passengers? If it is, keep the photograph in to discriminate against women, to discriminate against Jews, to discriminate against Negroes, and to discriminate against anybody else whose physiognomy you do not like. But I am under the impression that this is a nation in which we are all first-class citizens. I do not like the imputation of second- and third-class citizens in a nation sworn to equal justice under law. If all are first-class citizens, then we shall vote this change to fingerprinting for the sake of plain, simple justice—justice in which Democrats and Republicans alike are interested.

If we do not do ourselves the elemental justice of removing the initial opportunity for prejudice to do its dirty work, we can hardly wonder at some national disunity as the result of our provocation. It was a Negro poet, Paul Lawrence Dunbar, who put so neatly the way one should feel toward a neighbor who is nice in words and nasty in discrimination:

I know there is a heaven, for day by day the upward yearning of my soul doth tell me so.
I know, too, there is a hell, for if there were not, pray, where would my neighbors go?

It is the good fortune of America and the glory of the Negro race that as yet Negroes reply to overt and obvious discrimination with good humor, even if wryly. They deserve for all their long suffering and the forms of fairness until they can appreciate the very fact of fairness. This provision in our conference report would initiate a policy of at least fairness in form. Some of you will not let us do more than this. Many of us, under heaven, cannot do less than this and keep our own self-respect. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, there is some sincere opposition to this conference report. That opposition, however, is largely on the Republican side, due to the fact that this is a Democratic administration. I welcome the votes of my friends on the Republican side who support this bill in their vote and compliment them upon rising above party prejudices.

The Republican Party has not used even the competitive examination to extend the civil service except on one occasion.

The opposition of my friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma, is not for the contents of the conference report because he voted against the bill with his own amendment in it. He is against it because he is against civil service. He is against the Civil Service Commission, although they have given his State almost four times as many positions as the State had before this Commission came into power.

We have here today the opportunity for the first time in the History of America to make the Government service almost 100-percent merit. Are we going to turn it down because of a little prejudice toward the Negroes? Are we going to turn it down because of misinformation about the quota system? Or are we going to rise above those things and give the President of the United States the authority to extend the civil service which he has asked for time and time again and which many of us on both sides of the Capitol voted for in the reorganization bill last year? That is the question at issue here today. It is a question of whether or not you want to make the Federal service one of merit. We give you the opportunity to place these 200,000 people under the merit system. If the averages carry out this time as they have under the previous noncompetitive examinations given by this Commission, about 40,000 of these positions will be vacated through failure of the present holders to pass the examination or the physical test, and those positions will go to the States that are under quota. I call your attention to the fact that the only chance you have, even underquota States, to get a single one of these positions is to vote for this conference report, because if you vote it down the positions will continue to be occupied by the present incumbents and will not come under the quota system.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

The gentleman from Georgia moves the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 132, nays 181, not voting 116, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. RAMSPECK and Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified civil service of the United States and appoint conferees.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. If the motion made by the gentleman from Georgia prevails, then the bill will be back in the same position it was before this procedure. Is this correct?

The SPEAKER. If the motion prevails, the bill goes back to conference.

Mr. MICHENER. And if the motion does not prevail, the bill will not be in conference and very likely will not be disposed of this session.

The SPEAKER. It will be on the Speaker's table.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. If the motion made by the gentleman from Georgia is agreed to, will it then be in order to move to instruct the conferees?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. One motion to instruct conferees will be in order.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAMSPECK) there were—ayes 123, noes 110.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. NICHOLS moves that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H. R. 960 be instructed not to agree to Senate amendment No. 9.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to use anywhere near the amount of time that I would be entitled to under this motion. My distinguished friend, the chairman of the Civil Service Committee, made certain observations a minute ago that I think I should be entitled to answer, or some Member of the House should answer. For instance, the gentleman from Georgia pointed out that Oklahoma had made certain gains since 1933 in the number of people employed by the civil service. Of course, they have, and so, also, I hope has every State in the Union, because since 1933 the civil-service employees of this Government have doubled and, of course, every State, no doubt, has increased in number over what they had in 1933. But that does not mean the quota system is going to prevail and is going to be put into operation by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] pointed out that the only way that we could hope to get the quota system to work is to agree to this conference report. That was a startling statement to make. Why, the terms of this amendment would give positive orders to the Civil Service Commission as to what it could and could not do. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] certainly does not mean to flout in the face of the Members of the House of Representatives the fact that the Civil Service Commission is not going to comply with the law. It has not complied with it under the quota system in the past. But this is positive and certain in its demands. Certainly the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] does not mean to say that we who have the intestinal fortitude to oppose the powerful Civil Service Commission are going to be punished by the Civil Service Commission. I am not afraid of that. I do not think the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] meant exactly what he said.

I say there is no chance of getting the quota system observed unless this amendment is agreed to, which is just exactly opposite to the statement made by my friend from Georgia. There is no use in debating this any further. I think everyone has his mind made up. I simply want you to know that there are 32 States in the United States that are below their quotas, and I have read the list heretofore. If you are interested in your State getting what the law now says it is entitled to, you will support the motion now pending on the Speaker's desk to instruct the conferees to not agree with the Senate amendment which took out of the bill the Keller-Nichols amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COLE of Maryland), there were—ayes 164, noes 42.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the motion was agreed to, and the Chair appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. RAMSPECK, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. FRIES, Mrs. ROGERS of Massachussetts, and Mr. REES of Kansas.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the report is filed on this bill, it may be taken up notwithstanding the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK]?

There was no objection.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 4561. An act for the relief of Mrs. George C. Hamilton and Nanette Anderson; and

H. R. 9972. An act authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had ordered that Mr. GREEN be appointed as conferee vice Mr. TRUMAN on the part of the Senate to the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10412) entitled "An act to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes."

IMPROVEMENT OF CERTAIN RIVERS AND HARBORS IN THE INTEREST OF NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. MANSFIELD submitted the following conference report on the bill (H. R. 9972), authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes.

Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 9972, authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of national defense, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9972) authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 7.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5 and 6, and agree to the same.

J. J. MANSFIELD,
CLAUDE V. PARSONS,
ALBERT E. CARTER,
GEO. A. DONDERO,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOSIAH W. BAILEY,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
HIRAM W. JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9972) authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of national defense, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

Amendment No. 1: This amendment strikes out the House authorization for improvement of Thames River, Conn., at an estimated cost of $120,000. Since the passage of the bill by the House this project has, on account of its urgency, been undertaken by the Navy Department.

House conferees recede.

Amendment No. 2: This amendment modifies the project for the construction of local works for the protection of East Hartford, Conn., authorized in the Flood Control Act approved June 28, 1938, so as to provide for protecting a larger area than was originally contemplated. This change in the plans increases the cost of the work to the United States $1,640,000. As far as your conferees are advised no communications from any of the Executive Departments, recommending this project as being in the interest of national defense, have been submitted to the Congress.

Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 3: This amendment adopts a project, recommended by the Chief of Engineers in House Document 683, 76th Congress, for enlarging the anchorage areas in Norfolk Harbor, Va., at a cost of $182,000. This improvement is also recommended by the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, Navy Department, as will appear from a letter printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Oct. 4, 1940, page 19879.

House conferees recede.

Amendment No. 4: This amendment authorizes a modification of the existing project for the Sabine and Neches Waterway, Texas. The proposed improvement is described and recommended in the following letter from Maj. Gen. J. L. Schley, Chief of Engineers, to Hon. JOSIAH W. BAILEY, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
WASHINGTON, September 23, 1940.

Honorable JOSIAH W. BAILEY,
Chairman, Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BAILEY: I have received your letter dated September 21 in reference to an amendment to H. R. 7972, intended to be proposed by Senator SHEPPARD, relative to the improvement of the Sabine-Neches Waterway at Orange, Texas.

The proposed improvement is described in a review report forwarded to this office by the Division Engineer, Gulf of Mexico Division, on August 28, 1940, pursuant to a resolution adopted February 14, 1940, by the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate. This report, which is now pending before the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, recommends "that the existing project for the Sabine-Neches Waterway, Texas, be modified to provide for a. Abandonment of the Orange turning basin.

b. Dredging a channel 25 feet deep and 150 feet wide, suitably widened on bends, through the turning basin area and continuing upstream to the highway bridge, a distance of about 8,230 feet above the upper limit of the present project.

c. Dredging a cut-off channel 25 feet deep, 200 feet wide, and approximately 2,400 feet long, all as shown on plate 2 accompanying the basic report, at an estimated cost of $137,000 for initial dredging with no increase in the annual cost of maintenance, provided:

(1) That no dredging shall be done by the United States within 50 feet of existing pierheads or established pierhead lines.

(2) That local interests shall furnish, free of cost to the United States, all necessary rights-of-way and suitable areas for the disposal of material excavated in the modification of the project and in its future maintenance, as and when required.

(3) That local interests shall hold and save the United States free from any damages that may result from the construction and maintenance of the modified project.

(4) That before any work shall be undertaken by the United States toward modification of the project the local interests shall give assurances satisfactory to the Secretary of War that they have secured contracts for the construction of Government ships required by the defense program and that they are ready to proceed with the construction of the necessary shipyards and ship ways.

With reference to provision (4) above, the Navy Department, on September 20, 1940, informed me that a contract has been awarded the Consolidated Steel Corporation for the construction of twelve (12) 2100-ton destroyers at their Orange plant, and that a channel 25 feet deep from just above this plant to the present ship channel is essential.

A copy of the letter from the Navy Department is enclosed.

Sincerely yours,

J. L. SCHLEY,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

One enclosure: Copy of letter from Navy Dept., Sept. 20, 1940.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF SHIPS,
Washington, D. C., September 20, 1940.

Maj. Gen. JULIAN L. SCHLEY, U. S. A.,
Chief of Engineers,
War Department, Washington, D. C.

SIR: The Navy Department has awarded a contract to the Consolidated Steel Corporation for the construction of twelve (12) 2100-ton Destroyers at their plant at Orange, Texas. A channel from just above this plant to the present ship channel, of approximately twenty-five feet (25') in depth, is essential to this National Defense project.

Respectfully,

S. M. ROBINSON,
Rear Admiral, U. S. Navy, Chief, Bureau of Ships.

The House conferees recede.

Amendment No. 5: This amendment makes verbal change perfecting the language in the House provision.

House conferees recede.

Amendment No. 6: This amendment makes verbal change perfecting the language in the House provision for Los Angelus and Long Beach Harbors, Calif. It also provides for the extension of the breakwater at Long Beach from 7,920 feet, as authorized in the House provision, to 21,000 feet. This extension will provide the secure anchorage desired for the increased fleet; also, the Department has secured funds and is about to undertake the construction of fleet facilities on Terminal Island for the supply and docking of ships, antisubmarine net storage, and other fleet facilities. Letters from the War and Navy Departments, recommending this modification, are printed in Senate Report 2072, of this session, pages 2 and 3.

House conferees recede.

Amendment No. 7: This amendment authorizes appropriations for the Missouri River Basin flood control project of such sums as may be necessary to prosecute the construction of a dam and reservoir on the Republican River at the Harlan County site, instead of at the Milford site, as provided for in the Flood Control Act of June 28, 1938. The estimated cost of nine reservoirs included in this project for the Missouri River Basin is over $145,000,000, but only $9,000,000 was authorized to be appropriated in the 1938 Flood Control Act to initiate this work. This sum of $9,000,000 is to be expended in prosecuting the construction of the Kanopolis Reservoir on Smoky Hill River, Kans. The estimated cost of constructing the reservoir on the Harlan County site is $20,078,098. As far as your conferees are advised no communications from any of the Executive Departments recommending this project as being in the interest of national defense have been submitted to the Congress.

Senate recedes.

J. J. MANSFIELD,
CLAUDE V. PARSONS,
ALBERT E. CARTER,
GEO. A. DONDERO,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the bill before us is one that was instituted last spring in the interest of national defense. If you will recall, a general river and harbor bill was passed during the present year and vetoed by the President upon the ground principally that the money to be expended would be more needed for purposes of national defense than for internal improvement. The President stated in his message, however, that there were many projects in the bill which he would be glad to approve if a separate bill could be brought in embracing them.

Following this message, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors passed a resolution calling upon the engineers of the War Department to submit a list of projects that would come within the scope of the President's message. They did so, and I immediately introduced a bill just as it was offered by the Chief of Engineers. I was not present at the hearings upon the bill, because I was taken to the hospital and remained there many weeks. In the hearings which followed, a new bill was introduced simply for the purpose of including one or two amendments which were considered advisable.

The bill as it passed the House carried a total authorization of $24,823,000. As amended by the Senate and as agreed upon by the conferees, it carries $35,622,000. The conferees on the part of the House rejected two rather large amendments put into the bill by the Senate. One was a flood-control project on the Republican River in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, amounting to $20,078,098.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman is referring now to the amendment offered by Senator NORRIS of Nebraska?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Correct.

Mr. CURTIS. That is a very meritorious item for which I have worked for 2 years and it is a needed project. I wonder if the gentleman will state just what was in the minds of the conferees that it was rejected. It is a project that has been approved by the district and division engineers and the Chief of Engineers of the Army.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I may state to the gentleman from Nebraska that as far as engineering reports are concerned, as far as I am advised, the project is very meritorious as a flood-control project for peacetime consideration. The House conferees decided against it on two grounds. One was that we did not want a flood-control project in this river and harbor bill, which is introduced exclusively for the purpose of national defense. The other was that we thought that when we have hundreds of flood-control projects one is no more entitled to consideration in a river and harbor bill than the others.

Mr. CURTIS. Do I correctly understand that everything the conferees agreed upon are projects which have been certified as essential to national defense?

Mr. MANSFIELD. As far as I know.

Mr. CURTIS. That was the object of it?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That was the primary object; yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I take it that the action the gentleman has described in taking this particular project out of the bill does not mean that this project will not be regarded favorably and that it may not later be acted upon favorably? Is that a correct statement?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I may say to the gentleman that I see no reason in the world why it should not be favorably considered in the first flood-control bill to come before the House.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I thank the gentleman for that assurance.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. For the information of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], and as is well known by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS], a member of the Committee on Flood Control, there is pending now and has been pending in the House since the 7th of May 1940 a flood-control bill which includes the project referred to and makes an authorization of $5,000,000 for the initiation of the project. As I understand, this flood-control project was objected to by the conferees on the part of the House and it has been stricken from the conference report.

Mr. MANSFIELD. It has, and the Senate has approved the conference report today.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKEOUGH. As I understand, the War Department Corps of Engineers failed to recommend the development at this time for defense purposes of the Calumet River–Great-Lakes-to-the-Gulf waterway development.

Mr. MANSFIELD. They have made no such recommendation for that and many other waterways where a contention has been made that the projects possess elements of national defense.

Mr. McKEOUGH. In view of the fact that this development will connect the Great Lakes with the Gulf, is it the judgment of the chairman of the committee, who has had wide experience in these matters that the War Department might have, with propriety, recommended this as a war-defense project, since the Mississippi Valley has been selected for the purpose of locating munitions plants and other defense activities between the Allegheny and the Rocky Mountains, from a standpoint of protection?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I may say to the gentleman from Illinois that, in my judgment, almost every river and harbor project, and almost every flood-control project, embraces features of national defense to a certain degree but, in the opinion of the Engineers of the War Department, this project of which the gentleman speaks, together with a hundred others that might be considered, was not recommended as of urgent importance, just at this time, for that purpose.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Will the gentleman add that in connection with the new river and harbor bill he will extend the same favorable consideration to that bill as the chairman of that committee?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I may state to the gentleman that I favored that measure before he was born politically.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the gentleman know whether or not this conference report has been acted upon by the Senate?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It has been acted upon and approved in the Senate, and the message was read here a while ago.

Mr. CURTIS. What was done in reference to the Norris amendment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. They approved its elimination from the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Was it withdrawn or was a vote taken, does the gentleman know?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I was not present on the floor of the Senate but I have been advised that those who had it placed in the bill agreed to its elimination at the present time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I have not been able to find a printed list of what the gentleman says has been approved. Does the gentleman have such a list or is he going to read us a list of what is included?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It is in the conference report, which is at the Clerk's desk. I do not have it before me now. However, I may say that only three amendments that were not in the bill as it passed the House unanimously last spring were agreed upon. The major item was the increase in the length of the breakwater at Los Angeles and Long Beach, Calif. That was put in by the Senate at the urgent request of the Navy Department. They say it is absolutely necessary for the great shipbuilding operations that are being carried on there and for the ships that will be used on the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Are we to understand that you took out a good many items that were passed on by the House, but put in only three items that were not included?

Mr. MANSFIELD. We did not take out any items, except one, a very small item for the Thames River, up in Massachusetts, amounting to $182,000, which was taken out because the Navy Department has already done the work.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEYER of California. What was the amount for the breakwater at Los Angeles Harbor?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The amount as approved by the House for the breakwater was $7,074,000. The Senate increased it to $17,674,000, an increase of $10,600,000.

Then there is a project on the border of Louisiana and Texas where 21 ships are now being built for the Navy Department. That cost is only $137,000.

Then at the Norfolk Harbor in Virginia, at the request of the Navy Department, there was secured in the Senate an amendment for dredging additional anchorage there to cost $182,000.

These are the only additions to the bill that the conferees agreed to. I do not know of anything further I may say and I now yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report of the conferees and, as has been stated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD], this is substantially the bill that passed the House here some months ago by a unanimous vote, with the addition of two or three items put in by the Senate.

The river and harbor projects in this bill have been approved as tending to aid national defense, and we believe that the conference report should be adopted at this time.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. As a matter of fact, the War Department has asked for all of these amendments.

Mr. CARTER. The War Department or the Navy Department has asked for these river and harbor developments and improvements.

Mr. PITTENGER. And this is a part of the national defense program?

Mr. CARTER. As a part of the national-defense program, yes.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I doubt if there is anything I can contribute to what has been presented except perhaps one thing. I think the membership of the House is interested in knowing that the projects in this river and harbor bill circle the United States, so to speak, and are all located on the Atlantic seaboard, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Pacific coast; none are inland. All of them are intended to improve and advance our national defense. We carried out the message and the recommendation of the President in that regard. May I say that no one could have been more diligent or alert in representing their constituency than the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS] and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] in regard to the two projects which were stricken from the bill as it came back from the Senate. Both of them are flood-control projects, and both of them will be considered at another time, but they had no place in a river and harbor bill, and not because they are without merit. There are many extenuating circumstances in connection with the project in the State of Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER. I simply want to compliment the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee for the interest they showed in what was admittedly a flood-control project, but the session is drawing to a close and that amendment was of vital importance. The chairman of the Flood Control Committee has taken an active interest in it, and I understand an agreement has been reached and the bill will be considered tomorrow as a separate bill, and everybody will be happy.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I agree with the statement that has been made by the gentleman, as well as by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] and the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER], that there are flood-control projects, of which the East Hartford project is one, which are just as important to national defense as many river and harbor projects, and I want to say that the East Hartford project was embraced in the flood-control bill that has been reported at this session of Congress and had it not been known that that bill would receive the same fate that was accorded to the larger river and harbor bill, it would have been brought up for consideration. It is the purpose of the Committee on Flood Control at the earliest practicable date in the next session of Congress, if not before, to bring up the emergency flood-control projects that are necessary in national defense and otherwise in the country, and I may say that the East Hartford project, in my view, is just as essential as some of the river and harbor projects that have been embraced in the pending bill, and I think it should be brought up before the adjournment of the House, under a unanimous-consent agreement, and I propose to bring it up tomorrow morning.

Mr. DONDERO. I just want to close by saying that this report comes in with the unanimous approval of the House conferees, and the Senate has receded, therefore, the report ought to be adopted unanimously.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow it may be in order for the Speaker to recognize Members to move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Ramspeck bill and to include a letter and a chart from Mr. Moyer, of the civil service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a statement. It is desired to get through by 4:30 o'clock. There are two other conference reports that we would like very much to agree to this afternoon.

AUTHORIZING SPECIAL AGENTS OF DIVISION OF INVESTIGATION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR TO ADMINISTER OATHS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 2627) to empower and authorize special agents and such other employees of the Division of Investigations, Department of the Interior, as are designated by the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose, to administer oaths in the performance of their official duties, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2627) to empower and authorize special agents of the Division of Investigations, Department of the Interior, as are designated by the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose, to administer oaths in the performance of their official duties, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments.

RENÉ L. DEROUEN,
J. W. ROBINSON,
HARRY L. ENGLEBRIGHT,
Managers on the part of the House.

ALVA B. ADAMS,
HENRY F. ASHURST,
KEY PITTMAN,
GERALD P. NYE,
CHAN GURNEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2627) to empower and authorize special agents of the Division of Investigations, Department of the Interior, as are designated by the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose, to administer oaths in the performance of their official duties, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

That the House recede from its amendment (which struck out the verbiage "and such other employees") and agree to the original language as contained in the bill as it passed the Senate.

RENÉ L. DEROUEN,
J. W. ROBINSON,
HARRY L. ENGLEBRIGHT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. RICH. What is that language as it passed the Senate?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The bill passed the Senate and was reported out unanimously by the Committee on the Public Lands of the House. It was objected to on the Consent Calendar, and the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON] proposed this amendment in line 3, on page 1 of the bill:

Strike out the words "and such other employees."

The bill as amended went back to the Senate and they would not agree to it and conferees were appointed. The conferees wrote into the report the identical language that was in the bill originally.

Mr. RICH. What does that do to the bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It simply does this: May I say this bill is for the purpose of authorizing special agents, and such other employees of the Department of the Interior as are designated by the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose, to administer oaths in the performance of their official duties; "and such other employees" broadens the authority to administer oaths; that is the House plan now stricken out in the House. This phrase is now restored to the bill. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. TABER. This bill came on the floor of the House and I objected to it. I objected to it because these special agents in different departments where they have had this power have abused it. Because I felt that that power should not be generally given I objected, and at the earnest solicitation of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON] I agreed that if he would strike out those other words I would let the bill go through. Now the bill comes back from the Senate with those words written in that were stricken out. The only thing I have got to say is that I will know what to do when another bill comes up. That is all.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, the language that the gentleman objected to could not be compromised upon by the conferees. The conferees either had to take it all or leave it. Consequently they were absolutely powerless with reference to getting any sort of a compromise upon the language.

As a matter of fact, precedent is found for this very bill in the Department of Naturalization Service, the Coast Guard, Internal Revenue, Department of Agriculture, Veterans' Administration, Navy Department, customs officers, inspectors or officers or vessels, bank examiners, bankruptcy proceedings, post-office inspectors, Civil Service Commission, Interstate Commerce Commission. The language in the bill affecting the Department of Agriculture of this Government, which has been upon the statute books for 15 years, is much broader than this. It reads:

Such officers, agents, or employees of the Department of Agriculture of the United States as are designated by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose are authorized and empowered to administer oaths.

In this bill persons authorized to administer oaths are limited to the Division of Investigation and again limited to those persons who are empowered by the Secretary of the Interior.

Secondly, it will be of great advantage to the western country. For instance, in public territories like parks, where sometimes crimes are committed, it will enable the officers who are authorized to administer oaths, to collect and assemble the necessary evidence. As to investigators it will enable those who are making the investigation to reduce to sworn affidavits the statements of the people concerned.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr LEAVY. As a matter of fact all this language does is to permit employees of the Department of the Interior who conduct investigations to administer oaths, rather than having to bring a notary public from a distance to administer these oaths, a practice indulged in by all the departments.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Exactly, and in this connection let me say that we live in a country of magnificent distances where one sometimes has to go a long ways for a notary public.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I have a great deal of respect for the very able, diligent, and distinguished gentleman from Montana who serves with me on the Committee on Indian Affairs. The gentleman has so effectively presented his case that there should be no opposition to the conference report on his bill. May I therefore respectfully submit that the distinguished gentleman from Montana should ask for a vote at this time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I thank the gentleman. He is always very fair.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOUSING IN CONNECTION WITH NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. LANHAM submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 10412) to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' CIVIL RELIEF ACT OF 1940

Mr. THOMASON submitted the following conference report on the bill (S. 4270) to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard, for printing under the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (S. 4270) to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4270) to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"That this Act may be cited as the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940.

"ARTICLE I—GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 100. In order to provide for, strengthen, and expedite the national defense under the emergent conditions which are threatening the peace and security of the United States and to enable the United States the more successfully to fulfill the requirements of the national defense, provision is hereby made to suspend enforcement of civil liabilities, in certain cases, of persons in the military service of the United States in order to enable such persons to devote their entire energy to the defense needs of the Nation, and to this end the following provisions are made for the temporary suspension of legal proceedings and transactions which may prejudice the civil rights of persons in such service during the period herein specified over which this act remains in force.

"SEC. 101. (1) The term 'persons in military service' and the term 'persons in the military service of the United States,' as used in this Act, shall include the following persons and no others: All members of the Army of the United States, the United States Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, and all officers of the Public Health Service detailed by proper authority for duty either with the Army or the Navy. The term 'military service', as used in this Act, shall signify Federal service on active duty with any branch of service heretofore referred to or mentioned as well as training or education under the supervision of the United States preliminary to induction into the military service. The terms 'active service' or 'active duy' shall include the period during which a person in military service is absent from duty on account of sickness, wounds, leave, or other lawful cause.

"(2) The term 'period of military service', as used in this Act, shall include the time between the following dates: For persons in active service at the date of the approval of this Act it shall begin with the date of approval of this Act; for persons entering active service after the date of this Act, with the date of entering active service. It shall terminate with the date of discharge from active service or death while in active service, but in no case later than the date when this Act ceases to be in force.

"(3) The term 'person', when used in this Act with reference to the holder of any right alleged to exist against a person in military service or against a person secondarily liable under such right, shall include individuals, partnerships, corporations, and any other forms of business association.

"(4) The term 'court', as used in this Act, shall include any court of competent jurisdiction of the United States or of any State, whether or not a court of record.

"SEC. 102. (1) The provisions of this Act shall apply to the United States, the several States and Territories, the District of Columbia, and all territory subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, including the Philippine Islands while under the sovereignty of the United States, and to proceedings commenced in any court therein, and shall be enforced through the usual forms of procedure obtaining in such courts or under such regulations as may be by them prescribed.

"(2) When under this Act any application is required to be made to a court in which no proceeding has already been commenced with respect to the matter, such application may be made to any court.

"SEC. 103. (1) Whenever pursuant to any of the provisions of this Act the enforcement of any obligation or liability, the prosecution of any suit or proceeding, the entry or enforcement of any order, writ, judgment, or decree, or the performance of any other act, may be stayed, postponed, or suspended, such stay, postponement, or suspension may, in the discretion of the court, likewise be granted to sureties, guarantors, endorsers, and others subject to the obligation or liability, the performance or enforcement of which is stayed, postponed, or suspended.

"(2) When a judgment or decree is vacated or set aside in whole or in part, as provided in this Act, the same may, in the discretion of the court, likewise be set aside and vacated as to any surety, guarantor, endorser, or other person liable upon the contract or liability for the enforcement of which the judgment or decree was entered.

"ARTICLE II—GENERAL RELIEF

"SEC. 200. (1) In any action or proceeding commenced in any court, if there shall be a default of any appearance by the defendant, the plaintiff, before entering judgment shall file in the court an affidavit setting forth facts showing that the defendant is not in military service. If unable to file such affidavit plaintiff shall in lieu thereof file an affidavit setting forth either that the defendant is in the military service or that plaintiff is not able to determine whether or not defendant is in such service. If an affidavit is not filed showing that the defendant is not in the military service, no judgment shall be entered without first securing an order of court directing such entry, and no such order shall be made if the defendant is in such service until after the court shall have appointed an attorney to represent defendant and protect his interest, and the court shall on application make such appointment. Unless it appears that the defendant is not in such service the court may require, as a condition before judgment is entered, that the plaintiff file a bond approved by the court conditioned to indemnify the defendant, if in military service, against any loss or damage that he may suffer by reason of any judgment should the judgment be thereafter set aside in whole or in part. And the court may make such other and further order or enter such judgment as in its opinion may be necessary to protect the rights of the defendant under this Act.

"(2) Any person who shall make or use an affidavit required under this section, knowing it to be false, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by imprisonment not to exceed one year or by fine not to exceed $1,000, or both.

"(3) In any action or proceeding in which a person in military service is a party if such party does not personally appear therein or is not represented by an authorized attorney, the court may appoint an attorney to represent him; and in such case a like bond may be required and an order made to protect the rights of such person. But no attorney appointed under this Act to protect a person in military service shall have power to waive any right of the person for whom he is appointed or bind him by his acts.

"(4) If any judgment shall be rendered in any action or proceeding governed by this section against any person in military service during the period of such service or within thirty days thereafter, and it appears that such person was prejudiced by reason of his military service in making his defense thereto, such judgment may, upon application, made by such person or his legal representative, not later than ninety days after the termination of such service, be opened by the court rendering the same and such defendant or his legal representative let in to defend; provided it is made to appear that the defendant has a meritorious or legal defense to the action or some part thereof. Vacating, setting aside, or reversing any judgment because of any of the provisions of this Act shall not impair any right or title acquired by any bona fide purchaser for value under such judgment.

"SEC. 201. At any stage thereof any action or proceeding in any court in which a person in military service is involved, either as plaintiff or defendant, during the period of such service or within sixty days thereafter may, in the discretion of the court in which it is pending, on its own motion, and shall, on application to it by such person or some person on his behalf, be stayed as provided in this Act, unless, in the opinion of the court, the ability of plaintiff to prosecute the action or the defendant to conduct his defense is not materially affected by reason of his military service.

"SEC. 202. When an action for compliance with the terms of any contract is stayed pursuant to this Act no fine or penalty shall accrue by reason of failure to comply with the terms of such contract during the period of such stay, and in any case where a person fails to perform any obligation and a fine or penalty for such nonperformance is incurred a court may, on such terms as may be just, relieve against the enforcement of such fine or penalty if it shall appear that the person who would suffer by such fine or penalty was in the military service when the penalty was incurred and that by reason of such service the ability of such person to pay or perform was thereby materially impaired.

"SEC. 203. In any action or proceeding commenced in any court against a person in military service, before or during the period of such service, or within 60 days thereafter, the court may, in its discretion, on its own motion, or on application to it by such person or some person on his behalf shall, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the defendant to comply with the judgment or order entered or sought is not materially affected by reason of his military service—

"(a) Stay the execution of any judgment or order entered against such person, as provided in this Act; and

"(b) Vacate or stay any attachment or garnishment of property, money, or debts in the hands of another, whether before or after judgment as provided in this Act.

"SEC. 204. Any stay of any action, proceeding, attachment, or execution, ordered by any court under the provisions of this Act may, except as otherwise provided, be ordered for the period of military service and 3 months thereafter or any part of such period, and subject to such terms as may be just, whether as to payment in installments of such amounts and at such times as the court may fix or otherwise. Where the person in military service is a codefendant with others the plaintiff may nevertheless by leave of court proceed against the others.

"SEC. 205. The period of military service shall not be included in computing any period now or hereafter to be limited by any law for the bringing of any action by or against any person in military service or by or against his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, whether such cause of action shall have accrued prior to or during the period of such service.

"ARTICLE III—RENT, INSTALLMENT CONTRACTS, MORTGAGES

"SEC. 300. (1) No eviction or distress shall be made during the period of military service in respect of any premises for which the agreed rent does not exceed $80 per month, occupied chiefly for dwelling purposes by the wife, children, or other dependents of a person in military service, except upon leave of court granted upon application therefor or granted in an action or proceeding affecting the right of possession.

"(2) On any such application or in any such action the court may, in its discretion, on its own motion, and shall, on application, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the tenant to pay the agreed rent is not materially affected by reason of such military service, stay the proceedings for not longer than 3 months, as provided in this Act, or it may make such other order as may be just.

"(3) Any person who shall knowingly take part in any eviction or distress otherwise than as provided in subsection (1) hereof shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punishable by imprisonment not to exceed 1 year or by fine not to exceed $1,000, or both.

"(4) The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, or the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to the Coast Guard, as the case may be, is hereby empowered, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, to order an allotment of the pay of a person in military service in reasonable proportion to discharge the rent of premises occupied for dwelling purposes by the wife, children, or other dependents of such person.

"SEC. 301. (1) No person who prior to the date of approval of this Act has received, or whose assignor has received, under a contract for the purchase of real or personal property, or of lease or bailment with a view to purchase of such property, a deposit or installment of the purchase price from a person or from the assignor of a person who, after the date of payment of such deposit or installment, has entered military service, shall exercise any right or option under such contract to rescind or terminate the contract or resume possession of the property for nonpayment of any installment falling due during the period of such military service, except by action in a court of competent jurisdiction: Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall prevent the modification, termination, or cancelation of any such contract, or prevent the repossession or retention of property purchased or received under such contract, pursuant to a mutual agreement of the parties thereto, or their assignees, if such agreement is executed in writing subsequent to the making of such contract and during or after the period of military service of the person concerned.

"(2) Any person who shall knowingly resume possession of property which is the subject of this section otherwise than as provided in subsection (1) hereof shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by imprisonment not to exceed one year or by fine not to exceed $1,000, or both.

"(3) Upon the hearing of such action the court may order the repayment of prior installments or deposits or any part thereof, as a condition of terminating the contract and resuming possession of the property, or may, in its discretion, on its own motion, and shall, except as provided in section 303, on application to it by such person in military service or some person on his behalf, order a stay of proceedings as provided in this Act unless, in the opinion of the court, the ability of the defendant to comply with the terms of the contract is not materially affected by reason of such service; or it may make such other disposition of the case as may be equitable to conserve the interests of all parties.

"SEC. 302. (1) The provisions of this section shall apply only to obligations originating prior to the date of approval of this Act and secured by mortgage, trust deed, or other security in the nature of a mortgage upon real or personal property owned by a person in military service at the commencement of the period of the military service and still so owned by him.

"(2) In any proceeding commenced in any court during the period of military service to enforce such obligation arising out of nonpayment of any sum thereunder due or out of any other breach of the terms thereof occurring prior to or during the period of such service the court may, after hearing, in its discretion, on its own motion, and shall, except as provided in section 303, on application to it by such person in military service or some person on his behalf, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the defendant to comply with the terms of the obligation is not materially affected by reason of his military service—

"(a) stay the proceedings as provided in this Act; or

"(b) make such other disposition of the case as may be equitable to conserve the interests of all parties.

"(3) No sale under a power of sale or under a judgment entered upon warrant of attorney to confess judgment contained in any such obligation shall be valid if made during the period of military service or within three months thereafter, unless upon an order of sale previously granted by the court and a return thereto made and approved by the court.

"SEC. 303. No court shall stay a proceeding to resume possession of a motor vehicle, tractor, or the accessories of either, or for an order of sale thereof, where said motor vehicle, tractor, or accessories are encumbered by a purchase money mortgage, conditional sales contract, or a lease or bailment with a view to purchase, unless the court shall find that 50 per centum or more of the purchase price of said property has been paid, but in any such proceeding the court may, before entering an order or judgment, require the plaintiff to file a bond, approved by the court, conditioned to indemnify the defendant, if in military service, against any loss or damage that he may suffer by reason of any such judgment or order should the judgment or order be set aside in whole or in part.

"ARTICLE IV—INSURANCE

"SEC. 400. In this article the term 'policy' shall include any contract of life insurance on the level premium or legal reserve plan. It shall also include any benefit in the nature of life insurance arising out of membership in any fraternal or beneficial association; the term 'premium' shall include membership dues or assessments in such association, and the date of issuance of policy as herein limited shall refer to the date of admission to membership in such association; the term 'insured' shall include any person who is the holder of a policy as defined in this article; the term 'insurer' shall include any corporation, partnership, or other form of association which secures or provides insurance under any policy as defined in this article.

"SEC. 401. (1) The benefits of this article shall apply to any person in military service who is the holder of a policy of life insurance, when such holder shall apply for such benefits on a form prepared in accordance with regulations which shall be prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. Such form shall set forth particularly that the application therein made is a consent to such modification of the terms of the original contract of insurance as are made necessary by the provisions of this article and by receiving and filing the same the insurer shall be deemed to have assented thereto, to the extent, if any, to which the policy on which the application is made is within the provisions of this article. The original of such application shall be sent by the insured to the insurer, and a copy thereof to the Veterans' Administration.

"(2) The Veterans' Administration shall issue through suitable military and naval channels a notice for distribution by appropriate military and naval authorities to persons in the military service explaining the provisions of this article and shall furnish forms to be distributed to those desiring to make application for its benefits.

"SEC. 402. The benefits of this Act shall be available to any person in military service in respect of contracts of insurance in force under their terms up to but not exceeding a face value of $5,000, irrespective of the number of policies held by such person whether in one or more companies, when such contracts were made and a premium was paid thereon before the date of approval of this Act or not less than thirty days before entry into the military service; but in no event shall the provisions of this article apply to any policy on which premiums are due and unpaid for a period of more than one year at the time when application for the benefits of this article is made or in respect of any policy on which there is outstanding a policy loan or other indebtedness equal to or greater than 50 per centum of the cash surrender value of the policy.

"SEC. 403. The Veterans' Administration shall, subject to regulations, which shall be prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, compile and maintain a list of such persons in military service as have made application for the benefits of this article, and shall (1) reject any application for such benefits made by persons who are not persons in military service; (2) reject any applications for such benefits in excess of the amount permitted by section 402; and (3) reject any applications in respect of contracts of insurance otherwise not entitled to the benefits of this article. Said Administration shall immediately notify the insurer and the insured in writing of every rejection or approval.

"SEC. 404. When one or more applications are made under this article by any one person in military service in respect of insurance exceeding a total face value of $5,000, whether on one or more policies or in one or more companies, and the insured shall not in his application indicate an order of preference, the Veterans' Administration shall reject such policies as have the inferior cash surrender value, so as to reduce the total benefits conferred within the face value of $5,000, and where necessary for this purpose shall direct the insurer to divide any policy into two separate policies. The said Administration shall immediately notify the insurer and the insured in writing of such selection.

"SEC. 405. No policy which has not lapsed for the nonpayment of premium before the commencement of the period of military service of the insured, and which has been brought within the benefits of this article, shall lapse or be forfeited for the nonpayment of premium during the period of such service or during one year after the expiration of such period: Provided, That in no case shall this prohibition extend for more than one year after the date when this Act ceases to be in force.

"SEC. 406. Within the first fifteen days of each calendar month after the date approval of this Act until the expiration of one year after the date when this Act ceases to be in force every insurance corporation or association to which application has been made as herein provided, for the benefits of this article, shall render to the Veterans' Administration a report, duly verified, setting forth the following facts:

"First. The names of the persons who have applied for such benefits, and the face value of the policies in respect of which such benefits have been applied for by such persons, during the preceding calendar month.

"Second. A list as far as practicable of the premiums in respect of policies entitled to the benefits of this article, which remain unpaid on the last day of the preceding calendar month, which day is at least thirty-one days after the due date of the premiums, provided such premiums have not previously been so reported as in default.

"Third. A list of premiums which, having been previously reported as in default, have been paid by the policyholder or someone on his behalf in whole or in part during the preceding calendar month.

"Fourth. A computation of the difference between the total amount of defaulted premiums therein reported and the total amount of premiums paid as therein reported, after having been previously reported as in default. From this sum shall be deducted the total sum of any premiums previously reported as in default, upon policies in respect of which the Veterans' Administration has, since the date of such report, rejected an application for the benefits of this article. The final sum so arrived at shall be denominated the monthly difference.

"SEC. 407. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall verify the computation of monthly difference reported by each insurer and shall, within ten days thereafter, deliver each month to the proper officer of such insurer, a certificate in the amount of the monthly difference certified in respect of each insurer. Such certificate shall be signed by said Administrator in the name of the United States, shall be in such form as the Administrator shall determine, shall be payable to the insurer within sixty days after the approval of the statement of account, as provided in section 411 hereof, and shall bear interest at a rate to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, payable with the principal. Such certificate shall not be transferred except with the approval of said Administrator and shall remain with the insurer until settlement is made in accordance with this article.

"SEC. 408. The certificate so delivered shall be held by the respective insurers as security for the payment of the defaulted premiums with interest. To indemnify it against loss the United States shall have a first lien upon any policy receiving the benefits of this article, subject only to any lien existing at the time the policy became subject to this Act, and no loan or settlement or payment of dividend shall be made by the insurer on such policy which may prejudice the security of such lien. Before any dividend is paid or any loan or settlement is made the written consent of the Veterans' Administration must be obtained.

"SEC. 409. In the event that the military service of any person being the holder of a policy receiving the benefits of this article shall be terminated by death, the amount of any unpaid premiums, with interest at the rate provided for in the policy for policy loans, shall be deducted from the proceeds of the policy and shall be included in the next monthly report of the insurer as premiums paid.

"SEC. 410. If the insured does not within one year after the termination of his period of military service pay to the insurer all past due premiums with interest thereon from their several due dates at the rate provided in the policy for policy loans, the policy shall at the end of such year immediately lapse and become void, and the insurer shall thereupon become liable to pay the cash surrender value thereof, if any: Provided, That if the insured is in the military service when this Act ceases to be in force, such lapse shall occur and surrender value be payable at the expiration of one year after the date when this Act ceases to be in force.

"SEC. 411. At the expiration of one year after the date when this Act ceases to be in force there shall be an account stated between each insurer and the United States, in which there shall be credited to the insurer the total amount of the certificates held as security under this article, together with accrued interest to the date of the account, and in which there shall be credited to the United States the amount of the cash surrender value of each policy lapsed or forfeited as provided in section 410, but not in any case a greater amount on any policy than the total of the unpaid premiums with interest thereon at the rate provided for in the policy for policy loans.

"SEC. 412. The balance in favor of the insurer in each case shall be certified by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall pay to the insurer the amount thereof, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon the surrender by the insurer of the certificates delivered to it from time to time by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs under the provisions of this article.

SEC. 413. This article shall not apply to any policy which is void or which may at the option of the insured be voidable, if the insured is in military service, either in this country or abroad, nor to any policy which as a result of being in military service, either in this country or abroad, provides for the payment of any sum less than the face thereof or for the payment of an additional amount as premium.

"SEC. 414. This article shall apply only to insurance companies or associations which are required by the law under which they are organized or doing business to maintain a reserve, or, which if not so required, have made or shall make provision for the collection from all those insured in such insurer of a premium to cover the special war risk of those insured persons who are in military service.

"ARTICLE V—TAXES AND PUBLIC LANDS

"SEC. 500. (1) The provisions of this section shall apply when any taxes or assessments, whether general or special, falling due during the period of military service in respect of real property owned and occupied for dwelling, agricultural, or business purposes by a person in military service or his dependents at the commencement of his period of military service and still so occupied by his dependents or employees are not paid.

"(2) When any person in military service, or any person in his behalf, shall file with the collector of taxes, or other officer whose duty it is to enforce the collection of taxes or assessments, an affidavit showing (a) that a tax or assessment has been assessed upon property which is the subject of this section, (b) that such tax or assessment is unpaid, and (c) that by reason of such military service the ability of such person to pay such tax or assessment is materially affected, no sale of such property shall be made to enforce the collection of such tax or assessment, or any proceeding or action for such purpose commenced, except upon leave of court granted upon an application made therefor by such collector or other officer. The court thereupon may stay such proceedings or such sale, as provided in this Act, for a period extending not more than six months after the termination of the period of military service of such person.

"(3) When by law such property may be sold or forfeited to enforce the collection of such tax or assessment, such person in military service shall have the right to redeem or commence an action to redeem such property, at any time not later than six months after the termination of such service, but in no case later than six months after the date when this Act ceases to be in force; but this shall not be taken to shorten any period, now or hereafter provided by the laws of any State or Territory for such redemption.

"(4) Whenever any tax or assessment shall not be paid when due, such tax or assessment due and unpaid shall bear interest until paid at the rate of 6 per centum per annum, and no other penalty or interest shall be incurred by reason of such nonpayment. Any lien for such unpaid taxes or assessment shall also include such interest thereon.

"(5) The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall make provision in such manner as each may deem appropriate for his respective department, to insure the giving of notice to persons in the military service under their respective jurisdictions, of the benefits accorded by this section and the action made necessary to claim those benefits in each case.

"SEC. 501. (1) No right to any lands owned or controlled by the United States initiated or acquired under any laws of the United States, including the mining and mineral leasing laws, by any person prior to entering military service shall during the period of such service be forfeited or prejudiced by reason of his absence from the land or his failure to perform any work or make any improvements thereon or his failure to do any other act required by or under such laws.

"(2) If a permittee or licensee under the Act of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), enters military service, he may elect to suspend his permit or license for the period of his military service and six months thereafter, and the Secretary of the Interior by regulations shall provide for such suspension of permits and licenses and for the remission, reduction, or refund of grazing fees during such suspension.

"(3) This section shall not be construed to control specific requirements contained in this article.

"SEC. 502. If any person whose application for a homestead entry has been allowed or who has made application for homestead entry which may thereafter be allowed, after such entry or application enters military service, or if any person who has a valid settlement claim enters military service, the Department of the Interior shall construe his military service to be equivalent to residence and cultivation upon the tract entered or settled upon for the period of such service. From the effective date of this Act no contest shall be initiated on the ground of abandonment and no allegation of abandonment shall be sustained against any such person, unless it shall be alleged in the preliminary affidavit or affidavits of contest and proved at the hearing in cases initiated subsequent to the effective date of this Act that the alleged absence from the land was not due to such military service. If such person is discharged on account of wounds received or disability incurred in the line of duty, the term of his enlistment and any period of hospitalization due to such wounds or disability shall be deducted from the required length of residence, without reference to the time of actual service. No patent shall issue to any such person who has not resided upon, improved, and cultivated his homestead for a period of at least one year.

"SEC. 503. (1) If any person whose application for a homestead entry has been allowed or who has made application for homestead entry which may thereafter be allowed or who has a valid settlement claim dies while in military service or as a result of such service, his widow, if unmarried, or in the case of her death or marriage, his minor children, or his or their legal representatives, may proceed forthwith to make final proof upon such entry or upon an application which is allowed after the applicant's death, or upon a homestead application thereafter allowed based on a valid settlement claim, and shall be entitled to receive a patent for such land. The death of such person while in military service or as a result of such service shall be construed to be equivalent to a performance of all requirements as to residence and cultivation upon such homestead or claim, notwithstanding the provisions of section 502 of this Act.

"(2) If such person is honorably discharged and because of physical incapacities due to such service is unable to return to the land, he may make final proof without further residence, improvement, or cultivation, at such time and place as the Secretary of the Interior may authorize, and receive a patent to the land entered.

"(3) The Act of July 28, 1917 (40 Stat. 248), is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 504. (1) No desert-land entry made or held under the desert-land laws prior to the entrance of the entryman or his successor in interest into military service shall be subject to contest or cancelation for failure to make or expend the sum of $1 per acre per year in improvements upon the claim or to effect the reclamation of the claim during the period the entryman or his successor in interest is engaged in military service or during a period of six months thereafter or during any period of hospitalization because of wounds or disability incurred in the line of duty. The time within which such entryman or claimant is required to make such expenditures and effect reclamation of the land shall be exclusive of his period of service and the six-months' period and any such period of hospitalization.

"(2) If such entryman or claimant is honorably discharged and because of physical incapacities due to such service is unable to accomplish reclamation of, and payment for, the land, he may make proof without further reclamation or payments under such rules as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe and receive patent for the land entered or claimed.

"(3) In order to obtain the benefits of this section, such entryman or claimant shall, within six months after the effective date of this Act or within six months after his entrance into military service, file or cause to be filed in the land office of the district in which his claim is situated a notice that he has entered military service and that he desires to hold the desert claim under this section.

"SEC. 505. (1) The provisions of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which require that on each mining claim located after May 10, 1872, and until patent has been issued therefor not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year, shall not apply during the period of his service, or until six months after the termination of such service, or during any period of hospitalization because of wounds or disability incurred in line of duty, to claims or interests in claims which are owned by a person in military service and which have been regularly located and recorded. No mining claim or any interest in a claim which is owned by such a person and which has been regularly located and recorded shall be subject to forfeiture by nonperformance of the annual assessments during the period of such military service, or until six months after the termination of such service or of such hospitalization.

"(2) In order to obtain the benefits of this section, the claimant of any mining location shall, before the expiration of the assessment year during which he enters military service, file or cause to be filed in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded a notice that he has entered such service and that he desires to hold his mining claim under this section.

"SEC. 506. (1) Any person holding a permit or lease on the public domain under the Federal mineral leasing laws who enters military service may, at his election, suspend all operations under his permit or lease for a period of time equivalent to the period of his military service and six months thereafter. The term of the permit or lease shall not run during such period of suspension nor shall any rentals or royalties be charged against the permit or lease during the period of suspension.

"(2) In order to obtain the benefit of this section, such permittee or lessee shall, within six months after the effective date of this Act or six months after his entrance into military service, notify the General Land Office by registered mail of his entrance into such service and of his desire to avail himself of the benefits of this section.

"(3) This section shall not be construed to supersede the terms of any contract for operation of a permit or lease.

"SEC. 507. Nothing in this article shall be construed to limit or affect the right of a person in military service to take any action during his period of service which may be authorized by law or the regulations of the Department of the Interior for the perfection, defense, or further assertion of rights initiated or acquired prior to the date of entering military service. It shall be lawful for any person while in such service to make any affidavit or submit any proof which may be required by law or the practice or regulations of the General Land Office in connection with the entry, perfection, defense, or further assertion of any rights initiated or acquired prior to entering such service, before the officer in immediate command and holding a commission in the branch of the service in which the person is engaged. Such affidavits shall be as binding in law and with like penalties as if taken before a register of a United States land office. The Secretary of the Interior may issue rules and regulations to effectuate the purposes of sections 501 to 512, inclusive.

"SEC. 508. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to suspend as to persons in military service during the period while this Act remains in force and for a period of six months thereafter or during any period of hospitalization because of wounds or disability incurred in line of duty that provision of the act known as the 'Reclamation Act' requiring residence upon lands in private ownership or within the neighborhood for securing water for the irrigation of the same, and he is authorized to permit the use of available water thereon upon such terms and conditions as he may deem proper.

"SEC. 509. The Secretary of the Interior shall issue through appropriate military and naval channels a notice for distribution by appropriate military and naval authorities to persons in the military service explaining the provisions of this article except as to section 500 hereof and shall furnish forms to be distributed in like manner to those desiring to make application for its benefits, except as to said section.

"SEC. 510. (1) During the pendency of any war in which the United States may be engaged while this Act remains in force any homestead entryman shall be entitled to a leave of absence from his entry for the purpose of performing farm labor. The time actually spent in farm labor shall be counted as constructive residence, if within fifteen days after leaving his entry to engage in such labor the entryman files a notice of absence in the land office of the district in which his entry is situated, and if at the expiration of the calendar year the entryman files in that office a written statement under oath and corroborated by two witnesses giving the date or dates when he left his entry, the date or dates of his return, and the place where and person for whom he was engaged in farm labor during such period or periods of absence.

"(2) Nothing in this section shall excuse any homestead entryman from making improvements or performing the cultivation upon his entry required by law. The provisions of this section shall apply only to persons whose applications have been allowed or filed prior to the effective date of this Act.

"SEC. 511. Any person under the age of twenty-one who serves in the military service while this Act remains in force shall be entitled to the same rights under the laws relating to lands owned or controlled by the United States, including the mining and mineral leasing laws, as those over twenty-one now possess under such laws. Any requirements as to establishment of residence within a limited time shall be suspended as to entry by such person until six months after his discharge from military service. Applications for entry may be verified before any officer in the United States or any foreign country authorized to administer oaths by the laws of the State or Territory in which the land may be situated.

"SEC. 512. Citizens of the United States who serve with the forces of any nation with which the United States may be allied in the prosecution of any war in which the United States engages while this Act remains in force shall be entitled to the relief and benefits afforded by this article, if such service is similar to military service as defined in this Act, and if they are honorably discharged and resume United States citizenship or die in the service of the allied forces or as a result of such service.

"SEC. 513. The collection from any person in the military service of any tax on the income of such person, whether falling due prior to or during his period of military service, shall be deferred for a period extending not more than six months after the termination of his period of military service if such person's ability to pay such tax is materially impaired by reason of such service. No interest on any amount of tax, collection of which is deferred for any period under this section, and no penalty for nonpayment of such amount during such period, shall accrue for such period of deferment by reason of such nonpayment. The running of any statute of limitations against the collection of such tax by distraint or otherwise shall be suspended for the period of military service of any individual the collection of whose tax is deferred under this section, and for an additional period of nine months beginning with the day following the period of military service. The provisions of this section shall not apply to the income tax on employees imposed by section 1400 of the Federal Insurance Contributions Act.

"ARTICLE VI—ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES

"SEC. 600. Where in any proceeding to enforce a civil right in any court it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that any interest, property, or contract has since the date of the approval of this Act been transferred or acquired with intent to delay the just enforcement of such right by taking advantage of this Act, the court shall enter such judgment or make such order as might lawfully be entered or made, the provisions of this Act to the contrary notwithstanding.

"SEC. 601. (1) In any proceeding under this Act a certificate signed by The Adjutant General of the Army as to persons in the Army or in any branch of the United States service while serving pursuant to law with the Army of the United States, signed by the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department as to persons in the United States Navy or in any other branch of the United States service while serving pursuant to law with the United States Navy, and signed by the Major General Commandant, United States Marine Corps, as to persons in the Marine Corps, or in any other branch of the United States service while serving pursuant to law with the Marine Corps, or signed by an officer designated by any of them, respectively, for the purpose, shall when produced be prima facie evidence as to any of the following facts stated in such certificate:

"That a person named has not been, or is, or has been in military service; the time when and the place where such person entered military service, his residence at that time, and the rank, branch, and unit of such service that he entered, the dates within which he was in military service, the monthly pay received by such person at the date of issuing the certificate, the time when and the place where such person died in or was discharged from such service.

"(2) It shall be the duty of the foregoing officers to furnish such certificate on application, and any such certificate when purporting to be signed by any one of such officers or by any person purporting upon the face of the certificates to have been so authorized shall be prima facie evidence of its contents and of the authority of the signer to issue the same.

"(3) Where a person in military service has been reported missing he shall be presumed to continue in the service until accounted for, and no period herein limited which begins or ends with the death of such person shall begin or end until the death of such person is in fact reported to or found by the Department of War or Navy, or any court or board thereof, or until such death is found by a court of competent jurisdiction: Provided, That no period herein limited which begins or ends with the death of such person shall be extended hereby beyond a period of six months after the time when this Act ceases to be in force.

"SEC. 602. Any interlocutory order made by any court under the provisions of this Act may, upon the court's own motion or otherwise, be revoked, modified, or extended by it upon such notice to the parties affected as it may require.

"SEC. 603. If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 604. This Act shall remain in force until May 15, 1945: Provided, That should the United States be then engaged in a war, this Act shall remain in force until such war is terminated by a treaty of peace proclaimed by the President and for six months thereafter: Provided further, That wherever under any section or provision of this Act a proceeding, remedy, privilege, stay, limitation, accounting, or other transaction has been authorized or provided with respect to military service performed prior to the date herein fixed for the termination of this Act, such section or provision shall be deemed to continue in full force and effect so long as may be necessary to the exercise or enjoyment of such proceeding, remedy, privilege, stay, limitation, accounting, or other transaction.

"SEC. 605. The provisions of section 4 of the Joint Resolution approved August 27, 1940 (Public Resolution Numbered 96, Seventy-sixth Congress), and the provisions of section 13 of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, shall not be applicable with respect to any military service performed after the date of enactment of this Act."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (S. 4270) to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Most of the provisions of the Senate bill and the House amendment were identical. While there were a number of minor differences of a clerical nature between the Senate bill and the House amendment, there were few substantive differences. The substantive differences between the Senate bill, the House amendment, and the conference agreement are discussed below.

Section 301 of the Senate bill and section 301 of the House amendment both provided that no person who has received, under a contract for the purchase of property or for the lease or bailment of property with a view to its purchase, a deposit or installment of the purchase price from a person who enters military service should terminate or rescind the contract or repossess the property for nonpayment of any installment falling due during the period of such military service, except by action of a court of competent jurisdiction. The Senate bill also contained a proviso to the effect that nothing in the section should prevent the modification, termination, or cancelation of any such contract, or prevent the repossession or retention of property purchased or received under such contract, pursuant to a mutual agreement of the parties, if such agreement is executed in writing subsequent of the making of the contract and during or after the period of military service. The comparable provision in the House amendment provided that the contract might be terminated or canceled by mutual consent of the parties thereto, executed in writing, and possession of the property resumed. The conference agreement follows the provision of the Senate bill. The conference agreement also restricts the application of this section to those cases in which an installment or deposit has been received prior to the date of approval of the act. The Senate bill also provided in this section that the court in which the action is brought should stay the proceedings upon application by or on behalf of the person in military service. Under the House bill the granting of a stay would be discretionary with the court. The conference agreement follows the Senate bill with a modification making it clear that the court is not to be required to grant a stay in conflict with the provisions of section 303. The conference agreement also makes a clarifying change in section 302 in order to make it clear that a stay is not to be granted under that section in conflict with section 303.

Section 303 of the House amendment contained provisions not in the Senate bill. This section provided that no court should stay a proceeding to resume possession of a motor vehicle, tractor, or the accessories of either, or for an order of sale thereof, unless the court found that 50 per centum or more of the purchase price had been paid. The conference agreement retains this section.

The conference agreement modifies the provisions in section 500 (2) relating to the manner of stays of proceedings or sales for the collection of taxes, so as to provide that no such stay shall extend for a period of more than 6 months after the termination of the period of military service of the person concerned.

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 500 (6)) providing for the deferment of income taxes on the income of any person in military service if such person's ability to pay such taxes is impaired by reason of such service. This provision is retained in the conference agreement (sec. 513) with certain modifications and clarifying changes. Under the provision as it is contained in the conference agreement the collection of income taxes is to be deferred for a period extending not more than 6 months after the termination of the period of military service, and is to be deferred only if the taxpayer's ability to pay the tax is materially impaired by reason of such service. No interest or penalty is to accrue on account of nonpayment of the tax during the period of deferment. The running of any statute of limitations against the collection of tax is to be suspended during the period of military service and for 9 months thereafter. The deferment provisions are not to be applicable with respect to the Social Security taxes payable under section 1400 of the Federal Insurance Contributions Act.

Sections 502 and 503 extend certain relief in the case of homestead entrymen who entered the military service. Under the House amendment this relief was extended to persons having a valid settlement claim. The conference agreement follows the House amendment in this respect.

The Senate bill contained a separability provision, which was not in the House amendment. This provision is retained in the conference agreement.

The termination date provided for was May 15, 1945, in the Senate bill, and June 30, 1945, in the House amendment. The conference agreement provides for termination on May 15, 1945, which is also the termination date for the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940.

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment contained savings clauses for the purpose of providing that the termination of the act should not prevent the exercise or enjoyment of a proceeding, remedy, privilege, stay, limitation, accounting, or other transaction authorized or provided on account of events occurring prior to the date fixed for such termination. While these clauses have the same purpose there was some difference in language. The conference agreement follows substantially the House amendment with a modification which makes it clear that the savings clause is to be effective only for the purpose of preserving proceedings, remedies, privileges, stays, limitations, accountings, and other transactions arising out of or connected with military service performed prior to the date fixed for termination of the act.

The Senate bill provided that the provisions of section 4 of Public Resolution Numbered 96, Seventy-sixth Congress, and of section 13 of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 (extending certain of the benefits of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1918 to members of the Reserve components of the military and naval forces on active duty and to persons inducted under the Selective Training and Service Act) should not be applicable with respect to any military service performed after the date of enactment of this act. The House amendment repealed these two sections. The conference agreement follows the provisions of the Senate bill.

R. E. THOMASON,
JOHN M. COSTELLO,
L. C. ARENDS,
FOREST A. HARNESS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I may say that there is substantially no difference whatever between the report and the bill as it passed the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FRANK HALL

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7283) for the relief of Frank Hall, with a Senate amendment and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$5,844.29" and insert "$3,700."

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REGISTRATION OF CERTAIN ORGANIZATIONS REQUIRED

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 10094) to require the registration of certain organizations carrying on activities within the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10094) to require the registration of certain organizations carrying on activities within the United States, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15 and 17.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 7, 14 and 16, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out ", and a copy of the minutes or journal of every such meeting" as proposed by the Senate amendment, and strike out the word "such" on page 5, line 21, and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10094) to require the registration of certain organizations carrying on activities within the United States, and for other purposes, submit the following explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon in conference, and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendments numbered 4, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15 and 17 proposed to insert the word "known" at various places in the bill. The managers on the part of the House were of the opinion that the inclusion in the Act of the word "known" in the several instances would have required that the organizations in filing the required information be charged with knowledge of the existence of the branch or chapter and this would place an unnecessary burden of proof upon the Government in a prosecution. The Senate recedes from these several amendments.

Amendment numbered 1 offered a substitute definition for the term "organization" and removed the language granting discretion to the Attorney General to make determinations. The House agrees to the amendment.

Amendment numbered 2 offered a substitute definition for the term "political activity", defining it to mean any activity the purpose or aim of which, or one of the purposes or aims of which is the control by force, or overthrow of the government of the United States or a political subdivision thereof or any State or political subdivision thereof. The House bill defined "political activity" as any activity the purpose or aim of which, or one of the purposes or aims of which is the establishment, control, conduct, seizure or overthrow of a government or political subdivision thereof. The House agrees to the amendment.

Amendment numbered 3 merely clarifies by specific exemption any nationally recognized organization of persons who are veterans of the armed forces of the United States or affiliates, from the operation of the Act. The House agrees to the amendment.

Amendment numbered 7 merely adds the word "and" to perfect the grammar. The House agrees to the amendment.

Amendment numbered 8 removed the requirement of the filing of copies of the minutes or journal of every meeting of organizations required to register. The House agrees to the amendment with a minor grammatical correction striking out the word "such" on page 5 in line 21.

Amendment numbered 14 would require the furnishing of the name of the author and name and address of the publisher of the literature of organizations required to register. The House agrees to the amendment.

Amendment number 16 strikes out, on page 7, lines 7 and 8, the words "and of each branch, chapter, and affiliate of the organization". The House agrees to the amendment.

TOBACCO CLASSIFICATION

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4374) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, which is on the Speaker's desk.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will indulge me, I may say that this bill was called up last week, but because it had not been formally acted upon by the House committee it was objected to. The committee met this morning and unanimously reported the bill. I have had the matter up with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two topics and in one to include a letter written to me by the chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on two subjects and to insert two editorials.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include an article and an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a table from the Farm Credit Administration.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

A THIRD TERM—EVEN IF A WAR BE NECESSARY TO GET IT

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, Roosevelt, seeking a third term, knowing our people do not want to repeat their experience of 1917 and would vote against the man who frankly announced his purpose of involving us in war, made the statement, "I hate war." His sincerity should be judged in the light of previous statements and of his conduct.

Many times he told us that, unless we lived within our income, our Nation would be bankrupt, but without exception each year of the 7 during which he has been in power, we have gone, on an average, more than $3,000,000,000 in debt. He may hate bankruptcy, but he is giving it to us. Said one thing—did the opposite.

Roosevelt told us that he would reduce expenses, lessen the number of Federal employees; that such was the only safe course. For 7 years he has been increasing expenses, adding to the number of Federal employees. Announced a good policy—refused to follow it.

Many, many other instances might be cited and it should not be forgotten that, from the time of his "aggressor" speech at Chicago, he has been consistently and continuously doing those things which bring war to a nation.

Now, having lost faith in the American way of doing things, he tells us in substance that there is no man other than himself—no; not even in the Democratic Party nor for that matter, in his New Deal official family—who is honest enough, intelligent enough, patriotic enough to take up and carry on the duties of the Presidency; that he alone has the ability and patriotism to be President. His thought is an insult to every American boy who aspires to be President or to high official position.

He said he was willing to sacrifice himself and, although he does not want the office, if we insist he will again accept it. Why? Because, forsooth, no other man is qualified. Rot and nonsense. The same thought was in the mind of every king or emperor of bygone days. Presumably, Roosevelt will die sometime. If his theory is correct, what will this Nation do when he is gone?

"I hate war," says Candidate Roosevelt. But for more than a year he has been proceeding, and he is now driving, toward war. Do you doubt it? Stop and think. You know he is.

SAFE IN A SWIVEL CHAIR

But who is going to fight this war? Not the President; not the President's sons. Jimmie and Elliott, in spite of the President's statement that we must have conscription and that voluntary enlistment was not the democratic way to get an army, have both enlisted. No; they did not enlist as privates at $21 to $30 a month. They got in by special favor—two of the privileged few. They landed as captains in swivel-chair jobs at a comparatively fat salary. They, too, hate war, and, in their present positions, will see none of it except that part which has to do with attending military balls, wearing gold-braid uniforms, and dancing with entertaining partners. While Wendell Willkie was fighting as a soldier in the last war, Franklin D. Roosevelt held down a swivel-chair job in the Navy Department at Washington.

AN EMERGENCY CAN BE USED IN THE CAMPAIGN FOR A THIRD TERM

We all hate war, but the difference between most of us and Candidate Roosevelt is that we really want to stay out of it while he really wants us in it. The threat of war, the danger of war, is his latest emergency. He will keep it going at least until after election; then he may find another, or by that time he may have us in war.

IT IS BETTER TO BE SAFE THAN SORRY

Just remember that if you wake up the morning after election and find that Franklin the indispensable has been reelected and he involves us in war, you will have 4 more years of it and of him. You can't do as the English did with Chamberlain—call for an election and kick him out. With all his waste, with all his extravagance, with all his desire to meddle in foreign affairs, you reelect him November 5 and you have him and his new dealers and political racketeers for 4 years more. And during that 4 years he will complete the job, which Wallace said should be done, of remaking America.

If the American people want 4 more years of unemployment, of depression, of spending and waste—we have had almost 8—and on top of it 4 years of wear, it is their privilege and they can get it by voting for Roosevelt. But we should not forget that, if we vote for it, we should take what follows without whimpering. But—

"DO NOT SEND A BOY TO MILL"

An old saying from pioneer days, when many a family depended upon the grist brought home from the neighborhood mill. Menfolk being busy, some families entrusted the taking of the precious sack of grain and the return of the ground flour or meal to a minor son of the family, who usually traveled on horseback. All too often the young man, distracted by hunting, fishing, or wayside gossip, failed to return the precious flour; then the family found itself lacking a necessity of life. So came the admonition, "Don't send a boy to mill." As a Nation we have reached the point where we, too, no longer can safely "send a boy to mill."

Because of the world-wide depression following the first World War, we threw out Hoover; elected Roosevelt, who promised to end unemployment, return prosperity, bring about domestic peace.

Unfortunately for us, like the boy on his way to the mill, Roosevelt's attention was distracted. He forgot his mission. He listened to those who told him our way of life was all a mistake; that our forefathers lacked wisdom; that work, sacrifice, and thrift were unnecessary; that we should go on a joy ride on borrowed money.

Forgetting his grist, the mill, the return home, the need of the Nation, Roosevelt has indulged in experiment after experiment. He has failed to solve the question of unemployment; to keep the solemn promises he so glibly made. He has pushed us along the road toward national bankruptcy; by his bellicose statements and unneutral acts, incurred the ill will of all but one of the powerful nations of the world. Contrary to Washington's advice, he has involved us in foreign entanglements and now seeks, through a third and no doubt a fourth and subsequent terms, to establish himself as a dictator.

It is time, if this Nation is to be saved, that the playboy—Roosevelt—no longer be entrusted with the destiny of our Nation. Whether we have peace or war, as our leader we should select one who believes in our form of government, who has faith in us, who will not seek to remake America, who will turn as he has turned a deaf ear to the Communists—Roosevelt accepted their support—who has behind him a record of achievement, a man who believes in God and in country, a man who keeps his promises, a man who will give us efficient preparation for national defense, and if the worst comes, sound, sensible, productive leadership in war, a man who does things—Wendell Willkie—rather than a Roosevelt, who talks about doing things, who wastes other people's money, who is more interested in world politics than he is in the well-being of his own country.

If we reelect Roosevelt for a third term, he will have reason to believe that he is indispensable, will consider the election results as a mandate to carry on a "total" war in Great Britain's behalf against the rest of the world. He will send American men and American ships wherever he may think they should go and, without a friendly powerful ally in the whole wide world, we, peace-loving America, will be carrying on with the faltering aid of Great Britain a world-wide war. And for what?

True, the American people have a rendezvous with destiny. It is at the polls on election day, November 5, when once for all this Nation should unmistakably declare that no man is indispensable, that it does not need and will not have a dictator, that it will choose, rather, a man of the people, a typical American, and continue under a constitutional government, where every man will have equal opportunity, where every man will be free, equal before the law, and able to live under a government of laws rather than of one man.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article in today's News by Hugh S. Johnson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. HORTON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter I have received from World War veterans of the United States merchant marine and also to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the importation of alien labor by the Bata Shoe Co., of Belcamp, Md.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a speech made by our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE GROWTH AND IMPORTANCE OF AMERICAN NEWSPAPERS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, from October 1 to 8 we have been having the observance of National Newspaper Week in the United States of America. There are many newspapermen, former editors and former reporters, who are in this body and some who still are actively engaged in various fields of journalism.

Mr. Speaker, the newspaper is one of the most important agencies in the world for the weaving of the fabric of thought and action. It is my belief that present-day newspapers are justifying their importance and power. For the most part, the dailies and weeklies scattered throughout our land, are giving to the people intelligent editorial comment and unbiased news reporting. [Applause.]

I think that we should look at the contrast between the first American newspaper and the modern metropolitan weekly and daily as they exist today.

FIRST NEWSPAPER IN 1704

It was in 1704 in the back room of a little Boston, Mass., book store that the first journal was conceived and printed in this country. There were just a few hundred copies of the meager news which had to be gathered from a reservoir of several days. Now, we have the modern daily newspaper, in from 1 to 10 editions, carrying a complete and accurate story of events which have happened not only in our own country but throughout the world just a few minutes and a few hours previously. If this were not a daily occurrence, we would not believe that in this country for a few pennies we could have delivered to our door each morning and evening, and to our places of business, the modern newspaper filled with its recording of events from every corner of the world. Carried therein are its market reports, its comics, its editorials, its political comment, features of every kind, augmented by proper and interesting advertising.

POETRY OF THE PRESS

I am thinking now of the poetry of the newspaper as it has been graphically expressed by Sprague, who said:

Turn to the press—its teeming sheets survey,
Big with the wonders of each passing day;
Births, deaths, and weddings, forgeries, fires, and wrecks,
Harangues and hailstones, brawls, and broken necks.
Trade hardly deems the busy day begun,
Till his keen eye along the sheet has run;
The blooming daughter throws her needle by
And reads her schoolmate's marriage with a sigh.
While the grave mother puts her glasses on
And sheds a tear for some old crony gone.
The preacher, too, his Sunday theme lays down
To see what last new folly fills the town;
Lively or sad, life's meanest, mightiest things
The fate of fighting cocks, or fighting kings.

[Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the early colonists in this country felt the need for some type of journal. Five hundred copies was considered a large issue. Today even the smallest country weekly runs into several thousand copies. There were no common carriers in that day except an inefficient post service, and a journal was limited by the bounds of the community. There were not enough events that could be gathered to furnish the news, and editors were fearful to voice their opinions and receive the reaction of their readers. Once a courageous printer of that day made certain stirring comment. He was thrown into jail and suffered the suspension of his newspaper.

As we come to 1750—and carrying over to the first of the American Revolution—we find that there was a new note in the make-up of our newspapers. There was a note of independence and self-reliance, and a growing political discontent. Editorials were written in strong language. Thus we had the laying of a Democratic foundation for the future America.

BECAME POLITICAL ORGANS

Coming to the days of the nineteenth century, the newspapers became potent as organs of political parties. Men not engaged in actual newspaper work wrote the editorials. Individuals from other professions acted as editors. Men like Thomas Jefferson and James Madison filled newspapers with their political essays. There were few good editors. News gathering was not stressed. Advertisements were hard to get. The newspaper then was looked upon as more or less of a charitable institution which should be supported.

Then came the transitional period in the history of our American newspaper life. We found the influx of the intelligent thinkers and writers. The personal tone came into dominance. There was Charles A. Dana, of the old New York Sun; there was Joseph Medill, of the old Chicago Tribune; there was Horace Greeley; there was George D. Prentice; there was "Marse" Henry Watterson.

BENNETT LED THE WAY

Then came the rise of the modern newspaper with up-to-date methods of gathering news and disseminating it. I think it might be well for us to reflect a moment on the fact that it was James Gordon Bennett, of the old New York Herald, who for the first time in the history of this country brought trained reporters into a newspaper organization. He gave for the first time in America the quotations of Wall Street, the news of club and society activities, coverage of sports, and reviews of one type or another which shocked the staid newspaper producers of that day, but soon they saw he was on the right track and adopted his methods.

LEADERS PRAISE THE PRESS

In the last few weeks we have had the Presidential nominees of both the Democratic and the Republican Parties pay tribute to the present-day strength of the American press, and rightly have they given recognition to the newspapers of America. Wendell Phillips said in his day, in speaking of the newspaper—

It is parent, school, college, pulpit, theater, example, counselor, all in one. Let me make the newspaper and I care not who makes the laws.

Daniel Webster said:

In popular government the free press is the most important of all agencies and instruments.

William Jennings Bryan said:

The lawyer can serve his country only occasionally, but the journalist every day. The minister's message gets itself uttered once in 7 days, but the journalist's seven times, line upon line, precept upon precept.

As I bring this short address to a close, I know that in the past years there have been many charges that the newspapers of this country lean toward "yellow" and sensational journalism. Perhaps the criticism is well-founded in some instances, but I believe the great majority of the newspapers of the country attempt to stress the good rather than the bad and at the same time desire to give the people of the Nation the news of the day. There was a time when a Democratic newspaper would be called a traitor if it admitted a Democratic defeat, or visa versa, but today our newspapers on the editorial pages take one position, and on the news pages give accurate, straight, informational reporting. That is a healthy condition. No coercion exists.

NO DICTATORIAL JOURNALISM

The American people can be proud of that type of free press in the United States of America, and we can well pause for just a moment to think of the contrast of our press with the press as we find it in many European countries, where not a single line written can be read by the people until it has had the okay of the dictatorial government in power in that particular country.

Let us remember that the American press is the friend, is the counselor, is the educator, is the molder of public opinion. Although as Members of this body we do not always agree or find favor with what is done in the newspaper field, let us be happy that we live in a country where the press of the Nation is free, and for the most part is honest and independent, and is a reflection of all that is progressive, right, and good in this democracy of yours and mine. [Applause.]

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE HOSPITALS

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 10574) to provide for free treatment in Public Health Service hospitals of certain persons engaged in maritime employment, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, be instead referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. This request is made with the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

THE LATE JUSTICE OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 258) to provide for the use and disposition of the bequest of the late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes to the United States, and for other purposes. This is the bill which relates to the memorial in honor of the late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. TREADWAY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I hope no objection will be raised to the consideration of this measure. It was originally brought to the attention of the Committee on the Library and a board was set up to see what could be done in relation to the legacy left by the late Justice Holmes to the Federal Government. The Board which was set up, of which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] were members, has brought in this report. Certainly the Congress ought to adopt it unanimously.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the committee selected pursuant to section 3 of Public Resolution No. 124, Seventy-fifth Congress, approved June 22, 1938, to make recommendations to the Congress concerning the use of the bequest and devise made to the United States by Oliver Wendell Holmes, late an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, is authorized to execute the functions vested in it by this joint resolution. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of such committee (hereinafter referred to as the "committee") shall be filled by the selection of a person selected in the same manner as his predecessor was selected. In carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution, the committee is authorized to utilize voluntary and uncompensated services and, with the consent of any Federal agency, to utilize the facilities and personnel of such agency. The committee is authorized to make any additional recommendations to the Congress which it deems desirable. Upon the completion of its work, the committee shall transmit a final report to the Congress and shall thereupon cease to exist.

SEC. 2. The committee shall prepare for publication a memorial volume designed to perpetuate the memory of Justice Holmes and to make readily available to the public the best expressions of his thought. Such volume shall contain such of the writings of Justice Holmes as are selected by the committee, and shall contain such additional matter and such illustrations as the committee may determine. The Librarian of Congress shall make available to the committee the facilities of, and the services of the personnel of, the Library of Congress to assist the committee in the preparation of such volume.

SEC. 3. The Public Printer is authorized and directed to cause to be printed and bound in the Government Printing Office, in a manner and form approved by the committee, such number of copies of the memorial volume prepared by the committee as the committee shall determine. The Superintendent of Documents shall distribute free of cost copies of such volume to such libraries, institutions, and other organizations and persons as the committee may designate. Copies of such volume which are not distributed free of cost shall be made available by the Superintendent of Documents for sale to the public at a price, notwithstanding any other provision of law, determined by the Public Printer to represent the actual cost of printing, binding, and distribution. The cost of printing and binding all of the copies of such volume shall be paid from money appropriated from the money in the Treasury to the credit of the account "Donations to the United States, Bequest of Oliver Wendell Holmes" (hereinafter referred to as the "Holmes fund"). Receipts from the sales of copies of such volume shall be covered into the Holmes fund so long as that fund is carried on the books of the Treasury, and thereafter such receipts shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury.

SEC. 4. The Architect of the Capitol is authorized and directed, under the direction of the committee, to acquire on behalf of the United States, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, that part of the property in square 759 in the District of Columbia which the Architect of the Capitol, with the approval of the committee, determines will provide a suitable site for the garden to be established pursuant to section 5.

SEC. 5. (a) The Architect of the Capitol, under the direction of the committee, is authorized and directed to establish on the land acquired pursuant to section 4 a memorial garden designed to perpetuate the memory of Justice Holmes and to commemorate the love of beauty and of the quiet open spaces of the city of Washington, to which he often gave expression. The garden so established shall be known as the Oliver Wendell Holmes Garden.

(b) The plans and designs of such garden, including the plans and designs for all grading and landscaping and all structures to be erected and other improvements to be made on the land acquired pursuant to section 4, shall be selected by the Architect of the Capitol, with the approval of the committee and of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, from plans and designs submitted in open competition. The manner of holding such competition and the amount to be paid for such plans and designs shall be determined by the Architect of the Capitol, with the approval of the committee. Expenditures made for carrying out the provisions of this section shall be made from moneys appropriated from the Holmes fund.

(c) The committee is authorized to make arrangements for appropriate ceremonies for the dedication of such garden upon its completion.

SEC. 6. After the completion and dedication of such garden, it shall be maintained and cared for by the Architect of the Capitol in accordance with the provisions of law applicable with respect to the maintenance and care of the grounds of the United States Supreme Court Building.

SEC. 7. (a) For the purposes of this joint resolution, the Architect of the Capitol is authorized, under the direction of the committee—

(1) To provide for the demolition and removal of any structures on the land acquired pursuant to section 4 and for the sale or other disposition of any materials of which they are constructed.

(2) Pending the demolition of such structures, to lease any of the property so acquired for such periods and under such terms and conditions as he may deem most advantageous to the United States; to provide, out of such appropriations as may be made for such purpose, for the maintenance, repair, and protection of such property; and to incur such expenses as may be necessarily incident to the jurisdiction and control over such property. Any proceeds received under this paragraph or paragraph (1) shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The Architect of the Capitol shall include in his annual report a detailed statement of his activities under this paragraph during the period covered by such report.

(3) To enter into contracts; to purchase materials, supplies, equipment, and accessories in the open market; to employ necessary personnel, including professional services, without regard to other laws relating to the employment or compensation of personnel; and to make such expenditures as may be necessary or appropriate.

(b) All lands within the area determined pursuant to section 4 which are subject to the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are transferred to the jurisdiction of the Architect of the Capitol. The Architect of the Capitol is authorized to close any alley within such area and is authorized, with the approval of the committee, to permit any portion of the land acquired pursuant to section 4 to be used as an alley so long as such use is necessary.

(c) All funds expended by the Architect of the Capitol pursuant to this joint resolution shall be disbursed by the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department.

SEC. 8 (a) The Commissioner of Public Buildings, in the Federal Works Agency, is authorized and directed, on behalf of the United States, to sell and convey title to the land and improvements thereon known as 1720 Eye Street NW., in the District of Columbia, the former residence of Justice Holmes. Such sale may be made pursuant to advertisement or otherwise upon such terms and conditions, and subject to such covenants with respect to demolition of the building and such other restrictive covenants, as may be approved by the committee. The Commissioner of Public Buildings is authorized to provide, by contract or otherwise and subject to the approval of the committee, for the demolition of the building upon such land prior to the sale of the land.

(b) The costs of any advertisement, appraisal, broker's fee, or commission incident to the sale of such property, and any costs incurred under this section for demolition of the building, shall be paid from the proceeds of the sale; and the funds of the Public Buildings Administration shall be reimbursed from such proceeds for any of such costs which shall have been paid from the funds of such Administration. The balance of the proceeds of the sale shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of the account of the Holmes fund.

SEC. 9. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of the money in the Treasury to the credit of the Holmes fund, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of sections 3 and 5 of this joint resolution; and there are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the other provisions of this joint resolution.

SEC. 10. Upon the transmission to the Congress of the final report of the committee, any money in the Treasury to the credit of the account of the Holmes fund shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 550) was laid on the table.

SENATE

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who hast revealed Thyself to men through Thy Son, Jesus Christ, and hast hallowed the common ways of life in the breaking of bread: Grant us grace, we beseech Thee, so to see Thy presence and the abiding joy which lies in the little things of home that presently surround us, yet which so oft escape our sight, that, having found Thee in the simple ways of life, we may the better know Thee as Thou art in Thy greater glory. Through the same, Thy Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Monday, October 7, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

PROGRAM TO SAFEGUARD AMERICA—LETTER FROM ARTHUR O. LOVEJOY

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, I present for publication in the RECORD and reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations a letter addressed to me by Mr. Arthur O. Lovejoy, chairman of the Maryland Branch of the Committee To Defend America by Aiding the Allies.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be received, printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The letter is as follows:

COMMITTEE TO DEFEND AMERICA BY AIDING THE ALLIES,
Baltimore, Md., September 28, 1940.

Hon. GEORGE L. RADCLIFFE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR RADCLIFFE: The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 26 (pp. 19130–19142) and the Baltimore Sun of the following day report speeches and remarks by several Senators in which this committee is attacked, its principles and aims misrepresented, and the motives and good faith of its members are aspersed, and an investigation of its activities is called for. No Member of the Senate appears to have seen fit to reply to this attack or to point out these misrepresentations.

I take the occasion to say that the Maryland Committee To Defend America by Aiding the Allies would welcome an investigation of its books, records, personnel, and publications by a congressional committee or any other competent body, and that we should be glad if you would so advise any of your senatorial colleagues who may be concerned. We are also of the opinion that a reply to these innuendoes and misrepresentations should be made on the floor of the Senate, where they were delivered. Since a very large body of Maryland citizens, who are presumably entitled to respect, are among those thus attacked, we should be gratified if one or both of the Maryland Senators would make such a reply—at least so far as to point out that any group of citizens having convictions on a grave question of public policy are supposed, under our American political tradition, to have a right to express their views, to solicit the support of their fellow citizens, and to petition both the executive and legislative branches of the Government—without having their objects wrongly stated and their motives impugned before Congress, with no opportunity for reply in the same place.

The pertinent facts are that the committee for which I have the honor to speak is an organization of patriotic Americans who, with the utterances of Adolf Hitler and the object lessons of Austria, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Denmark, Norway, Belgium, Holland, and Luxembourg before them, became convinced—

1. That there has arisen in Europe a military conqueror avowedly hostile to democracy everywhere and avowedly bent on world domination;

2. That his designs therefore constitute a formidable and not remote menace to the security, liberties, and economic well-being of the American people;

3. That it is better to have Hitler stopped with the aid of American guns and planes in Europe than to be compelled eventually to meet his aggression with American troops somewhere in this hemisphere;

4. That the defeat and destruction of the British Fleet would mean the control of the Atlantic by the totalitarian powers and the removal of the chief protective barrier against attack upon the American republics, and would therefore be a strategic disaster of the first order of gravity for the United States;

5. That therefore the first principle of policy and strategy for the United States in the present world crisis should be to make available to those across the Atlantic who are resisting this menace to all free peoples sufficient weapons and other material means for maintaining and strengthening such resistance so long as it can be carried on with any prospect of success; and

6. That our present deplorable state of unpreparedness makes such a policy even more imperative for our national defense, since we cannot take any risk of attack before our rearmament is completed.

These six propositions seem to us so clear and evident that we are unable to understand the workings of the minds of any informed persons who fail to recognize their truth. It is certain that the large majority of citizens throughout the country accept them. They are, it is to be noted, all of them propositions relating solely to American interests; and they present a program—the only program that offers any hope of success—for keeping war away from this hemisphere. We are therefore also unable to understand why citizens who exercise their right to urge such a program for safeguarding the most vital interests of their country and who, without remuneration, give of their time, energies, and means to this public service should be subject to the imputation of sinister, interested, or unpatriotic motives, such as have been charged against them in your honorable body.

We should be grateful if you would, in justice to many thousands of your constituents, have this letter read before the Senate and inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I am, with high regards,

Faithfully yours,

ARTHUR O. LOVEJOY, Chairman.

[A similar letter has been sent to Senator TYDINGS.]

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4400) for the relief of the First National Steamship Co., the Second National Steamship Co., and the Third National Steamship Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2211) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4208) establishing overtime rates for compensation for employees of the War Department, its field services, the Panama Canal Zone, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 2212) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7916) granting 6 months' pay to Lillian M. Reymonda, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2213) thereon.

RECORD OF COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I present a condensed report of the work of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate during the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, which commenced on January 3, 1940. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The total number of bills referred to the committee during the third session, 87.

The total number of bills enacted into law during the third session, 45.

The total number of bills reported to the Senate from the Committee on Naval Affairs during third session, 59.

Total number of bills passed by the Senate, 58.

Total number of bills now on the Senate Calendar (unfinished business), 1.

Number of nominations for appointment or promotion considered during the third session, 2,750.

The following major bills were enacted during the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress:

PUBLIC, NO. 629, SEVENTY-SIXTH CONGRESS (THE 11-PERCENT NAVAL EXPANSION BILL)

Public, No. 629, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved June 14, 1940:

(1) Increased the authorized composition of the United States Navy in under-age vessels from 1,557,480 tons to 1,724,480 tons (an addition of approximately 21 vessels).

(2) Authorized the President to acquire and convert or to undertake the construction of 75,000 tons of auxiliary vessels (approximately 22 vessels).

(3) Increased the authorized number of useful naval airplanes from not less than 3,000 to not more than 4,500.

(4) Increased the authorized number of useful lighter-than-air craft to a total of not more than 18.

PUBLIC, NO. 635, SEVENTY-SIXTH CONGRESS (THE AVIATION EXPANSION BILL)

Public, No. 635, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved June 15, 1940:

(1) Increased the number of authorized useful naval airplanes from not more than 4,500 to not more than 10,000 and the number of useful nonrigid lighter-than-air craft to a total of not more than 48.

(2) Authorized the President to provide training facilities for 16,000 naval aviators and enlisted pilots.

(3) Authorized the Secretary of the Navy to establish, develop, or increase naval aviation facilities, including the purchase of land and the construction of buildings and accessories, at a total cost not to exceed $144,132,000.

(4) Provided that the facilities authorized by the bill could be constructed on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis.

PUBLIC, NO. 671, SEVENTY-SIXTH CONGRESS (TO EXPEDITE NATIONAL DEFENSE)

Public, No. 671, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved June 28, 1940, was enacted to expedite naval shipbuilding and other national-defense measures. The majority of the provisions of this act are effective only during the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, and terminate on June 30, 1942, unless the Congress otherwise provides. Very briefly this act—

(1) Authorizes advance payments to be made to contractors not exceeding 30 percent of the contract price.

(2) Authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to negotiate contracts for the acquisition, construction, repair, or alteration of naval vessels, naval aircraft, machine tools, and other similar equipment without competition.

(3) Changes the provisions of existing law regarding the limitation of profits on contracts for naval vessels and aircraft.

(4) Modifies existing laws regarding hours of work and compensation for overtime work.

(5) Removes the statutory limitations with respect to the cost of vessels authorized by the act approved June 30, 1937.

(6) Removes the statutory limitations with respect to the cost of any other naval project of construction as may be necessary to expedite national defense.

(7) Authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to employ additional personnel.

(8) Authorizes the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Treasury to modify existing contracts to expedite military and naval defenses.

(9) Authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to use available appropriations for public-works projects, inclusive of buildings, facilities, utilities (including Government-owned facilities at privately owned plants and the expansion of such plants), and the acquisition of land and the purchase and lease of structures.

(10) Authorizes the Secretary of the Navy, with or without advertising or competitive bidding, to provide out of available appropriations for the operation and maintenance of any plants, buildings, facilities, utilities constructed pursuant to the authorizations contained in the act either by means of Government personnel or through the agency of qualified commercial manufacturers.

PUBLIC, NO. 757, APPROVED JULY 19, 1940 (THE TWO-OCEAN NAVY BILL)

Briefly, this act—

(1) Increases the authorized composition of the United States Navy in under-age combatant vessels by 1,325,000 tons.

(2) Authorizes an appropriation of $150,000,000 for essential equipment and facilities at either private or naval establishments for building or equipping any complete naval vessel or portion thereof heretofore authorized, or authorized by this act.

(3) Authorizes an appropriation of $65,000,000 for essential equipment and facilities for the manufacture of ordnance matériel or munitions at either private or naval establishments.

(4) Authorizes an appropriation of $35,000,000 for the expansion of facilities for the production of armor at either private or naval establishments.

(5) Authorizes the President to acquire and convert or to undertake the construction of—

(a) Patrol, escort, and miscellaneous craft as may be necessary to supplement the tonnages heretofore authorized or authorized by this bill.

(b) One hundred thousand tons of auxiliary vessels.

(6) Provides that no vessel, ship, or boat (except ships' boats) now in the United States Navy or being built for the Navy shall be disposed of by sale or otherwise except as is now provided by law.

(7) Increases the number of useful naval airplanes from not more than 10,000 to a total of 15,000 and provides that this total may be exceeded if in the judgment of the President this number is not sufficient to meet the needs of the national defense.

Costs

The estimated additional costs of the above bills are as follows:

Public, No. 629, approved June 14, 1940:
Cost of additional ships and planes	$654,902,270
Cost of modernizing 3 battleships	6,000,000
Cost of additional facilities at navy yards, etc	41,000,000
Total	701,902,270
Public, No. 635, approved June 15, 1940:
Cost of additional planes	1,150,000,000
Cost of additional shore facilities	410,000,000
Cost of training pilots	90,000,000
Cost of procuring and training additional personnel	300,000,000
Cost of ordnance equipment, bombs, ammunition, etc	300,000,000
Total	2,250,000,000
Public, No. 757, approved July 19, 1940:
Cost of additional vessels	3,760,000,000
Cost of additional shipbuilding, armor, and ordnance facilities	250,000,000
Cost of additional planes	600,000,000
Total	4,610,000,000
Public, No. 671, approved June 28, 1940:
No estimate of cost available. Since this act authorized overtime work and other measures to expedite national defense, it is quite possible that additional appropriation of several hundred millions of dollars will be required.
Grand total	7,561,902,270

It is to be noted that this amount is for additional ships, planes, bases, and other naval projects, and does not include maintenance costs, the cost of constructing ships, planes, and public-works projects authorized prior to January 1, 1940, or the replacement of obsolete vessels and planes.

TOTAL NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

The total appropriations for the Navy during the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress were $2,546,320,050. In addition contract authorizations were approved totaling $822,995,612, making a grand total of $3,369,297,662. This amount appropriated includes not only the beginning of construction of vessels, airplanes, bases, and other naval facilities authorized during the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, but includes payments being made upon construction and naval undertakings authorized in previous laws. As it takes 2 to 4 years to construct naval vessels and airplanes only a part of what is authorized is appropriated each year depending upon the extent of completion of each contract.

OTHER IMPORTANT NAVAL BILLS ENACTED

The following additional 21 important naval bills were enacted into law during the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress:

Public, No. 644. This act reorganized the Navy Department and consolidated the Bureau of Engineering and the Bureau of Construction and Repair into a new Bureau known as the Bureau of Ships.

Public, No. 657. This act transferred the Construction Corps to the line of the Navy.

Public, No. 443. This act increased the punishment for espionage and other crimes.

Public, No. 440. This act authorized the appointment of 100 acting assistant surgeons for temporary service in the Navy.

Public, No. 634. An act to regulate the number of warrant and commissioned warrant officers in the Marine Corps.

Public, No. 482. To amend the Naval Reserve Act of 1938 relative to the computation of Naval Service.

Public, No. 412. For the relief of World War sailors and marines who were discharged from the United States Navy or United States Marine Corps because of minority or misrepresentation of age.

Public, No. 433. Authorizing the payment of commuted rations of enlisted men.

Public, No. 615. An act to establish a uniform rule of treatment for all civilian employees of the Navy Department appointed for duty beyond the continental limits of the United States.

Public, No. 506. To accept on behalf of the United States personal property of the late Dudley F. Wolfe.

Public, No. 456. To accept on behalf of the United States land at Floyd Bennett Field, N. Y.

Public, No. 541. To accept real estate for the United States from the city of Miami, Fla.

Public, No. 558. Authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States a gift of the yacht Freedom from Sterling Morton.

Public, No. 775. An act to increase the number of naval aviators in the line of the Regular Navy and Marine Corps.

Public, No. 779. To increase the number of midshipmen at the Naval Academy.

Public, No. 782. To increase the authorized strength of Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps personnel from 2,400 to 7,200.

Public, No. 790. To extend the age limits for applicants for appointment as midshipmen at the Naval Academy.

Public, No. 786. Authorizing additional drydocks for the United States Navy.

Public, No. 617. Authorizing the sale of fuel, electric current, and water at isolated naval stations.

Public, No. 465. Authorizing appropriations to be made for the dispcsition of the remains of personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps.

Public, No. 540. To amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes."

MINOR NAVAL BILLS ENACTED

In addition to the above there were 20 bills enacted into law during the third session which were handled by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs. These bills were for such purposes as exchange of real estate, reimbursement for loss of personal property, etc.

PENDING NAVAL BILLS

The following naval bills have been favorably reported during the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs and have passed the Senate, but at this date not enacted into law.

S. 4254. Authorizing postgraduate instruction for civilian employees of the Naval Establishments.

S. 4245. To authorize the Secretary of the Navy to establish certain naval hospitals.

S. 4246. To provide for the appointment of certain persons as commissioned or warrant officers in the Naval Reserve.

S. 4196. Establishing overtime rates for compensation for employees of the field services of the Navy Department and Coast Guard.

S. J. Res. 253. Providing for the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of the United States Naval Academy.

S. 3008. To authorize the President of the United States to dispose of certain public vessels.

The following bill is on the Senate Calendar:

H. R. 9854. To authorize certain personnel in the Navy and Marine Corps to accept medals, orders, decorations, and presents from foreign governments.

The following bills are awaiting the approval or disapproval of the President:

H. R. 9636. Conveyance to the Commonwealth of Virginia portion of naval reservation known as Naval Proving Grounds.

H. R. 10406. Authorizing the appointment of graduates of the Naval R. O. T. C. to the line of the Regular Navy.

H. R. 10295. To amend the act of June 23, 1938 (Personnel Act).

NAVAL BILLS VETOED

During the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress the following bills were vetoed:

S. 2348. Relating to allowances to certain naval officers stationed in the Canal Zone for rental of quarters.

H. R. 4929. To amend the act of June 23, 1938 (Personnel Act).

H. R. 10405. To provide for adjusting the compensation of persons employed as masters at arms and guards at navy yards and stations, and for other purposes.

COMPOSITION AND EXPANSION OF NAVY

The act approved March 27, 1934—the so-called Vinson-Trammell Act—established the composition of the Navy at approximately 226 underage combatant vessels of 1,262,068 tons and approximately 2,050 useful naval airplanes.

The Naval Expansion Act of 1938 authorized an increase of approximately 20 percent in combatant vessels and an increase of approximately 50 percent in planes, making the authorized number of underage combatant vessels of 272 of 1,557,480 tons, and the authorized number of useful naval planes not less than 3,000.

During the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress an 11-percent expansion program, an aviation expansion program, and a two-ocean Navy expansion program were authorized. These 3 expansion programs increased the number of useful naval airplanes from not less than 3,000 to a total of 15,000, and the number of underage combatant vessels from 272 of 1,557,480 tons to approximately 480 vessels of 3,049,480 tons.

When the shipbuilding programs are completed, about 1944 or 1945, the Navy will have approximately 172 overage vessels (combatant) in addition to 480 underage combatant vessels.

In addition, these programs authorized the building or procurement of many auxiliary, escort, patrol, and miscellaneous vessels, the expansion of aviation bases and aviation training facilities, and the training of many additional pilots and aviation mechanics.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BAILEY:

S. 4403. A bill to permit members of building and loan associations and similar institutions to report and pay tax upon their earnings in such institutions in the taxable year in which such earnings accrue and to require such institutions to make an information return as to earnings of their members, such as is required for interest, rents, and salaries; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. STEWART:

S. 4404. A bill to authorize the President temporarily to transfer jurisdiction over certain national forest and national park land to the War Department or the Navy Department; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

PREVENTION OF AND PUNISHMENT FOR LYNCHING

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I am very anxious to read a letter which I had intended reading to the Senate several days ago. It is dated September 24 and is from Walter White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People:

DEAR WARREN: Would you be willing to ask on the floor of the Senate before Congress adjourns about the status of the antilynching bill and urge that the bill be considered and voted on before Congress adjourns. We very much hope you will be willing to do this.

We enclose self-explanatory copy of letter which we have written to Senator WAGNER giving the facts about the seven lynchings that have taken place this year and several others which are under investigation. The case at Brownsville, Tenn., where a law-abiding citizen was lynched because he went with other equally respectable Negro citizens to ask information as to what they should do to qualify to vote in the November Presidential election is a case which, by itself, is enough to shock Americans and to justify passage of the antilynching bill.

Other Negroes, including a minister of the gospel and a Negro proprietor of a filling station, were forced by the same mob to flee for their lives from Brownsville. They were ordered to get out of town before daybreak and were told that if they returned they would be lynched. One of these Brownsville refugees is father of seven children and his wife is soon to give birth to an eighth child. His filling station was taken over by the sheriff the day after he was run out of town. The sheriff claimed that he was taking it for a creditor who held a mortgage on the equipment. But Elisha Davis had paid in full for the equipment. The filling station is being run by other persons to whom no authority to run it has been given by the owner. Meanwhile Mr. Davis is penniless and is forced to live on the charity of his friends.

This situation is comparable to the oppression of minorities in Nazi Germany, which Americans and the Congress have rightly denounced. But the treatment of American citizens in Brownsville who sought to exercise their constitutional right to vote for the next President of the United States justifies the charges of German, Italian, and Russian newspapers of American hypocrisy as long as such conditions are permitted to continue in our own country.

It is because of this that we are taking the liberty of asking you and a few other active advocates of the antilynching bill in the Senate to raise on the floor of the Senate the question of debate and vote on that measure before Congress adjourns.

Sincerely,

WALTER.

Mr. President, I read this important letter, because I should very much like to ask the majority leader if there is to be an opportunity to bring up the antilynching bill in this session, before we either adjourn or recess, or whatever will be done in regard to the program for the future.

As for myself, I most strongly and emphatically point out that this legislation has been passed over obviously too often and altogether too long, and should have consideration. I am wholeheartedly and sincerely in favor of it, not only because of the premise that it stands for, but because it represents even more than merely preventing lynching; it has become a symbol of tolerance as representing the true American attitude in relation to real equality, without prejudice as regards race, creed, or color.

I therefore very earnestly ask the distinguished Senator from Kentucky what we may expect in relation to the most important question which the letter raises, and which I myself raise so urgently.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BARBOUR. I very gladly yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize the interest of the Senator from New Jersey in this subject, particularly at this time. The senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] has also spoken to me on the same subject; but I feel quite certain that the junior Senator from New Jersey knew the answer to his question before he asked it. However, I shall be entirely frank with the Senator and with the Senate and with the country, if the country is interested in my answer to his question.

The Senator from New Jersey and all other Senators know what the legislative situation has been during this session. The Senator from New Jersey and all other Senators know the history of this legislation in the Senate heretofore. The matter was brought up in the last Congress. It was debated here for some 6 weeks. I made every effort that I think a human being could resort to in order to obtain a vote on the antilynching bill. I made repeated requests for unanimous consent to fix a time when a vote might be had.

A motion was then made to invoke the rule for cloture, in order that a vote might be obtained on the bill. There was a yea-and-nay vote in the Senate on the motion for cloture; and while the rule requires two-thirds in order to bring about cloture, it did not receive even a majority, the vote being 37 in favor of cloture and 51 in opposition to it. I was among the 37 who voted to invoke the rule for cloture. Under those circumstances it was impossible to obtain a vote, and the bill had to be abandoned.

The House of Representatives passed the bill during the early part of this session of Congress. It came to the Senate, and the Judiciary Committee reported the bill I believe practically without amendment. If there is any amendment, it is trivial. I am informed that there is no amendment whatever.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, whose secretary is Mr. Walter White, has been particularly urgent in its request that this matter be brought to a vote at this session of Congress. I very much doubt if any other Senator realizes the situation in which I have been placed because of my position, and because of the not only insistent but sometimes peremptory demands that, regardless of anything else, the antilynching bill be brought forward for consideration in the Senate. I have tried to be fair and frank with this organization and with all others, in the Senate and outside of the Senate, interested in the antilynching bill. I have tried to explain to them the situation. I have stated to them, and I now state, that not only did I vote for cloture when the matter was up heretofore but after reasonable debate I would vote for cloture again. It has been my purpose, and I have had no change in that purpose, when the bill is finally voted on, to vote for it. I think it ought to be disposed of at the very earliest possible date; but I am sure the Senator from New Jersey knows, and all other Senators know, that there is violent opposition to the measure in the Senate.

Not only was there a 6 weeks' filibuster when the bill was up on a previous occasion, but those who are opposed to it, or some of them, have served notice that they will pursue the same course again when the bill comes up either in this session or in any future session in which they happen to be Members of the Senate.

The bill cannot be brought to a vote, in my judgment, without invoking the cloture rule. It may be unfortunate, and I think it is unfortunate, that under our rules proposed legislation in which many people are interested can be indefinitely delayed because of debate. I have never been in favor of filibusters, I have never participated in one. I believe that when debate has been permitted to run until it has been exhausted in every legitimate sense, the Senate should be allowed to vote on a measure which comes before it. Nevertheless we must face the conditions as they are, and not as we might wish them to be.

I have felt, and I believe that all other Senators have felt—indeed, it has been the general feeling—and I have consulted Senators not only on this side of the Senate Chamber but on the other side of the Chamber, including the minority leader, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], now the Republican candidate for Vice President of the United States, that, in view of the international situation, in view of the necessity and demand that we act speedily on defense legislation, which was of paramount importance to the country, nothing could more seriously interfere with that program and, it might be, even cast some reflection on the Senate itself, than to have the country witnessing a prolonged and interminable filibuster over any bill in the midst of this international situation, on which we have been called to act with speed and determination and consistency.

Under these circumstances I think it has been the unanimous view of the Members of the Senate that there should not be projected here a legislative matter of such profound controversy as to result in the prolonged, interminable filibuster which would ensue. I think that is a perfectly natural reaction.

Furthermore, I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that in an effort to ascertain whether a vote could be had at this session on the antilynching bill, I have had a very careful personal and individual poll made of the Members of the Senate on the Democratic side and on the Republican side, and in that effort the minority leader has cooperated, and it has been ascertained that cloture cannot be obtained at this time in order to have a vote on the antilynching bill. It is not only impossible to obtain the two-thirds vote necessary to adopt it, but it would not be possible to get a majority on either side of the Senate for cloture.

Under those circumstances it has occurred to me, and I am willing to take the responsibility of saying that in the midst of our international situation, our defense program, and the condition in which the world and our country find themselves, it is impractical at this time to make a futile effort to obtain a vote on the bill when it is known in advance that a vote cannot be had.

To answer the Senator specifically, the Senator knows that Congress has been in session ever since the first of January; it was in session practically all of last year; Members of the Senate and the House have had practically no vacation, unless they have run off while the bodies were in session, for a year and 9 months, and it has been generally supposed and generally desired on the part of both Houses that some form of recess be had in order that Members might take a vacation, or go home, or at least spend 4 or 5 weeks out of Washington. I do not know what is to happen regarding that; we have been waiting on the House of Representatives to make up its mind whether or not it would recess. I think the Senate is willing to take a reasonable recess, until sometime in the middle of November, but unless both Houses are willing to do that it is futile for one House to attempt it. If that is not done, I suppose there will be some sort of an arrangement by which no important legislation will be considered until the end of such a period as is decided on. But for the reasons I have stated it has seemed to me wise to enter into an arrangement for a joint recess until about the 18th day of November. Otherwise Members of Congress who go home will be constantly interrogated by their friends who see them and who have read in the morning paper that someone has made a speech in the House or the Senate on some subject which is probably not before either House; they will be interrogated as to why they are at home while Congress is still in session. For that reason it has seemed to me, in view of all the circumstances, that the wise course is to take a brief recess, and come back sometime about the middle of November.

I am anxious to see the bill to which the Senator from New Jersey has referred disposed of at the earliest possible opportunity when it can be disposed of. I have not felt and I do not now feel that it should have been injected into the midst of our program of national defense, when it would have interfered with that materially, and when a vote could not have been had on it, and when we would have spent weeks in futile debate and in another futile filibuster without any determination of the question to be voted upon.

I cannot state to the Senator when the measure can be taken up with any prospect of obtaining a vote. I hope it can be done at any early date, either when we come back in November, or at an early date in the next session, but, in all frankness, I do not feel it would be possible at this time, considering the legislative situation, and the mood of both Houses, to take the bill up and dispose of it before some form of recess is taken by the House and the Senate.

If that does not answer the Senator's question, I do not know how to answer it.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, the majority leader, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, has been, as he always is, very fair and very frank, and has answered the question, though I regret very much the answer he makes, that he feels there will be no opportunity in this session to bring up the antilynching bill. Anyway he is in agreement with me; he would like to have the matter disposed of at the earliest possible moment. He has said that two or three times in the course of his remarks in reply to my inquiry. That is just exactly the way I feel. I want the bill brought up at the very earliest possible moment and I still hope it can be this session. I did not know of any way in which I could get the best information as to this problem, that is, as to the prospect of bringing this legislation to the floor of the Senate other than by asking the majority leader what the prospects were. Of course, I meant no discourtesy to the Senate; he said, I believe, something about a peremptory demand.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand the Senator. I appreciate his situation.

Mr. BARBOUR. There was not the slightest idea of that, and my purpose is not to harass or trouble the Senator. But I am deeply and sincerely interested in this vital legislation, and have said so many many times. It certainly is not simply because of the fact that I am in another campaign myself that I bring up this subject, though I admit that that may seem to have a bearing on the matter. But this is not a new stand with me. I have always been of exactly the same opinion, regardless of any situation or other consideration, ever since I first came to the Senate in 1931.

Mr. President, this is such an old story, and has been debated so often that to me the fault seems obviously to lie with those who always filibuster against this bill. That is why I will vote for cloture. I am very much opposed to cloture generally speaking; I think it is something against which we must guard, but I do believe that when a bill has been debated and debated and debated and is prevented from coming to a vote merely by a filibuster on the part of a minority group of the Senate, then cloture falls within a different category from any ordinary legislative situation. That is why I should like to see cloture voted—I still hope—at this session.

The Senator from Kentucky has made it clear that in his judgment that is impossible; that is what his remarks amount to. Under the circumstances, I regretfully accept his conclusion and thank the Senator for his characteristically fair and frank statement as to the situation, but I still beg to insist that something be done to bring the antilynching bill up at this session of the Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to say merely an additional word. I hope that what I have said in my effort to give the Senator a frank answer will not be misquoted, that what I have said will not be twisted and distorted and garbled into indicating an attitude which I do not assume. I say that because recently in a colored newspaper in Chicago I was quoted as having made certain statements about the antilynching bill in response to a visit to Washington by a delegation of colored people who were interested in its passage. No such delegation has ever called on me; I gave out no such interview as that to which my attention was called, and I wrote in reply to the letter which I received from the secretary of the Association for the Advancement of Colored People that I not only had not given out the interview which had been printed in the Chicago paper, which I believe is called the Defender, or the Chicago Defender, at least the word "Defender" is in the title, but that I had never seen a copy of that paper. I do not recall that I knew there was such a publication; no such delegation ever called on me; and I never made any statement to any such delegation. I stated in reply to the letter which I received, sending me a copy of the alleged interview, that there was not the slightest foundation for a single sentence in the interview.

I am asking those who quote what I say here about this matter in reply to the Senator from New Jersey, no matter from what source they come or what newspaper they represent, to quote me accurately, and not attempt in any way to attribute to me statements or sentiments to which I have not given expression.

Mr. BARKLEY subsequently said: Mr. President, in connection with the remarks I made a while ago in response to the question of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the yea-and-nay vote in the Senate on January 27, 1938, on the motion for cloture in connection with the antilynching bill.

There being no objection, the vote was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, under rule XXII the Chair lays before the Senate the motion for cloture, signed by the requisite number of Senators, and directs the Secretary to read it.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

"We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close the debate upon the bill (H. R. 1507) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws and to punish the crime of lynching.

"Signed by Messrs. Neely, La Follette, Wagner, Clark, Van Nuys, Minton, Brown of New Hampshire, McGill, Schwellenbach, Truman, Bone, Bulkley, Hitchcock, Copeland, Thomas of Utah, Guffey, and McAdoo."

* * * * * * *

The VICE PRESIDENT. * * * Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close? Those in favor will answer "yea" when their names are called and those opposed will answer "nay." The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] and I would vote "yea" on this question. We are paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], who, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is detained on official business.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] are unavoidably absent.

The roll call resulted—yeas 37, nays 51, not voting 8, as follows:

Yeas—37: Adams, Barkley, Bone, Brown of Michigan, Brown of New Hampshire, Bulkley, Capper, Chavez, Clark, Copeland, Dieterich, Donahey, Duffy, Guffey, Hatch, Hitchcock, Johnson of Colorado, La Follette, Lee, Logan, Lonergan, McAdoo, McGill, Maloney, Minton, Murray, Neely, Pope, Schwartz, Schwellenbach, Smathers, Thomas of Oklahoma, Thomas of Utah, Truman, Van Nuys, Wagner, Walsh.

Nays—51: Andrews, Ashurst, Austin, Bailey, Bankhead, Berry, Bilbo, Borah, Bridges, Bulow, Burke, Byrd, Byrnes, Caraway, Connally, Ellender, Frazier, George, Gerry, Gibson, Gillette, Glass, Hale, Harrison, Hayden, Herring, Hill, Holt, Johnson of California, King, Lewis, Lodge, Lundeen, McKellar, McNary, Miller, Milton, Norris, O'Mahoney, Overton, Pepper, Pittman, Radcliffe, Reynolds, Russell, Sheppard, Smith, Steiwer, Townsend, Vandenberg, Wheeler.

Not voting—8: Davis, Green, Hughes, McCarran, Nye, Shipstead, Tydings, White.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On this motion the yeas are 37, the nays 51. Two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is not agreed to.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, as Senators know, I am one who has been interested in the passage of the antilynching bill. I heard the statement made by the distinguished leader, the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BARKLEY]. I regret that the situation in the Senate is as he has outlined it, but I think, in all fairness, it must be admitted that the leader has accurately described the situation. I am disappointed that the circumstances are such that it seems we will be unable to obtain consideration for the bill at the present session. I still entertain the hope, however, that we may yet, before we adjourn the present session, find it agreeable to take up the bill for consideration.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate, in order to vote on the nomination which we discussed yesterday, proceed with the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

FRANK S. PERKINS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the nomination of Frank S. Perkins to be postmaster at Fremont, Nebr.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, there was a very full discussion yesterday of the matter now under consideration—the suggested confirmation of a nominee for postmaster at Fremont, Nebr.—and I have no purpose to extend that discussion whatsoever. I note that there are some Senators present who were not here yesterday, and possibly have not had the opportunity to read the RECORD this morning, so I will simply summarize the facts. The present postmaster at Fremont, Nebr., is a man by the name of Frank W. Fuhlrodt. He was appointed postmaster of Fremont in 1920 by President Woodrow Wilson. For 17 years prior to that he had been connected with the Fremont post office, beginning as a clerk, and working his way up through every position in the post office, becoming assistant postmaster and later acting postmaster, and then in 1920, the district being represented by a Democratic Representative, the Honorable Dan B. Stephens, and Woodrow Wilson being President, a vacancy in the Fremont post office having occurred, Mr. Fuhlrodt took the examination, was No. 1 on the list, and was appointed postmaster. Upon the expiration of his term each succeeding 4 years he has been reappointed, regardless of whether the occupant of the White House happened to be a member of the Republican Party or of the Democratic Party.

Immediately prior to the expiration of his term in 1936, upon my recommendation, President Roosevelt sent the name of Mr. Fuhlrodt to the Senate, and the Senate unanimously confirmed him. I pointed out yesterday the reason why that was done. The chief postal inspector for that district, Mr. W. M. Coble, wrote to Mr. J. M. Donaldson, Deputy First Assistant to the Postmaster General at Washington, a letter which I read yesterday and to one sentence of which I will refer:

> During his long tenure the Fremont post office has been considered a model of efficiency.

Mr. Coble protested very vigorously against the proposed removal of this high-class postmaster, who is a credit to the Post Office Department, because there were some political considerations involved not touching Mr. Fuhlrodt at all. No one has even hinted that he had ever taken any part in any political activities whatever. I brought the matter down to date by saying that in the last examination, less than 60 days ago, I believe, when the Fremont post office was examined by the two inspectors assigned to that work, they rated the office as very nearly perfect, 96.6 percent, and 98 percent in the custodial service, which is as near perfection as a post office ever attains.

I went into all that yesterday, and I will not go further in repeating it, except to say that I disagree fundamentally and completely with those who take the position that this is merely a question of determining whether the nominee is acceptable and that the Senate and the individual Senators have no right to go beyond that.

I make no contention against the man whose name appears as the nominee, but I say that every Senator must realize, and every person in the country who learns anything about the matter should clearly understand, that there is more involved in this case than the qualifications, whatever they may be, of the nominee, because there is involved also, and inseparably tied up with the vote about to be cast, the question of ousting from the position which he has held for more than 20 years, one of the most efficient postmasters in the entire country. There can be no legerdemain, no means by which there can be covered up the fact that a vote in favor of confirmation of the present nominee is at the same time fully and effectively a vote to oust this capable and efficient postmaster.

In closing these brief remarks I merely wish to say again that I absolve the Civil Service Commission from anything wrong in this matter. They were requested by the Post Office Department to conduct an examination, and, while the Post Office Department had a perfect right under the existing law to request a noncompetitive examination and retain this efficient postmaster, they still had the right, under the law, as has been pointed out, not to do that, and to ask for a competitive examination; although, if they wanted to live up to the spirit of the law they would have no right to do that. They certainly had no right to do it on purely political grounds, as was done in this case.

Yesterday I read the letter of Mr. Donaldson in answer to the letter sent to him by the Chief Postal Inspector, in which Mr. Donaldson, Deputy First Assistant to the Postmaster General at the time, said, and I marvel at the frankness of his statement:

> It is very likely that Mr. Fuhlrodt will make a grade sufficient to place his name among the first three—

He did. He was head and shoulders above anyone else when the examination was held—> and then consideration can be given to his appointment. However—

And this is the significant part—

> However, the Department will consult Hon. James C. Quigley, of Valentine, Nebr., who is our adviser in this particular case.

The Honorable James C. Quigley is Democratic national committeeman and, until a few months ago, he held also the office of Democratic State chairman. So it is clear to everyone who has eyes to see or ears to hear that this is a purely political procedure from start to finish. Under all the circumstances I am perfectly willing to and accede gladly to the proposition that the department should not consult me and take my recommendation on these matters, but having in January of this year asked for my recommendation, and since I had given it to Mr. Fuhlrodt, I do not think it is quite fair to Mr. Fuhlrodt to say that because I recommended him, therefore he is not to be considered for reappointment; that he is not to be reappointed to the office which President Wilson gave him and all the succeeding Presidents, including President Roosevelt, have been glad to give to him. That is why I have made a vigorous protest.

I say to the Senate in all sincerity that that is about all there is involved in this case. If Senators think that a highly efficient, capable postmaster ought not to be continued in office because he was recommended by one who now does not stand in favor with the administration, of course Senators can vote to oust him by voting for the confirmation of the man whose nomination is sent to the Senate in his place.

In closing I repeat what I had to say about the Civil Service Commission yesterday. In an official bulletin, Form 2223, the Civil Service Commission says in reference to the manner in which nominees shall be selected—

> In all cases selection for appointment shall be made with sole reference to merit and fitness and without regard to political or religious considerations.

To show how the Civil Service Commission has been attempting to live up to that declaration, which ought to have the hearty support of every Senator present who believes in the civil service, I refer to the case of Owen Sherick, Nankin, Ohio. Some time not very long ago there occurred a vacancy in that post office. The Post Office Department submitted to the Representative from that district, for a report, the names of the three high eligibles. The Representative wrote, no doubt, in the normal way to the political leader of the district. The political leader wrote back that the man who was third on the list, Mr. Sherick, was strictly a party man, and ought to have the appointment. In some way that statement of the political leader of the district to the Representative came to the attention of the Civil Service Commission, and formed the basis of the charge that political conditions had entered into the appointment. The Post Office Department argued that it did not know anything about the correspondence between the Representative and the political leader. In the present case the Department does not have that defense, because the Post Office Department itself conducted the correspondence with the political leader. However, in the prior case the Post Office Department said, "No; we did not know anything about that correspondence, or about the political considerations which entered into the question, so we can do nothing about it."

The Civil Service Commission called the matter to the attention of the General Accounting Office, and said that political considerations had clearly entered into the making of the appointment, and that on that theory the General Accounting Office ought not to allow the postmaster's salary. That case involved a fourth-class post office. The General Accounting Office, after conducting an investigation, upheld the decision of the Civil Service Commission, but said there was nothing it could do about the matter, because under the law and the practice fourth-class postmasters are not paid by checks issued by the General Accounting Office. Their compensation comes out of their receipts. So the matter stood.

I refer to that case because it shows that the Civil Service Commission at least is making an effort to keep extreme political considerations out of these appointments. I very much doubt whether in the entire country there could be found a more perfect example for clearly drawing the line between those who want to enforce the merit system in the Postal Service and those who are willing to find some excuse, however flimsy, to take a different position and let the spoils system continue.

As the chief inspector said, to oust Mr. Fuhlrodt and select a successor to him would constitute a return to the old spoils system. This is a clear case, because the incumbent is a man who has held the office for a long time. It is not a case in which we are considering an eligible list of persons no one of whom has been in the Service. In such a case I should agree fully that we might properly say, "No. 2 or No. 3 on the list is a good man and, under the law, may be appointed. No. 1 may be a little better, but none of them has been in the office, and the nominating authorities have submitted the nomination of No. 2 or No. 3, and we will vote to support it." In such a case there would not be involved the ouster of a competent and deserving postmaster.

Mr. President, that is all I desire to say upon this subject. It seems to me this is a clear case in which every Senator who desires to extend the benefits of the civil service, and to uphold the claims that are made that we believe in the merit system in the Postal Service, ought to vote against confirmation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the telegram, which I send to the desk.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FREMONT, NEBR., October 8, 1940.

HON. EDWARD R. BURKE,
United States Senator.

We admire and appreciate your stand on reappointment of Fuhlrodt. Sentiment here very strong for him. It is our hope that your colleagues will support you.

N. A. Allen, lumber and coal; Dr. Geo. A. Haslam; J. M. Sorensen, banker; W. R. Rowe, building and loan; Dean Lesher, newspaper publisher; F. L. Hintz, merchant; Geo. A. Sanderson, hides and wool; C. N. Johnson, laundry; Arthur Baldwin, real estate and insurance; E. M. Daniels, druggist; E. D. MacLeod, grocer; Lloyd Moffet, nurseryman; F. E. Gibson, investments; Wm. N. Mitten, banker; Frank Hammond, manufacturer; Emil Hahn, bakery; G. C. Courtright, hardware; R. A. Johnston, insurance.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have only a few words to say to the Senate concerning this nomination for postmaster.

I do not know any of the applicants. The nominee is one of the three highest eligibles. He was recommended by the authorities in the State of Nebraska. His name was recommended to the President by the Post Office Department, and the President has sent his name to the Senate in the usual way. He is the second man on the list.

Under the law the President has a right to select any one of the three highest eligibles. The authorities have the power to recommend any one of the three highest eligibles. The nominee is of the highest character; and that character was attested to time and again yesterday in the debate by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], who opposes the nomination. The Senator from Nebraska says the nominee is an honorable man, an efficient man, and in every way worthy of the appointment.

Under the circumstances, I think it would be a very great reflection upon this man to reject his nomination simply because he was second on the list. We have been following a uniform practice under the present law for all these years. Why should we make an exception of this man? I doubt if there is a Senator on this side of the aisle who has not at some time recommended No. 2 or No. 3 on the eligible list. It is frequently done. There is never any contest about it.

Our committee has favorably reported the nomination of the man who was No. 2 on the list. He is a man of the highest character, a man of excellent fitness for the place; and I think it would be exceedingly discourteous, to say the least, to reject his nomination because he is not No. 1 on the list, when the law provides that any one of the three highest eligibles may be selected. I was not in favor of that law. I voted against it, but it is the law. Why should we single out this man at this late date in the session, after he has been nominated? Why should we single him out to make an exception?

When the matter first came up I asked the Senator from Nebraska if he had any personal objections to the man, and he said "No." As is well known, whenever a Senator has had personal objections to an applicant for office, or an eligible who is about to be appointed, I have always considered such objections. During my service as chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I do not think a single applicant has been appointed after a Senator had come to me and told me that he was opposed to him because of personal reasons. I hope Senators will not change the rule now. I hope the Senate will confirm this nomination.

It would not help Mr. Fuhlrodt a particle to reject the nomination, because the Department would probably submit another name. The Civil Service Commission might hold another examination. There is no reason for the Senator to expect that the rejection of the nomination would help his man. So it seems to me there is only one thing for the Senate to do, and that is to confirm the nomination.

I do not know any of the candidates for the position. I am told that Judge Quigley, chairman of the Democratic committee in Nebraska, is one of the very best men in Nebraska. He has recommended Mr. Perkins, and I see no reason under heaven why Mr. Perkins should not be confirmed. I see no reason why the man who has passed the examination, and who has been nominated in accordance with the law which we ourselves have passed, should not be confirmed. Although the law was passed over my protest, the Congress passed it; and I see no reason in the world why the nominee should be dishonored and humiliated and thrown out after he has received the appointment from the Executive Office.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A few moments ago the Senator said the nominee had been recommended by the authorities in Nebraska. It is perfectly apparent from the record which has been made in the Senate that the "authority" in Nebraska who recommended him was the Democratic national committeeman.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He is a most excellent gentleman. He happens to be a very dear friend of mine, for whom I have great respect and affection.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know him.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee just what are the status, responsibilities, and duties of a national committeeman under the Constitution and the civil-service laws with regard to making these appointments which would lead a responsible department official to say that the adviser of the department on such matters is not one of the Senators from the State, not one holding a responsible position, not one who has taken an oath of office to support the Constitution, but the Democratic national committeeman of the State, whose recommendation overrides the views of everybody else.

I wish the Senator to understand me. I have very great respect for Democratic and Republican national committeemen. I have been a party man all my life. I know that for many years the Senator from Tennessee was Democratic national committeeman in his own State, and probably still is.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I am not now, but I have been.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from Nebraska himself was formerly national committeeman from Nebraska. He was elected at the primary election.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a statement?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. The comment is very interesting. I was elected Democratic national committeeman in Nebraska in the primary in April 1936; and the only reason why Judge Quigley and I have not got along as well since is that he himself wanted to be national committeeman. When I ran for the place, he then ran for the nomination for United States Senator, but with the announcement that if he should win the Democratic nomination, and if my colleague [Mr. NORRIS] could be persuaded to run as an independent, he would advise all his supporters to support my colleague. Mr. Quigley came in second in the race for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator, and then actively supported the nomination of my colleague, as I am frank to say I did myself. That leads me to the point I was going to make, that, having been elected national committeeman, I found as my first duty it was necessary to say that I could not support the nominee of my party for the Senate, but would follow the recommendation of President Roosevelt and support my colleague, and, so, within 60 or 90 days after my election as national committeeman I resigned on that ground. An arrangement was made by the State committee that Mr. Quigley should be appointed national committeeman and he was appointed; but the judge and I have never gotten along so well since that time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I can say to the Senator from Nebraska I have a very definite recollection of that, because Jim Quigley and I were sitting in Jim Farley's office in New York during the national campaign when Farley received a telegram from the Senator from Nebraska, announcing his resignation on the ground that he could not support the Democratic nominee for United States Senator against the distinguished senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. But I still would like to find out exactly what is the official status, under the Constitution or the civil-service law, of any of the excellent gentlemen who are national committeemen, and why, in consonance with any theory of the civil-service law, their recommendation should be taken over that of a Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be very happy to explain it if I can. Before doing so, since a little politics has been injected into the discussion, and my own status as a national committeeman has been referred to, I wish to say that I was elected by my party as national committeeman several years ago and served for a while. Then, at a very celebrated convention in my State, I was unanimously reelected, and perhaps reelected for a third time; but I rose and asked if they would not elect another gentleman, and they elected another in my place, a very much better man than I was. That is how I happen not to be national committeeman at this time. I retired from that office of my own volition.

But now, coming back to the question of the Senator from Missouri, he wants to know how it happens we have a recommendation from a national committeeman. That is rather involved, but I will give him what I understand to be the facts and the law about it.

In the first place, we had a real civil-service law under President Wilson, who selected, without regard to politics of any kind, the highest man on the list, whether he was a Democrat or a Republican. I recall very distinctly that a number of Republican postmasters were appointed in Tennessee under Mr. Wilson's administration, all of whom were not only appointed by Mr. Wilson because they were first on the list but were confirmed by this body, of which I was a Member.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. On that point I may say to the Senator that I have long been of the opinion that President Wilson's order contributed very greatly to the debacle that happened to the Democratic Party in 1920.

Mr. McKELLAR. I take a somewhat different view about it. I rather thought if we were to have a civil service at all in the selection of postmasters, which I doubted extremely, that was the best way to select them.

But the Senator from Missouri wants to know how it happens that the chairman of the State committee or the national committeeman has anything to do with such nominations. When Mr. Wilson went out of office in 1921 Mr. Harding succeeded him, and, in a very short time, under the law as this body helped to make it, Mr. Harding issued an Executive order under which any one of the three highest on the list could be selected. They were selected in Republican States by the Republican Senators or Republican Representatives, as the case might be, and, as a rule, about 95 percent, or, I imagine, 99 percent, were Republicans; practically all the post-office appointees were Republicans under the Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover administrations.

When the Democrats won, and Mr. Roosevelt was elected President, he merely continued the Republican order, and under that rule, which is the same as that in force under Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover, Senators or Representatives, or, in the event there is any trouble about the Representatives or Senators from a given State, either the national committeeman, or the chairman of the State committee make——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield in a moment—make recommendations, and the name of the nominee recommended is sent to the Senate.

If the Senator will let me answer his question—and I will take but a moment—let us now come down to the instant case. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] recommended someone else than the present nominee. I have forgotten his name.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Fuhlrodt, who has been postmaster for 20 years, and I made the recommendation at the request of the Department in January of this year.

Mr. McKELLAR. In the meantime, the Senator from Nebraska was not in favor in certain quarters. I regret that situation exceedingly, for I wish to say, and it gives me pleasure to say, that I regard the Senator from Nebraska, ED BURKE, as one of the finest men in this body; and I am devoted to him; I think he is a splendid, upright man, a man of high principles, high honor, and integrity, and I have nothing but the kindest feelings toward him; indeed, I am proud that we are exceedingly friendly. So that there is no question of that sort arising, and I am very sorry that this situation arose as to him.

But the Senator from Nebraska, after he had announced that he was for the Republican candidate for the Presidency and was undertaking to help the Republican candidate, under this order which the Republicans issued and which the Democrats have held in force, the question arose as to how postmasters in Nebraska should be appointed. To show the situation—and it is a very anomalous one—my good friend, the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], who is a Republican, and who is supporting Willkie, is for a Republican for reappointment to the post office in question, while my other friend from Nebraska—I do not see him present at the moment——

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield in a moment. My good friend, the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who is a Republican——

SEVERAL SENATORS. Oh, no.

Mr. McKELLAR. He was a Republican, but is now an independent, and is supporting the administration.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] is a Republican, why is not the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] a Democrat?

Mr. McKELLAR. The senior Senator from Nebraska made a speech yesterday in favor of the man whose nomination for postmaster has been sent in. So they have peculiar politics in Nebraska. It is a little different from what we have in Tennessee. We do not have those kinds of differences. Of course, in that situation, a Democratic Postmaster General and a Democratic President have sent in the name of the nominee, and I want to say that under the circumstances I am strong for the man whose name has been sent in. I do not want to see him dishonored; I do not want to see him embarrassed, and I hope the Senate will overwhelmingly confirm his nomination.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri and Mr. BURKE addressed the Chair.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield to either Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I merely wish to say that I have listened with great patience and anxiety for the answer of the Senator from Tennessee to my question. I have not heard any answer as yet from the Senator from Tennessee that touched my question, side, top, or bottom. What I asked the Senator was exactly what function, either under the Constitution or under any civil-service law or under any other statute, does the national committeeman of any party have? Of course, I am familiar with the practice, just as is the Senator from Tennessee, and I have been familiar with it for many years.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is a practice under the law.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But I have never yet until today seen an avowed statement by the acting or deputy First Assistant to the Postmaster General or any other responsible official, through an official communication that they were simply accepting the dictates of a man entirely outside the public service.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the assistant to the Postmaster General said anything like that he is wrong.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from Nebraska read his letter.

Mr. McKELLAR. That may be so, but he is mistaken about how it was done. It was done under the law the Congress enacted. It is not in the Constitution at all. The only thing in the Constitution which a great many people have been trying to remove from it for many years, on one pretext or another, and most of the Senators have voted to take it out of the Constitution, provides that officials of this kind shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. There are Senators on this floor who voted to modify the Constitution in that respect and who contended that first-, second-, and third-class postmasters were such tiny offices, so inconsequential, and so——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I hope the Senator is not shaking his gory locks at me.

Mr. McKELLAR. Just a moment—and so unimportant that they ought to be appointed by some inspector sent down from Washington to determine who should be the postmaster at Memphis, for instance. I remember several years ago when this same procedure was followed there was sent down a young fellow who had never been South before; I doubt if he had ever been out of Washington three or four times in his life; certainly he had never been over a hundred miles from Washington anywhere, as the facts showed afterward. He went to Memphis, and, as I recall the facts, on the train he met a gentleman. They engaged in conversation, and he said to the gentleman that he was going to Memphis to select a postmaster. The gentleman in question told the inspector that he himself would make a very fine postmaster. The inspector rather fell in love with the gentleman, and, lo and behold! he put him first on the list when he sent in the names. Of course the man was not appointed postmaster at Memphis; but if there had not been someone in this body to look after the matter, the people of Memphis would have had a wholly incompetent and a wholly improper person as postmaster, because this man was put first on the list. It was a perfectly outrageous action.

So far as I am concerned, I think the old constitutional way is the best way of dealing with this matter. I want to say so to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], because he believes in the Constitution just as I do, probably even more so than I do; or, at any rate, he talks more about it. [Laughter.] I have the greatest reverence for that document. I do not talk about it quite as much as does my good friend the Senator from Missouri, for whom I have the greatest admiration and esteem, and whose friend I really am, as he knows, and have been for 30 years. But the Constitution set out a pretty good way of selecting officers of this sort. They are to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Senators, while I have your attention today, let me say to you, what a foolish thing we do when we turn over to some clerk here in Washington, who perhaps has never been out of Washington, the important duty of selecting—take my own State as an illustration—a postmaster at Memphis, or at Chattanooga, or at Nashville, or at Knoxville, or any other city in my State. Who knows better about it—a clerk here in the Civil Service Commission, or we who perhaps live in the cities, we who have daily communication with the people there, we who know every man of any importance in those cities, and sometimes we know nearly all who are in them? I know a great many persons in the various cities of my State. I would rather have a Senator's recommendation; and it always gives me a great deal of pain when we do not have it.

I have a rule in my committee, as members of the committee know, that when a Senator says, "There is something wrong with that man; I do not want him appointed; he is not the kind of man who ought to be appointed; I have a real reason for opposing him"; his nomination has never been favorably reported by my committee in the 7½ years that I have been presiding over its deliberations; and I shall have to change my mind mightily before I vary from that practice. If the Senator from Nebraska will rise and say that this man is personally and politically offensive and objectionable to him, under the rule which has been maintained in the Senate for 150 years, he will not be confirmed. I will vote with the Senator from Nebraska against his confirmation.

Mr. BURKE rose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator from Nebraska want me to yield to him? Some Senator wanted me to yield a moment ago.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I do.

Mr. GILLETTE. I suggest that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] go ahead first.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator wish to ask me a question, or does he desire the floor? I am through.

Mr. BURKE. I was challenged to make a statement, and I wanted to respond to the challenge.

Mr. GILLETTE. I wish to ask a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me yield first to the Senator from Nebraska, as he is so much interested. Then I will immediately yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, before propounding a question, let me say that I very much appreciate the kind words the Senator spoke, and I know he does not speak that way unless he feels that way. I shall treasure those words very greatly always. I should say on that subject, also, that I served for a brief period of a year or two on the Senator's committee; and both then and since I have marveled at the extreme courtesy and efficiency with which the Senator presided over that committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I regret that the Senator from Nebraska did not continue to serve on it.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator from Tennessee is entirely correct in saying that whenever any Senator let it be known to the chairman of the committee that a nomination was obnoxious to him, that the nominee did not have the necessary qualifications, or anything else, so far as my experience goes, the name has never come out of the committee.

This case, however, as we can realize, is a little different. I have nothing of that kind to say against this nominee. As I said yesterday, he is my friend much more closely than is Mr. Fuhlrodt. In fact, I hardly know Mr. Fuhlrodt. I could not go before the committee or on the floor of the Senate and say any word in disparagement of this nominee; but it seemed to me very clear that this was a matter which ought to be presented to the Senate: Are we obliged, as individual Senators, under our oaths of office, to vote to oust a thoroughly competent postmaster who has served long and faithfully just because the Department has seen fit in a particular case to ask the advice of a political leader who, in this case, acting solely and wholly for political reasons—and I am not saying anything against him; he has been my friend for a long time—recommended the ousting of this efficient postmaster?

The Senator says, "Think of this poor nominee. What an affront it will be to him, how much it will hurt his feelings, if he is not now confirmed." Well, if it will be an affront to the nominee not to be taken out of his private business and installed in the post office, how badly will the incumbent postmaster feel if he is displaced when he has devoted his whole life to the service of the post office in that community—from 1903 to the present day—and has made it an outstanding example, which the Senator from Tennessee himself, if he were familiar with it, would be proud to hold up to all other postmasters over the country.

I say that we cannot concentrate our gaze upon the disappointment that would come to the nominee and forget altogether the interests of the service and the feelings that would exist not only in the breast of this postmaster, who has served long and faithfully, but of all the other postmasters throughout the country who would be familiar with the case and who would realize that, if the way should ever open, they, too, would be thrown out in order to let a political appointee come in.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me answer the Senator from Nebraska, and then I will yield to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE]. I take great pleasure in answering him.

We are not ousting Mr. Fuhlrodt. Mr. Fuhlrodt's term has expired. Suppose something should happen in Tennessee, and the people should refuse to send me back to the Senate on the 5th of November. I hope to Heaven they would not. I do not believe they would, but they might.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. In a moment. Anything is possible in politics. If they should, the Senate would not be ousting me if I should appear here on the third of January and want to continue to occupy my seat in this body. My term would have expired; and that is all that has happened to Mr. Fuhlrodt. His term has expired under the law which we passed. His term is out, and he is an applicant for reappointment. He has not been reappointed, but another man has been appointed.

There is no reason why Mr. Fuhlrodt should feel unkindly toward anybody. He should not feel disappointed in any way. He has not been removed; he simply has not been reappointed. Another man has been appointed by the President, and his nomination is now here for confirmation or rejection.

I do not think the nominee—I do not recall his name; I do not happen to know him——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Perkins.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think Mr. Perkins, after being appointed under the law we passed, should be subjected to the shame and humiliation of having his nomination rejected by this honorable body.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GILLETTE. I have been following very closely the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee. I was interested first in his statement that the President, following his undoubted right under the law, has sent to the Senate the nomination of one who was second or third on the list. There can be no criticism of the President for sending in the nomination. I am sure there is no criticism of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, or of his committee, no objection being made to the character or efficiency of the nominee, for reporting the nomination to the Senate for confirmation. But the Senator referred to another factor which had entered into this situation, which was the position in which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] has placed himself by some attitude he has taken with reference to the pending Presidential campaign.

I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee a question. When Senators are asked to exercise their constitutional right and duty to advise and consent to nominations, the Senator does not mean to suggest, does he, that it is necessary for us, in the exercise of that duty, to take into consideration factors such as he suggested; that we do not have a perfect right to reject factors of that kind, and vote under our constitutional duty as to rendering our advice and consent? The Senator does not mean to suggest that; does he?

Mr. McKELLAR. Indeed, I do not. As all Senators know, I have been a Member of the Senate for a long time. I do not believe, taking the Senate as a whole, there is a greater body of men on earth than the body of which we are Members. Individual exceptions come and go, as we all know, but as a rule a Senator of the United States is a man of the highest character and standing, and of the highest and most stable independence. Taking them by and large, they try to do what is right; they try to do their duty conscientiously. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] is exercising a right which he has in this body. Of course, he has a right to take the stand he has taken. We do not have to take anyone's recommendation. But in this particular case I am compelled to think that the junior Senator from Nebraska is not correct in the position he takes about this nomination. I think the nomination should be confirmed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Connecticut has been on the floor asking me to yield for some time. I will yield to the Senator from Utah immedately after answering the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator from Tennessee, but I will take the floor for a few minutes after he concludes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. In view of the interpretation which the Senator places upon the law—and I will say that I do not place upon it the same interpretation he does—I should reach the conclusion, after hearing the debate and listening to the comments which have been made and the testimony which has been offered, relative to the long and distinguished service of the present incumbent of the post office at Fremont, that he is a better man for the position than is Mr. Perkins.

Mr. McKELLAR. How often we have heard the same expression in another connection.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator take the view that it would be my duty to vote for Mr. Perkins as against the other man?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is not voting, let me explain——

Mr. KING. We are to vote on a nomination.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is not voting for or against the other man.

Mr. KING. I understand.

Mr. McKELLAR. He is voting for or against the nominee, against whom not one single scintilla of criticism has been aimed. This nominee is absolutely all right, and no one has testified more strongly to that fact than has the junior Senator from Nebraska, who is opposing his nomination. It is not a question whether the postmaster whose term has expired is to receive the postmastership at Fremont, Nebr. It is a question whether the man who has been recommended by the President of the United States shall be confirmed.

Mr. KING. Then, the Senator takes the position, if I understand him correctly, that we are not free agents, that whenever a man is recommended who has a good character, it is our duty to vote for him, though we believe that another man who took the examination and who had a higher rating is a better man, and we are convinced that he would make a better postmaster, and that it would be a grave injustice to oust him after his long years of service. The Senator takes the position, as I interpret his observation, that we are not free agents, but that we are bound to take the recommendation of a politician in the State, who is the national committeeman, and the recommendation of the President of the United States. I do not assent to that view at all. I shall exercise my own judgment, and my opinion is that Mr. Fuhlrodt is the better man, and that he is entitled to the position. I shall vote against the confirmation of Mr. Perkins.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President I have taken no such position as that attributed to me by the Senator. The Senator has a perfect right, if he believes as he has stated, to vote as he has indicated. I am not questioning his right in the slightest. If the Senator feels that he should vote against a good man, a man who everyone admits is a high class, honest man, who will perform the duties of the office well, that is a matter for the Senator to determine. It is one of the fine things about this body that a Senator can vote just as he honestly and conscientiously feels he should vote. I just differ with the Senator. I do not know anything about either of these men, but certainly the nominee is a good man, and, as I look at it, we are not voting for or against the present postmaster at all. His term has expired. We are voting to fill the place.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, during the past half hour or 40 minutes I have come over as close as I could to the Democratic side to find out just how the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle handle these matters, because after November 5 I shall want to know how, I suspect. [Laughter.]

Mr. WAGNER. November of what year? [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. I am afraid it will not do the Senator much good, from what I hear.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator from Tennessee has pointed out one cog in the inner mechanics of the procedure that was certainly novel to me. I had never heard of the doctrine that the national committeeman comes into the picture only when there is trouble, as the Senator used the word, between Senators and Representatives with reference to nominees. That was a new touch, a new angle. I am glad the Senator made that clear.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am afraid I did not make it clear, if the Senator understood me in that way.

Mr. DANAHER. That is what I understood.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will probably remember very well a gentleman I have in mind, because he was a very fine and an excellent man. We had in Tennessee a man by the name of J. Will Taylor, who was a Republican national committeeman. Unfortunately, he passed away a year or two ago. He was a Republican from Knoxville, and he was Republican national committeeman. He was the leader of his party in Tennessee, and under the Republican administration he appointed not only every postmaster in Tennessee, but he appointed every other Federal official. That was the system which existed under Republican rule, and, so far as postmasters were concerned, it was continued under the present administration.

Mr. DANAHER. Did he have any Republican Senators to whom he could turn for advice?

Mr. McKELLAR. Occasionally he did. He had one for a while, but I do not think he paid much attention to him, because he himself had the Senator appointed. [Laughter.]

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, without going too far into the inner workings in Tennessee, which, so far as I am concerned, appears as one of the States of the Southland administered very ably, I take it, by the senior Senator from Tennessee and by Mr. Crump——

Mr. McKELLAR. How did the Senator describe the State?

Mr. DANAHER. I said of the Southland. Of course, there is one other angle to this matter, as has been pointed out by the Senator from Nebraska, about which I wish to remark. It is not a case merely of our considering the nomination of Mr. Perkins or of our retaining the incumbent, whose name eludes me. No; the fact remains that it becomes perfectly patent from the statement of the Senator from Nebraska that people in high places have been playing politics with an appointment, and the Senate of the United States is now asked to place its official seal of approval on those tactics and on that practice.

When we undertake to proceed on the theory that we have passed merit acts, that we are administering the law and considering appointees on the basis of merit, it is perfectly apparent that there is another issue here to confront the Senate. In this thought, and with this observation, I rise to call to the attention of the Senate a case which will be found discussed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 26, 1940, page 5084. At that time I introduced all the correspondence I had with reference to a matter in Connecticut, the appointment of the postmaster at Southport.

Mr. President, I did not lay the case simply before the Postmaster General, I submitted all the facts to the White House. I asked right then and there, and directly, since this was a Presidential appointment, whether or not we were to regard merit in the adminstration of the law. The very principle involved in the Fremont, Nebr., postmastership was involved in the Connecticut case.

In 1933 when the Republican incumbent of the post office was ousted and a competitive examination was called for, the only person who passed the examination was a Republican. He was not appointed. A new examination was held the next year, and the only one who passed the examination was a Republican. But a new temporary Democratic appointee was put in then, and his name was not submitted for confirmation because he could not pass the examination. That went on every year. and there were six temporary appointees, until finally in March 1940 they managed to find a Democrat who passed, and this time promptly the name was submitted for confirmation. After 6 long years of struggle and effort to get merit in the post office, when the only man passing the examination year in and year out was the Republican incumbent, this year they dug up a dentist from some place who made a mark of 73, and though the Republican's mark was 86, he did not get the job.

Mr. President, if that is the way the administration of the merit system in the appointment of postmasters is being conducted under present auspices, then I submit there is a principle that has been raised by the Senator from Nebraska to which we should all give heed, and he is entitled to our support on the record he has made in this case.

I ask the Senator from Tennessee a question. Not knowing Mr. J. Will Taylor, and intending no reflection whatever on the conduct of his office as national committeeman in Tennessee, will not the Senator from Tennessee agree that a principle is involved here that is independent in every way of who the nominee is?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. DANAHER. Why not?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is merely a question of who is confirmed at this time. I desire to ask the Senator about the celebrated case in Connecticut. Did the Senator ever bring it up before the appropriate committee? Did he ever file a protest indicating that the man who was appointed was unworthy of the position and should not be appointed, and that he had personal objections to the appointment?

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, the Senator knows very well that I did not represent that the man was unfit, or that he was obnoxious to me, or that I had any personal objection to him. I discussed the matter fully with the chairman of the committee, however, and the RECORD, at the pages to which I referred, is full of the correspondence I had, in which I pointed out the way the merit system was being abused. I submit, Mr. President, that that again is the issue in this particular situation, which the Senator from Nebraska has pointed out.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this debate was conducted yesterday for about two hours and a half, and at the last very few Senators were present, and if the debate is now continued much longer we again shall find very few Senators present.

In response to the outburst of political virtue which we have just heard from the Senator from Connecticut because of some postmastership in his State, I wish to offset that case with a very brief recital of a postmastership which became vacant in the State of Kentucky under President Coolidge. An examination was held, and there was only one Republican who took it, and he made a grade of 54. Of course, that grade was not sufficient to entitle him to fill the office, because he had to have a grade of, I think, 70. Pressure was brought on Washington, and he was finally dug up from a grade of 54 and given a passing grade, and was appointed to the office. I will let that case cancel out the incident referred to in the State of Connecticut, and we may go on now to the disposition of this particular appointment, and I hope we may have a vote on it.

Mr. BURKE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Chavez	Hayden	Reed
Andrews	Clark, Idaho	Herring	Russell
Ashurst	Clark, Mo.	Holt	Schwartz
Austin	Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Shipstead
Barbour	Davis	King	Stewart
Barkley	Ellender	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	George	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Bridges	Gerry	Minton	Townsend
Bulow	Gibson	Murray	Van Nuys
Burke	Gillette	Norris	Wagner
Byrd	Glass	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Byrnes	Green	Overton	Wheeler
Capper	Gurney	Pepper	White
Caraway	Harrison	Radcliffe	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Frank S. Perkins to be postmaster at Fremont, Nebr.?

Mr. BURKE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRNES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], and will vote. I vote "yea."
